We're travelers on the same highway,
The same goal lies before us;
The same sun lights the path we tread—
The same God watches o'er us.

The day is brief, the journey short:
Even now night's shades are falling,
And soon our every word and deed
Will be beyond recalling.

Then why not strive, by loving care,
To ease each other's labor?
Why not reach out a willing hand
And make each man a neighbor?

For, when we sleep the last, long sleep,
Life's feverish journey ended—
When flowers shall bloom above our beds,
And dust with dust is blended—

Of what account will be our caste?
Of what our wealth or station?
Will pride prevent the form's decay,
Or gain the soul's salvation?

Then why not throw aside all strife,
And every base bond sever,
Since love is all that we can take
Into the vast forever?

DANGERS OF THE DANCE.

"To dance or not to dance?" is a question agitating the minds of many young people—some of them young converts. That it is a fashionable and fascinating amusement makes it none the less dangerous. Despite all that may be said about putting it on "a high moral plane," and "keeping it within proper bounds," there is no better advice than that which Puck gives to those contemplating marriage—"Don't."

Perhaps some may be found the more ready to follow this advice now that even at fashionable watering-places and parties, those who can entertain by talking are sought and admired fully as much as those who can best exhibit the effects of their training by the use of their heels. Perhaps, also, the words of those called "Puritanical" may have the more weight now that secular papers, policemen, leaders of fashion and ungodly people speak as earnestly and even more plainly in denouncing this so-called "harmless amusement."

Legislators are not greatly renowned for their piety. And yet some legislatures, believing that not only religion, but even morality, was imperilled by masked balls, have passed laws prohibiting them. The dangers are just the same with the masks removed. The waltz is the same now as when the libertine Byron so mercilessly satirized it.

Can a Christian dance and not lose Christian influence? The most ardent advocates of the dance among the worldly, who see no harm in it for themselves, exhibit a strange inconsistency by sneering at "dancing church-members." The world itself says that Christians cannot dance without losing their claim to its respect and confidence. The dying sinner was never known to send for a frequenter of the ball-room to receive from him spiritual advice and consolation. Every Christian who dances is "spotted" by the world.

Can a Christian dance and not lose piety? Is not the whole spirit and tendency of it worldly? When the best people in the world dance, when we can find a dancing church-member that is worth anything to the church, or one equally noted for piety and dancing, or one that advocates it upon the death-bed, then it will be in order to admit that it comes within the scope of Christian liberty, and is one of those things that is both lawful and expedient.

Can any one dance and maintain purity of thought, heart and morals? Let the question be answered by asking another? Why do people dance? The plea that it is merely for physical exercise, for the cultivation of graceful movements, is untenable, for the reason that these objects could be as easily attained if the sexes danced separately. But who ever heard of such a thing? And even when the sexes are together, it is not long before they tire of the plain old dance—the Virginia reel and "Money Musk"—because they are too tame. They must waltz. They are like the toper who kept asking the bartender if he hadn't something a "leetle stronger." At last, in a fit of desperation, the barman said, "We have some 'Aqua-forties! Haven't you got some aqua-fifties?'"

You think the case too strongly put? Not more so than by a lady who has earned for herself a world-wide reputation in literature: "In the soft floating of the waltz I found a strange pleasure, rather difficult to intelligently describe. The mere anticipation fluttered my pulse, and when my partner approached to claim my promised hand for the dance, I felt my cheeks glow a little sometimes, and I could not look him in the eye with the same frank gaiety as heretofore. But the climax of my confusion was reached when, folded in his warm embrace, and giddy with the whirl, a strange, sweet thrill would shake me from head to foot, leaving me weak and almost powerless, and really obliged to depend for support on the arm which encircled me. If my partner failed, from lack of skill, or ignorance, to arouse these, to me most pleasurable sensations, I did not dance with him the second time. . . . . It was the physical emotions, engendered by the magnetic contact of strong men that I was enamored of, not of the dance, not even of the men themselves. . . . . The waltz became to me, and whomsoever danced with me, one lingering, sweet and purely sensual pleasure, where heart beat against heart, hand was held in hand, and eyes looked burning words which lips dared not speak."

Corroborating this are the statements of the New York Chief of Police and a Roman Catholic bishop, the former declaring that three-fourths, at least, of the abandoned young women of that city were first approached through the round dances by the villains who effected their ruin; and the latter asserting that the confessional of his church reveals the fact that of all Roman Catholic fallen women, nineteen-twentieths trace the beginning of their sad state to the modern dance! It is no wonder that he should characterize the round dance as the "last sigh of expiring modesty," nor that the church in all ages has put the broad seal of condemnation upon it.

It is hardly necessary to mention the physical evils which so often result. Dancing is almost always carried to excess, from early night until the "wee, sma' hours."

> "On with the dance, let joy be unconfined!
> No rest till morn, when youth and beauty meet,
> To chase the glowing hours with flying feet."

Nor is it strange that so many dancers fall into untimely graves, when we remember that for hours they are in heated rooms, from which they emerge, often insufficiently clothed, into the cool, damp air, and retire to beds from which they never rise. To hundreds it has proved the "dance of death," if not the dance of moral destruction.

THE MODERN LITERARY SNEAK.

The greatest danger in literature to-day is not from what can be truthfully called sinful books, says Edward W. Bok, in the Ladies' Home Journal, so much as from what is termed the "suggestive" novel, in which sin is gilded and hinted at, but not openly told. And this is the novel which is working infinite damage to hundreds and thousands of girls and women. Let an author write a novel in which sin is openly portrayed, and the law lays his hand upon him and the publisher who issues it. Besides, such a book is rarely successful, since it cannot find an open market, and sin openly told is always revolting even to the most hardened mind. But it is the "suggestive" novel, which actually tells nothing, yet suggests the most debasing vices. The author knows just how far he can go in his nefarious traffic, and keep on the safe side of the law. With a supreme effort I can command a certain amount of respect for a really debasing novelist, for in showing his true colors, he is like a dangerous shoal which I can avoid. But the "suggestive" novelist is a literary sneak and coward. Like a midnight assassin he pursues his trade in the dark, afraid of the light of day. He will hint at vice, suggest it, and color it; but there is where he stops. Close with him in personal conversation, and he will grin at his literary cowardice and tell you that he means nothing. These are the books which are dangerous, since they rob the vices which they portray of their hideousness and make them attractive. I have heard women call them "clever," "piquant" and "lively." You may dress them in language as you will, you may tell me that the story is "smart" and "snappy," but I tell you, my dear reader, there is only one word which truthfully denominates this kind of books, and that is—filthy.

AN INNOCENT THIEF.

"O Johnny, come down town with me, will you? I've to get some tacks for mother, and she gave me this three-cent piece to spend. See, it's old and thin and little. They don't have three-cent pieces in our mint now; but we can get two jaw-breakers and six marbles for it, all the same."

Dick had leaned over the wall, and given their signal of a long whistle followed directly by two short ones, which had caused Johnny Burt to appear promptly from behind the wood pile.

"Well, all right. I say, let's take the three-cent piece. Where did you say they did not have any now?"

"In the mint."

"Mint?" That grows in our garden, but I never found much of a crop of silver in it," said Johnny, scornfully.

"Pooh!" replied Dick. "Do you mean to say that you don't know what the United States mint is? It is where they make all the dollars and half dollars and gold pieces, and all the money that we use in this country. There is one in Washington, one in Philadelphia, and there's another, but I've forgotten where. Father's been in the mint in Philadelphia; and he says they save the water that the workmen wash their hands in, 'cause there's little teenty-tointy specks of gold on them, and then they strain the water, and when every one has washed their hands there is quite a little pile of golddust, you know."

"My!" said Johnny. "I wish I could wash golddust off my hands." And he passed the piece of money back to Dick.

But there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip;" and the little coin slipped through Dick's fingers. I am sure you can't guess what happened to that little silver piece.

A very large, observant-looking old toad had been sitting in the shadow of the wall, blinking his yellow eyes, and on the watch for any insects that might fly past. He had not been listening to the boys' conversation, and did not know that it was a very indigestible bit of silver that suddenly flashed in the sun; and out went his long tongue, and in went the three-cent bit before one could say "Jack Robinson"—in fact, the boys were too amazed to give any thought to Jack Robinson, or any of the Robinson family.

Johnny gasped, "He didn't, did he?"

"Yes, sir, he did, sir!" said Dick, excitedly. But both boys looked anxiously in the grass to assure themselves that the money was really not there.

"Not a sign of it," said Dicky, seizing the astonished toad, who blinked and shrunk together while Dick prodded and poked him all over. "Oh, the old thief!" and, taking him by the hind legs, he shook him violently; but poor Mr. Toad kept his wide mouth tightly shut. Dicky put him down and put his straw hat over him to keep him from hopping off.

"What'l we do?" he said.

Johnny thought of the jaw-breakers and the marbles, and grew red with rage.

"Ginger!" he said. "I guess I wouldn't be robbed by a warty old toad. I'd kill him, I would." And Johnny pulled from his pocket a new double-bladed jack knife which he had received on his birthday. Dicky looked doubtful.

"No, don't," said he: "you see he didn't do it on purpose. Probably he thought it was a bug. Father says they have to be quick: the minute anything goes by they just have to grab it without stopping to look."

"Well," growled Johnny, "all I know is that's our three-cent piece, and we can't get any candy or anything without it. Give him here; 'twon't take a minute."

Dicky slowly lifted the hat. The toad's jewel-like eyes seemed to him to look at him beseechingly.

"Say, John," he said, "I suppose, probably, he's got a wife and children waiting for him at home; and you see, we're a good deal bigger than he is, and I think it's not fair play for two fellows like us to pitch on a little thing like him. Now, if he was our size, you know, it would be different."

"Bosh!" burst forth John. "Go along and get your tacks. I won't go." And jamming his hat down on his head, he climbed over the wall and disappeared behind the wood-pile, thinking Dick would give in. But Dick picked up his hat slowly, looked reproachfully at the offending toad, and then, struck with a bright idea, called out: "I say, John, we can't get the money, but we can have some fun out of it. Come down town; and afterwards we'll have a regular trial, and have him for the prisoner. You can be the judge, and I'll be the policeman; or, if you had rather, you can be the policeman, and we'll let Mary and Alice play, and then they can be witnesses or the jury. Say, that'll be fun!"

John's head bobbed out from behind the wood-pile. "Why, so it will," he said. "All right, I'll go."

As Dicky went to get a box for the prisoner, his mother met him at the door. She had been sewing at the window, and had overheard the argument. She smiled as she said: "Here's a box, dear; and, after the trial, I should be happy to have the judge, jury, and policeman come in and have some of the ice-cream which Jane is freezing. And here is a verse for you:

"'He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God that loveth us
He made and loveth all.'"

CURIOUS SCENE IN COURT.

A dog was actually tried for his life in a Boston court last week. He was a handsome setter, name of Towser. His master had hired a good lawyer to defend him. The dog was placed in the prisoner's box, and while the crowd of people tittered and the judge smiled, the trial began. A man swore that the prisoner had bitten him, and he wanted him killed according to the law. The man confessed upon cross examination that he had provoked the dog by teasing. Several witnesses testified to the good conduct of the dog. Then the dog was led out to testify for himself. When ordered, he walked on his hind legs, played he was dead, then he shouldered arms, whined in imitation of a song; then he marched up to the desk on his hind legs and shook hands with the judge. The crowd all cheered for the dog, and the judge said, "Towser, you are a peaceable and orderly dog. I give judgment in your behalf and dismiss you, and the man who had you arrested and tried must pay the costs." The people made a great parade with the dog when he came out of the court-room.—Vanguard.

TEMPERANCE.

WHISKY DID IT.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 18, S. M. Fugette, cashier of the South Chattanooga Savings Bank, was shot and killed by his father-in-law, Judge J. A. Warder, who is city attorney of Chattanooga. Judge Warder is shot in two places; one ball penetrated his breast at the right nipple and the other took off the index finger of the left hand. Mrs. Fugette is the only child of Judge Warder and is shot in the right thigh, a very dangerous wound. From the evidence at the coroner's inquest it appears that Judge Warder came home at 1 o'clock in a very drunken condition, and immediately went to Mr. and Mrs. Fugette's room, where the shooting took place as soon as he entered. Mr. and Mrs. Fugette lived with Judge and Mrs. Warder in College street. There were seven shots fired, five by Judge Warder and two by Mr. Fugette. It is said Mrs. Fugette was the first person shot, and Fugette then fell dead, shot through the heart. He was found with a newspaper in one hand and a pistol with two empty chambers in the other. Mrs. Fugette was lying over him with her arms entwining him, piteously crying for some one to save him. Judge Warder staggered to a neighbor's house and is now there in a precarious condition. Mrs. Fugette is also unable to speak and what took place in the room aside from the shooting is not yet known. From evidence before the coroner's jury it appears that Judge Warder frequently came home drunk and abused his wife and daughter, and the women would appeal for protection to Mr. Fugette. Such an affair occurred late Saturday night, and Mr. Fugette quieted his father-in-law.

Mr. and Mrs. Fugette have been married but two years, have been living happy together, and have a 5-months-old baby. Mr. Fugette was a young man of about 20 years of age, popular, and a successful business man. Mrs. Fugette is a very handsome woman. Judge Warder is one of the best-known lawyers of his State. For six years he was United States District Attorney for the Middle District of Tennessee, appointed by President Hayes. He was a brave Union soldier, and is one of the most prominent of Republican politicians in this State. He owns considerable property and has a large lucrative practice in this city. He is a man of the highest culture, of most polished and affable manners. His domestic affairs were always supposed to be of the happiest.

J. B. Gehry, of Reading, Pennsylvania, engineer of a passenger train on the Reading railroad, reports a strange experience which he had shortly after eight o'clock last Wednesday. It was very dark and when he got near Perkiomen Junction he was running slowly, at the same time keeping a sharp lookout for objects ahead. Suddenly the headlight revealed the body of a woman between the tracks ahead of him and two children lying near by. Engineer Gehry whistled down brakes and the locomotive was stopped within a few feet of them. When the train hands got off they were surprised to find another woman and three more children lying near by, all in a stupor, and as unconscious of what was going on about them as if they were dead. Of the children the oldest was ten years and the youngest three months. The crew at first thought that they had been struck by a train, but investigation showed that they were fearfully intoxicated. Being aroused, they stated that they had attended an apple-butter stirring and had drunk too much hard cider. All seven had a narrow escape from being run over and killed. The women were prosperous farmers' wives, and had no idea the cider would affect them. They were taken on board the train and carried to their destination, the next station.—Gospel Banner.

There was a sorry exhibition made of secular papers of supposed high standing in Philadelphia last week. In order to defeat the prohibition amendment distillers and brewers had to raise large sums of money. The funds ran out and the joint committee arranged to borrow $35,000 and odd from Moore and Sinnot, 60 per cent to be paid by the brewers and 40 per cent by the distillers and liquor dealers. The liquor dealers paid their share, but the brewers refused to pay theirs on the ground that their committee had never been authorized to make the loan. There was a suit, but just before the trial was to come off, in order that the details of the corrupt practices employed to defeat the amendment might not be brought out, a compromise was affected by which $16,500 was accepted by the plaintiffs. Of the $20,102 claimed it appears that $19,216.67 was paid to newspapers. The following, among other names and sums, are given: Philadelphia Inquirer, $2,488.52; Catholic Standard, $325; Philadelphia Record, $2,482; Evening Bulletin, $1,250; Evening Star, $225.09; Philadelphia Ledger, $145.30; North American, $2,942.20; Philadelphia Times, $3,516.30; Evening Telegraph, $4,000. Certainly the citizens of Philadelphia ought to be able to estimate rightly, after this, the position any of these papers take on any great moral and social question.—Christian Inquirer.

The closing work of the Woman's Temperance Alliance (non-partisan) was to vote down, after thorough discussion, a resolution in favor of Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition, upon the ground that it had nothing to do with temperance. The W. C. T. U. differs with the Alliance in believing that the opening of the Exposition on Sunday is directly in the interest of the saloons; if it is thus opened, it will be against the protest of every white ribboner in the land.—*Advocate, Watertown, N. News comes from Africa that the Arabs at Khartoum have been holding an indignation meeting, protesting against the Christian nations inundating Africa with their infernal liquor. They also resolved to sell into slavery every one engaged in the traffic.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—First Quarter.—February 8.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The sin of covetousness.—vs. 1-4. Covetousness is the root from which has sprung almost all the sin and evil that curses our world to-day. We should have no dramshops if men were not so covetous of gain. There would be none of the various forms of gambling, or that grasping averice on the part of the wealthy which makes them withhold from the laborer his just share of the profits. Nearly all ths wars of history have been the story of Naboth and his vineyard over again; a weaker neighbor despoiled of his territory by some richer and stronger nation. This is why covetousness is made the subject of a special command in the Decalogue, and why God's Word is full of such pointed and solemn warnings against it. Covetousness does not always mean a wish to possess what belongs to another without giving a fair equivalent, for Ahab was willing to pay Naboth his price. Covetousness is inordinate desire for some material good whatever it may be, and such a desire cherished is enough at last to lead to the grossest sins. The Gospel teaches contentment with our temporal condition, but the opposite as regards our spiritual state. We are to strive after heavenly treasure and "covet earnestly the best gifts." Naboth shows the true spirit of the reformer and martyr. Had he been as temporizing as are many who stand in Christian pulpits to-day, he would never have thus sacrificed his life for a principle. Well may every true-born American, when the saloon, the lodge, or Romanism calls upon him to stifle his convictions of right, say with Naboth, "The Lord forbid it me that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee."

2. The martyrdom of Naboth.—vs. 5-14. Had there been no principle at stake, Naboth would doubtless have been willing to save his life by selling his vineyard. As it was, his brave refusal to do so classes him among the noblest patriots of the old Hebrew times. He must have been also one of the seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, and as such exceedingly obnoxious to the queen and her heathen court. The nature of anti-Christ always shows itself in its bitter hatred of divine institutions, and Jezebel, without doubt bore an intense hatred to those laws of Jehovah on which the Jewish polity was based, for as far as they were regarded, though only here and there by some God-fearing man like Naboth, they stood in the way of her making Israel what she desired—a completely idolatrous nation. She now undertakes a new role; that of a consummate hypocrite. We see the same part played to-day by the saloon, which is glad enough to get a minister to espouse high license, or to garble and twist texts of Scripture into a seeming endorsement of the traffic, little as it cares for either God's Word or his ministers. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, while they reject and ignore Christ, leave no means untried to get a foothold in his churches, and seduce both ministers and laymen to worship at these rival altars. Infidels will exaggerate every failure of Christians in order to pull Christianity into the mire. Iniquity always rejoices in iniquity, just as true holiness always rejoices in the opposite. Jezebel's order to "proclaim a fast" shows how God's own ordinances may be prostituted from their divine uses and made the instruments of the grossest tyranny and oppression. The accusation, even if Naboth had been guilty of the crime charged against him, showed glaring inconsistency on the part of the government completely committed to the worship of Baal. We hear a great deal about the inconsistencies of Christian people, but the worldly and the irreligious are the really inconsistent ones. To live for this world when the one fact impressed on every human soul from the cradle to the grave is, that we must all die, makes of life itself one grand inconsistency. As with our Saviour, two false witnesses were found to swear away the life of this godly man, who was carried outside of the city—another point of resemblance—and stoned. All "in the presence of the people," which shows how low the nation had sunk, that it could calmly witness, and perhaps applaud, this judicial murder of one of its worthiest citizens. A false religion had poisoned all the springs of justice. So the prevalence of the lodge religion in our own land has corrupted the courts till it is well-nigh impossible for one who opposes the system to obtain his just rights. This is the same spirit which killed Naboth carried out in our more enlightened land and age.

3. Ahab's sin finds him out.—vs. 15–18. Ahab was willing enough to enjoy the fruits of Jezebel's crime, thus making himself partaker. Without a word of horror or even regret he goes to take possession of Naboth's vineyard, and meets on the way his Nemesis—Elijah. So for every unrepented sin, every act of wrong to a fellow-being, judgment waits—either in this life or that which is to come.

in person, but official duties and engagements in Iowa prevented.

From the Faculty of Chicago Theological Seminary by Prof. H. M. Scott, secretary:

"I am directed to convey the cordial greetings and good wishes of this Faculty to Dr. Blanchard, and the circle of his family and friends, on such a pleasant occasion. Prof. Willcox has heen appointed to represent our Faculty and convey in person our expressions of esteem and regard."

From Miss F. E. Willard, president of World's and National W. C. T. U.

"Honoring you profoundly for your defense of principles forever to he honored, let me join in the affectionate and grateful congratulations that hrighten your 80th birthday. May it be for you and the great causes you have loved and served always 'better farther on' is the prayer of FRANCES E. WILLARD."

From Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, professor in McCormick Theological Seminary:

"Honor the man who has convictions and who is fearless in their advocacy. To have arched eight decades of years with a life devoted to righteousness, is something to he grateful for and justly proud of. May he wear his crown of glory a good while yet as he walks on in the way of righteousness."

From Dr. G. T. Carpenter, Chancellor Drake University, Iowa:

"Dr. Blanchard may remember my first acquaintance with him, when, in 1858, then a student in Ahingdon College, I called at his home in Galeshurg, to ohtain some aid in preparing for a college dehate on the suhject of Masonry. The cordial reception and ready assistance I then received, has caused me ever since to reckon him among my most admired friends and early henefactors—as one of the men God has blessed, in that through him he hath greatly blessed the world."

From Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, First Congregational Church, Chicago:

"I thank God, and increasingly, for colleges horn of the Book and standing squarely and unflinchingly upon it still. I fear nothing more for our country than secularistic, rationalistic, free-thinking State universities and old time Christian colleges, whose prosperity, like that of Israel of old, has lowered the standard and quality of their piety, and made some of them, I fear, allies of false gods. The Lord preserve Knox and Wheaton from all such calamity by giving them men for leadership like your venerable father, and his namesake, who strengthen every young David's hand in God. With such college presidents to lead and inspire them, our youth will stand fast for righteousness, and the people will be safe. What would not a single score of Samuels, Davids, Jonathans, Nehemiahs and Daniels be worth in Congress today?"

From Rev. Dr. Martin Post, Sterling, Ill.:

"As a minister of the Word, as an educator and reformer, Dr. Jonathan Blanchard will long be remembered and honored. May he live to see his fondest hopes for Wheaton College realized, and to see the flag of our country and the banner of Christ side hy side in happy brotherhood; their colors hlended in the one white light of divine love."

From Rev. Dr. J. E. Roy, secretary American Missionary Association, Chicago:

"Ordained as a prophet to the two generations within the 19th century allotted to his ministry, he could not he content with having had a hand in the one successful reform of the day, hut he must train his fire upon every entrenchment of Satan within reach of his guns; and so the causes of the Sahhath, of temperance, of honest labor, and of opposition to secret, oath-bound organizations, have enlisted his chivalric defense. And when the latter reform comes around to repeat its experience of 1830–35, there will he a plenty of men to garnish the sepulcher of this prophet; even, as now, a multitude are ready in their hearts to say to him, as John Wentworth said to my classmate, the Abolitionist, Charles Haven; 'That's right, young man; stick to it; and by and by we'll all be there and swear that we always were there.' In this relation I call to mind a telling instance of our conscious influence. When our president came to Knox College, our one literary society,—mirabile dictum—was hased upon the secret principle. But soon, without any direct influence of his, so far as I remember, we laid aside our silly secrets and arranged a new society, open to the sun, to the light of every good thing, and the 'Adelphi' of to-day, with its honored history and roll of men effective for good in their generation, is the result of that sunlight."

From Rev. Dr. E. F. Williams, South Congregational Church, Chicago:

"I beg to assure the venerahle ex-President of my respect for him, and for the earnestness with which he has hattled for freedom and for the good of humanity during his whole life."

From Thomas White, Esq., Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"In view of your noble efforts, at the peril of your life, in the prime of early manhood, for the aholition of slavery, and for your life-long struggle for emancipating our country from the thralldom of intemperance in the drinking hahits existing among our people, and from the pernicious influence of Freemasonry and kindred secret societies, so poisonous in their effects upon pure religion and sound morals, united with long and arduous labors in the college education of the young of both sexes, it is highly befitting, for all who regard such services and a life so well spent with esteem and admiration, to unite in celebrating the eightieth anniversary of your birthday."

From Rev. Dr. Hasselquist, president Augustana College:

"My hearty wish and prayer is that the Lord will give you many years more to serve in his cause. We cannot lose any Christian warrior against our enemies, the enemies of Christ and this country,—secretism, saloons and infidelity generally."

From Rev. Dr. R. O. Post, Springfield, Ill.:

"It surely is not a little thing to have stood for the right as he saw it, never counting the cost or caring what it might he. It surely is a great thing to have passed through the great antagonisms as he has, commanding the respect of his opponents, alike for large mental abilities and sterling integrity. There certainly is much of the 'old hero' in his make-up, and much of the heroic in his career."

From A. M. Hansen, LL.D., late president Northern College, Fulton, Ill.:

"I join with multitudes of American people who hope to see you live many years, that you may see the results of the noble efforts of your past life."

From Prof. H. E. Butler, Alma College, Mich.:

"I have not had the pleasure ot a personal acquaintance with Dr. Blanchard, but cannot count myself for that reason a stranger to his work. That has been so prominent that those who have had even a slight acquaintance with the current of passing events, have learned to know him and honor him."

From Rev. M. M. Longley, Bloomington, Ill.:

"Your invitation brings to mind his visit to Oberlin in the forties, and his grand and beautiful address before our Society of Inquiry. God has helped him to do much grand and glorious work, and to strike heavy blows against secretism."

From Rev. R. E. Helms, Mazon, Ill.:

"I have ever looked upon Rev. J. Blanchard as a leader in moral reform when such leadership meant and cost a great deal. May he be able to see much of the fruit of his labor, and may these coming festivities do something to crown him with the honor that should be his."

From Pres. H. Q. Butterfield, Olivet College:

"Your eighty years have been eventful ones. . . . They have seen slavery abolished, and the battle against the saloon set in determined array. They have created a religious activity which is generating many needed reforms, and which promises to clear the moral atmosphere greatly during the next eighty years. All of this you have seen and felt and shared. It is a great privilege to have lived and wrought, as you have, in such a time."

From Rev. G. R. Milton, Elgin, Ill.:

"Please convey to my dear and greatly honored brother my profoundest admiration for his unflinching loyalty to truth and righteousness, and my sincere regret at not being able to he present. May he live many years yet to fight the world, the flesh and the lodge devil."

From George W. Clark, the "Liberty Singer" of the Abolition reform:

"It was in the year 1845, at the city of Cincinnati, on the horders of the then slaveland, now forty-six years ago, at the great Southwestern Anti-slavery Convention held in that city, that I first met and hecame acquainted with your father. He was then a young man in his prime, thirty-four years of age, tall, straight as a gun-harrel; with flashing dark eyes, and hair as black as a raven. He was then pastor of a Presbyterian church in thatcity. That grand anti-slavery gathering which lasted three days and nights in the great tabernacle, was presided over by the Hon. James G. Birney, and such noble men as Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Hon. Samuel Lewis, Hon. Owen Lovejoy, hrother of the martyr Lovejoy, Rev. John Pierpont, Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, Rev. Ichabod Codding and Rev. John G. Fee, were present, giving an interest, a weight, an enthusiasm and a power to its proceedings that can never be forgotten. Rev. J. Blanchard was then well known as an earnest, fearless and outspoken Abolitionist, and his church was the only one in that city thrown open to me in which to sing the radical and thrilling anti-slavery songs of Whittier, Pierpont, Longfellow, Cowper, Charlotte Elizaheth and others. From that day to this I have known your honored father, never as a time-server or trimmer, but as a fearless, aggressive, out-spoken friend and advocate of every just, righteous and humane cause, however unpopular or hated that cause might be. And I know of no man now living in this country who has done more—nay, who has done as much, to hring before the American people and expose to them the un-Christian, unrepuhlican and dangerous character of secret, oath-bound societies."

Among those from whose letters no quotation is made, the following may be mentioned:

Rev. Dr. A. A. Smith, ex-president of Northwestern College; S. P. Bushnell, president First National Bank, Paxton, Ill.; Pres. Edward D. Eaton, Beloit College; A. Hallner, editor of the Mission Friend, Chicago; Hon. S. V. White, Brooklyn; Rev. Drs. F. W. Fisk, G. N. Boardman and G. B. Willcox, Professors in Chicago Theological Seminary; Rev. Dr. S. J. Humphrey, Sec'y Am. Board, Chicago; Pres. Wm. F. King, Cornell College, Iowa; Pres. Wm. M. Brooks, Tabor College, Iowa; Pres. B. M. Blount, Butler University, Ind.; Rev. B. F. Worrell, Glenwood, Ill.; Rev. E. G. Smith, Bible Society Agent for Ill.; Rev. J. D. Wyckoff, and Rev. Wm. Chandler, State Evangelists for Illinois; Rev. H. G. McArthur (a poem), Rockton, Ill.; Thos. Hodge, Esq., Oakdene, Roger's Park, Ill.; E. W. Blatchford, Chicago; Hon. L. W. Lewis, Seymour, Iowa; Rev. J. C. Armstrong, Sup't City Mission Society; Pres. Wm. A. Obenchain, Ogden College, Ky.; Rev. Morton Dexter of the Congregationalist, Boston; Rev. James Tompkins, D.D., Chicago; Timothy Hudson, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Rev. C. C. Foote, Detroit; Pres. James B. Angell, University of Michigan; Mary Allen West, editor of the Union Signal; Prof. J. M. Piper; Rev. C. J. Ryder, Boston.

The Chicago daily press published excellent reports of this anniversary with copious extracts from the life sketch in which they did not seek to avoid mention of the last and greatest work in which our venerable and beloved editor has been engaged. K.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—During the past ten years over 11,000 converts have been gathered in the missionary fields of the Moravian church.

—A chair for study of the English Bible was last year estahlished at Princeton College. At Yale over 150 students of the higher classes elect a course of Bible studies, with two lectures a week.

—That ardent Wesleyan missionary, Rev. Wm. Burgess, at Secunderabad, India, reports that he has baptized 200 natives this year (1890), and expects shortly to announce double that numher.

—Some 200 Hebrew students in the University of Odessa petitioned the Russian government to he allowed to go forward with their studies as Hebrews, and met a refusal. It resulted in their conversion to Christianity!

—Six London societies send out unordained missionaries, not demanding college education. Thus not only are wider doors opening hefore the church in foreign lands, but the gate of entrance for workers is becoming much broader.

—Rev. C. B. Ward, one of our faithful missionaries in India, writes in the Bomhay Watchman that Rev. M. F. Smootz and wife expect to sail early the present month from New York, bound for the Tellugu mission, India. The work there has long been short-handed. and this additional help is most welcome. Bro. Ward sent out January 1 an evangelistic hand, who are to travel back and forth in the Nizam's Dominions, preaching the kingdom, even as the seventy sent out by Christ.

—In the annual report of the American Board the significant event in Asiatic Turkey was the revival, wherehy 538 were added to the church in Aintah, and by its influence no less than 1,000 hopeful conversions occurred within the limits of that one field. The three centers of collegiate and theological training were specially blessed. Only a small number of college graduates, however, enter the theological school, and there is an increasing tendency to come to America to complete their studies and to better their fortunes.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The first actual work on the erection of the necessary buildings for the World's Fair begin Tuesday of this week. The first step will be breaking ground for putting up a temporary building on the Lake Front for the use of those who may be employed in superintending the constructions to be placed on the Lake Front Park for the use of the Exposition.

COUNTRY.

By joint resolution the Legislature of Tennessee Wednesday postponed action on the bill to appropriate $250,000 for an exhibit at the World's Fair in 1893 until the Lodge bill shall have been defeated in Congress. Arkansas and other States propose the same puerile retaliation.

Gov. Hill was elected United States Senator Wednesday by the New York Legislature. He is to succeed Senator Everts. It looks ill for New York to follow a statesman with a shuffling politician.

The first bill introduced in the first Democratic Legislature in Wisconsin for twenty years provides for the repeal of the educational law passed by the last Republican legislative body.

A jury Friday fixed the punishment of James A. Wood, an attendant at Richmond (Ind.) hospital for the insane, for the murder of Jay Blount, an inmate, at twenty-one years in the penitentiary.

The 100th anniversary of the admission of Vermont to the Union was celebrated by a banquet by the Vermont Association at Boston Friday night.

Kentucky lottery concerns are jubilant over a decision rendered by Judge W. L. Jackson in the Circuit court at Louisville on Saturday in the test case of John Mansir, an agent for the lottery company. The judge decided that Mansir is not guilty, and maintained the position of the lottery attorneys. He holds that the act repealing the lottery license is void, and that the tender of money to the State auditor is, in effect, the obtaining of a new license.

It is reported that 1,200 Indians on the Red Lake reservation in the vicinity of Thief River Falls, Minn., have been engaged in ghost dances for the last ten days and have ordered all settlers to leave the country under penalty of death. Farmers in the vicinity of the reservation are badly frightened and have begun to move their families into the towns. Gov. Merriam at St. Paul has received a dispatch from the postmaster at Thief River Falls asking for protection.

The Parting of the Ways.

Wilkins and Watkins were college chums and close friends. They had been hard students and had taken little outdoor exercise. When they shook hands and said good-bye, at the end of their college career, they were in impaired health. Both had dyspepsia, liver troubles and troublesome coughs.

Wilkins had plenty of money, and decided to travel for his health. Watkins was poor. "I must go to work for my living," said he, "but I'll try the remedy that Robinson talks so much about—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

In less than two years, Wilkins came home in his coffin. Watkins, now in the prime of life, is a bank president, rich and respected, and weighs 200 pounds. "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' saved my life at a critical time," he often says. "Oh, if poor Wilkins had only tried it!" For weak lungs, spitting of blood, all lingering coughs, and consumption in its early stages, it is an unequaled remedy.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. FARM NOTES.

OUTLOOK FOR GARDENERS.

When one has discovered which kinds of crops he can best produce, it is important to hold steadily to raising them, and not, on account of fluctuations in the market, to shift from one thing to another from year to year. This is the regular movement, ebb and flow, of the great mass of cultivators, and the result is that some crops are always over-produced or under-produced. The onion is a notable example of this sort. Among fruits the strawberry is constantly subject to this shifting movement. Only the steady cultivator gets any benefit by a short crop, while the mass of growers are nearly always met with a full and low-priced market. Unusual success in any particular crop, by reason of superior local advantages, will often induce many others to undertake similar production, and often with the effect of finding sale with little or no profit at most, or perhaps worse, with an actual loss. Celery growing the past year has been widely extended, and in many cases far beyond the needs of local consumption, leaving heavy stocks to be thrown into the great markets where but little is realized from them. A notable instance among fruits in the Northern States at the present time is grape growing. Certain localities favorable to the production of grapes of fine quality having established a profitable industry after many years of trial and difficulty, now find that their success has encouraged many persons to plant vineyards on grounds with no particular adaptation to them and with the result of producing a large mass of fruit of inferior grade. The result is not that the good fruit brings the best price, but the price of the fruit of poor quality determines that of the whole without distinction. Such is the fact. Some newspaper writers maintain that an over-production of fruit is impossible. We know that it is not impossible, and especially with perishable fruits like the strawberry and the grape. Though the latter under certain conditions can be kept several months, yet these conditions are such that but few vine-growers can command them, and the result is the fruit must be sent forward for sale as it matures, without reference to the state of the market. Thus to-day a large proportion of grape-growers in this State are living meagerly and discounting their returns before their crops are matured. Some parties having vines for sale have led many to plant vines in unsuitable localities, claiming that a crop of grapes can be raised wherever corn can be grown. A gross misstatement, as we all know.

Shall we continue to plant apple orchards? Yes, but not largely, and only in the most suitable locations and of a few of the most profitable varieties. Comparatively little planting of apple trees has been done the past ten years, population has increased, many of the old orchards are ruined and many others are becoming so. In the future more care will be taken of orchards than formerly.—Vick's Magazine for January.

CEREALS OF 1890.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 14.—An estimate prepared by the statisticians of the department of agriculture places the aggregate value of the corn, wheat and oats crops of the United States for 1890 at $1,311,255,615.

The total number of acres planted in corn last year was 71,970,763. The total yield was 1,489,970,000 bushels, valued at $754,434,451. Iowa led the sisterhood of States in corn production, having an acreage of 8,777,299, which yielded 232,439,000 bushels, valued at $95,300,164. Illinois was second, with 7,154,424 acres, yielding 187,446,000 bushels, worth $80,601,741. Missouri followed with 6,796,318 acres, yielding 175,345,000 bushels, worth $77,151,802. Texas was fourth on the list with an acreage of 4,116,281. Indiana came next with 3,604,252 acres, producing 89,025,000 bushels, worth $41,841,761. Kansas and Nebraska were sixth and seventh, respectively, each planting over 3,000,000 acres.

Wheat claimed 36,087,154 acres in 1890, which produced 399,262,000 bushels, worth $334,773,678. The Dakotas captured the wheat pennant with 4,209,482 acres, yielding 40,411,000 bushels valued at $28,287,719. Minnesota grew 38,356,000 bushels on 3,143,917 acres of land and her crop should bring $31,068,187. Indiana was the third wheat State in the Union, with 2,493,605 acres, yielding 27,928,000 bushels, worth $24,576,971. Kansas was fourth, with over 2,000,000 acres, and Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska and Wisconsin followed in the order named with more than 1,000,000 acres of wheat apiece.

Our oats crop in 1890 amounted to 523,621,000 bushels, worth $222,048,486. It took 26,431,369 acres to produce the total. Illinois led the procession in oats, devoting 3,372,451 fertile acres to the production of 70,821,000 bushels, worth $29,006,803. Iowa followed with 2,767,330 acres, yielding 71,397,000 bushels, worth $27,130,903. Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, the Dakotas, Nebraska and Indiana had from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 acres in oats each.

IN BRIEF.

The idea of utilizing electricity for the fertilization of land is not by any means new, but it has been reserved for Spain to inaugurate a use of the electric motor in plowing land. Such a plant has been set up on the property of the Marquis de la Laguna. A water-wheel of about twenty horse-power will be used for the generation of the current, and the plow will be worked at a distance of three miles from the generating dynamo.

The total number of street railways in the United States and Canada is now estimated at about 1,000, with a total length of 8,650 miles, and it is asserted that of these roads 264, or about 25 per cent, with a mileage of 1,753 miles, or about 20 per cent of the total mileage, are operated by electricity. This shows the wonderfully rapid progress of the new motive power. Cable railways have also grown in favor, representing now about 440 miles of line.—Railway Age.

The Drexel estate has bought for $40,000 Rock Hill College, at Woodstock, Md., an old Catholic institution, and will establish a female industrial school for Southern colored children. Miss Drexel, who entered the sisterhood of the Catholic church for the express purpose of devoting herself to the education of Indian and colored children, will, it is understood, make liberal provision for the proposed Industrial School, in addition to the amount subscribed by the Drexel estate.

A quick piece of cable service is reported from Montreal. A cablegram was sent from that city over the Commercial cable to London at 10:27 and at 10:40, just thirteen minutes, a reply was received. The message had been sent from Montreal to Canso, thence to Ireland, and on to London. A transaction was effected on the London Stock Exchange, and the reply was written, sent, and received in the time named. Such phenomenal dispatch appeared so incredible to the sender of the message that for some time he could hardly realize it, and he had to scrutinize his message and the reply thereto carefully before he was convinced of this wonderful achievement.

The swamps of the Bay of Campeachy, which are on a level with the sea, become so completely parched during the heat of summer, that the huntsmen, who lose themselves in the extensive forests with which they are covered, would be in danger of perishing with thirst, were they not provided with living fountains in the wilderness where there are no springs or running water. The trunks of a kind of pine, indigenous to the soil, are covered with a species of fungus, called, from its peculiar form, pine-apples. They resemble a packet of leaves piled one upon the other, and are so full of sap, that, on piercing them with a knife at the base, nearly a pint of clear and wholesome juice immediately distils.—Vick's Magazine for January.

In the year 1816 the European possessions in Africa amounted to 1,179,332 square miles, but so rapidly has the "Dark Continent" been sliced up, lately, that of the total area, estimated at 11,900,000 square miles, only 4,309,594 still belong to the Africans, while 7,590,406 are owned by European powers. According to a French publication, the allotments are as follows:

	Square miles
Portugal	774,993
Spain	210,000
France	2,300,248
Germany	1,035,720
Congo Free State	1,000,000
Italy	369,000
Great Britain	1,909,444

If Egypt and the independent States are excepted, there still remain about 2,500,000 square miles for General Booth.

By a very ingenious and original process, Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., are enabled to extract the essential properties of the materials used in the preparation of their famous "Ayer's Sarsaparilla," thus securing a purity and strength that can be obtained in no other way.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

CALL

FOR A

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ON THE

SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

We, the undersigned, believe that there is no good which can be accomplished, in times of peace and in a free land, by secret societies which cannot be secured more easily and perfectly by open organization.

We believe that much of the time and money so greatly needed by the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ is wasted in the large and unprofitable expenses of secret orders.

We believe that the union of Christians with men of the world in oath-bound organizations is forbidden by the Word of God and always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter such societies.

We believe that some oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country.

We therefore invite all those who sympathize with us in the views above expressed, to meet in "A Conference of Christians," to be held under the auspices of "The National Christian Association," in the city of Chicago ..... to consult and pray respecting the best method of saving men, the churches, and our land from the injurious influence of such societies.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

snow fell, loading trees until they were shorn of their branches or fell prostrate with their trunks snapped off as though they had been mere twigs; clinging to the electric wires until they gave way under the pressure and broke in all directions, or until the poles, breaking under the enormous weight, fell across streets and ainst houses, blocking all traffic on the former and threatening destruction to the latter and their inmates. At daylight the work of destruction had begun and it continued until the snowfall ceased at noon, when the wrecks of trees and telegraph poles were to be found on every street.

The storm made of Jersey City a buried town. There is not an effective wire to be found, either telegraph, telephone, fire-alarm or electric light. Save for submarine cables to New York and Brooklyn the isolation is complete. The same is true of Hoboken. Fallen poles and tangled wires cumber the streets in many places.

FOREIGN.

News has been received at London from Valparaiso that a conference between President Balmacada and the Chilean deputies has taken place. Meanwhile the insurgents continue to gain strength and confidence. The workmen employed in the factories in and about Valparaiso are joining the insurgent forces in large numbers. The tide of sympathy seems to be with the rebels. Regular railroad traffic is at a standstill, and in many places the insurgents have temporarily stopped the running of trains by tearing the rails up. In some places they have also destroyed the railroad embankments. Business is in a state of paralysis. The government has declared the large towns to be in a state of siege.

A terrible disaster has occurred at the Hibernia colliery at Gelsenkirchen. Forty men were killed and thirty were severely injured by an explosiou which took place in one of the pits.

Four thousand unemployed workmen at Hamburg have resolved to send a petition to the senate asking that landlords be prohibited on next quarter day from evicting tenants unable to pay their rents, and also asking that loans of 50 marks be advanced to the destitute workmen from the state funds and that poor children in the public schools be supplied with a hot meal daily. A committee formed to help relieve the distress of the unemployed distributed 10,460 free meals daily.

During a conversation in the lobby of the House of Commons Mr. Parnell declared his intention to assert his authority as the leader of the nationalist party and to engage actively in work during the present session of parliament.

It is estimated that 50,000 persons have been thrown out of employment by the severe weather, and that the total loss to France in wages, the stoppage of trade, and the blighting of crops will probably reach 50,000,000 francs. Figaro makes an appeal to the churches to keep their doors open all night, and to take other steps necessary to transform them into shelters for the homeless poor of Paris. All the hospitals and infirmaries are crowded. The administration has placed the dead wood in the State forests at the disposal of the poor.

A dispatch from Vienna says the cold has considerably abated, but in the eastern provinces of Austria the temperature is still very low. Four persons have been frozen to death in Bohemia. A Galican peasant was attacked by a pack of wolves, which had been rendered desperate by hunger. The man had a terrible struggle with the starving animals, but was soon overcome and devoured.

The popular verdict is that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the best in the world. 25 cents.

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

'It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Two Bottles Cured Her. 6

CARROLL, IA., July, 1889.

I was suffering 10 years from shocks in my head, so much so, that at times I didn't expect to recover. I took medicines from many doctors, but didn't get any relief until I took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, the second dose relieved me and 2 bottles cured me. S. W. PECK.

Vanished.

Rev H. McDONOUGH of Lowell, Mass., vouches for the following: There is a case of which I have knowledge, and I am very glad to avail myself of the opportunity to make known the good derived from the use of Koenig's Nerve Tonic. The subject is a young lady, who had been suffering from early childhood. On my recommendation she procured your remedy, and for three months, the fits of epilepsy by which she has been so long subject have ceased entirely.

Dr. Gordon of Boston has concluded his lecture course in the Bible Institute of which Mr. Moody is president. His addresses have been reported daily in the papers, and have been regularly attended. The last two addresses on the Holy Spirit were meetings of remarkable power and interest. Dr. Gordon's work has not been confined to the Institute lectures. He has spoken frequently in the churches of the city, and Mrs. Gordon, who has been with him here, has also been eminently useful in missionary and other religious meetings. Both have come to be as much esteemed in private circles as honored for their public efforts.

Mrs. Margaret L. Shepherd, the Boston lady who is preaching a popular crusade against Romanism in this city, devoted an evening last week to Past Grand Master Cregierism. She had a full house, and spoke her mind freely respecting the management of Chicago in aiding to make the public schools of the city nests of demoralization and Romanism. She was so severe upon the P. G. M. of Illinois Freemasons for this part of his maladministration that only one person in the audience was bold enough to manifest his intention to vote for his re-election.

Last Wednesday night there was another side of our Masonic mayor presented to the disgusted citizens of Chicago. His son and son-in-law, confidants and henchmen of the father, were participating in a prize fight in which two brutes were put up to fight each other down. These young fellows fixed the police so there should be no interference with their unlawful sport; and thus another evidence of the power of Masonry was given in such bloody colors that none can avoid it. A few days later another crowd who had no Masonic protection were all arrested because they set two chickens a-fighting. Past Grand Masters are altogether too pious to allow cock-fighting!

The sudden death of Secretary Windom was a national loss. He was surely oue of the pillars of the Harrison Cabinet, and probably no one member, not even Mr. Wanamaker, was so widely respected and deserved the public confidence. He has so long been known as a careful and conservative manager, and a man whose sympathies and efforts were in favor of the best interests of all the people that his presence in the advisory body of the government offset in some degree the apprehension of many who had little confidence in the life-long politicians who were called to act in the same body. He was a Christian man, aud, we believe, thoroughly in favor of temperance, though seriously mistaken in his selection of the means to promote that cause. His successor must soon be named, and among those suggested for the important position are Mr. McKinley of Ohio, and Mr. New of Indiana.

Oberlin College has for some time been without a president, since the resignation of Dr. James H. Fairchild. The effort of the trustees to secure Pres. Merrill E. Gates of Rutgers College, and his final acceptance of the offer of Amherst are a part of college history. Notwithstanding, Oberlin has prospered and reports 1,707 students during the last year, with 1,300 in present attendance. Last Wednesday the trustees held their annual meeting and unanimously adopted the equally unanimous recommendation of the faculty, making Prof. William Gay Ballantine president of the institution. President Ballantine is a few months younger than Pres. Gates, both being born in 1848. He graduated at Marietta in 1868 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1872, studied afterward in the University of Leipsic, was professor of natural sciences in Ripon College from 1874 to '76, was then for two years professor in Greek in the University of Indiana at Bloomington, and in 1878 was called to Oberlin to assist Professor Morgan as professor of Greek and Hebrew Exegesis. This position he held for two years, when that work was divided, and he was elected professor of Old Testameut language and literature, which chair he has held to the present time. President Ballantine has taken a high rank as a practical teacher. He was made doctor of divinity by his alma mater in 1887. Since 1884 he has been one of the editors of the "Bibliotheca Sacra," and has contributed many scholarly articles to its pages. His breadth of culture brings him into sympathy with all departments of the college, and his election means its development in every direction. He is also a man of convictions, and of firmness in maintaining them. As we have understood, his remarks in the First Church maintaining the rule of that church excluding members of the secret lodges, led to the popular address of Prof. King at the request of the faculty, about a year ago.

Four or five years ago the Chicago council passed an ordinance forbidding parades on the public streets without license from the police department. The Salvation Army, not being a secret lodge or a Romanist order, failed of the license and were arrested, but carried their case to the Supreme Court, which has just decided that the ordinance is void and that citizens have constitutional right, in pursuing their own business, to march through the streets in procession, provided they keep the peace and do not materially interfere with traffic. Such being the case, the City Council has no power to prohibit parades altogether, nor has it any power to vest in the Superintendent of Police an arbitrary authority to determine who shall parade and who shall not. The honorable judges are probably seldom seen in the congested streets of Chicago, so their decision is slightly out of date. But it may have the good effect to arouse the business men of the city to demand that the streets which are barely adequate for even the transaction of business, be kept free from all parades whatever on ordinary days. The Journal puts the case very fairly, thus: "It is in fact an anachronism to allow the processions of secret societies and uuiformed orders which have of late considered themselves entitled whenever they please to stop the traffic of the busiest streets, sometimes for hours together. Parades may be proper enough on holidays, such as the Fourth of July, and thirtieth of May. Private citizens are not expected to have any urgent business to transact on such days. But it ought to be recognized that the streets are needed and must be devoted on business days and in business hours to the needs of business." But under the condemned ordinance, since the police are, as a rule, under the thumb of one secret society or another, lodge parades have never any difficulty in getting a permit whenever they want it.

"How can Satan cast out Satan?" was the argument of our Lord to the Pharisees (Mark 3: 23) to prove that the devil does not willingly destroy his own work; but at the same time the wicked is God's sword (Ps. 17: 13) for punishing wickedness. The case of the secret labor unions and the local beer brewers of Pittsburgh may be of this kind. The secret unions have issued a circular which is regarded as a threat to all saloon-keepers who expect to apply for a license. It lists all the union brewers in one place and the non-union in another, and commands that the one be patronized, the other boycotted, otherwise the disobedient party may find his expectation of a permit from a license court cut off. The local brewers on the other hand are gathering evidence to bring suit against the lodges. A real war between the two would be a blessing to the world at large. But there is generally too strong a Masonic friendship between them to allow their anger to come to serious blows.

THE MATTER WITH KANSAS.

BY REV. T. C. MOFFATT.

Kansas has been prominent before the public eye for a good many years, and for quite a variety of reasons. From the items we see in Eastern newspapers concerning destitution in western Kansas the State seems still to be attracting considerable attention. Nearly all the things that are said of Kansas are true respecting some section, large or small, of the State, for we must remember that it is 400 miles long and 200 wide, and has quite a variety of soil and climate. The western portion, while it has a good soil has such an uncertain rainfall as to make general farming apparently impossible, at least with the old staple crops, such as corn, oats, wheat, etc.

Crop failures occur all over the State, but the present condition is due more than anything else to wrong business theories. We are suffering the effects of an era of financial recklessness in almost every quarter. There is only here and there a man who was not taken off his feet in the general scramble to get rich by "booming," that is running in debt.

One notable exception has recently come to my knowledge. A young man and his wife had between them two hundred acres of land. They kept out of debt and worked faithfully. The corn crop of 1889 was a prodigious one. Most farmers were obliged to sell it off at once at a very low price to get money to pay the interest on their debts. This young man had no debts and he was "caught" by the crop failure of 1890 with over 7,000 bushels of 50-cent corn still on hand. The result was the purchase of another two-hundred-acre farm.

It would seem as if people might see the moral standing out in such a narrative, but they will not. It is the tariff, or the railroads, or the laws, or the monetary system that is to blame. The people will not even patronize the infant industries that have tried to establish themselves in Kansas, but still buy the old brands of goods from the East and thus destroy their own home market.

But no matter how bad the financial depression gets to be, some men have plenty of money for whisky, tobacco and lodge dues. The vices and follies have got to be attended to even if the rest of the man starves. Indeed, it sometimes seems to me that the worse the affairs of men get the more they rush into those things that are hurtful or wasteful. They seem to lose their moral grip with their financial. I am not sure but we shall yet lose our prohibitory legislation on this very account. There is a general spirit of unrest and lawlessness.

At the last term of the district court in this county there was not a single conviction; the jury either acquitted or hung in every case, although convictions were imperatively needed not only in liquor cases, but in others.

We are also badly afflicted with politics. The hope of men seems to lie in this direction rather than in a faithful, wise, and persistent individual effort. There seems to be needed a crusade of good, sound, old-fashioned financial Gospel, such as Paul preached. It is needed among the farmers, the merchants, the mechanics and even among the churches. May God give the preachers grace to face this as well as all the other lions in the way. The public is a great blind giant who needs to be led.

THE MASONIC COVENANT.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

The Masonic lodge is held together by obligations. Without the horrible oaths, backed by the awful penalties of death, the authority of the order would be only a rope of sand. Destroy the obligation and you free the Masonic slave. The man who does not consider his lodge oath sacred, is not a Mason.

"Where were you first prepared to be made a Mason?" "In my heart."

"If any applicant is not prepared in his heart he will never make a Mason, no matter what dramatic exercises he may be put through, or what discipline exerted upon him."—Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, pp. 243, 244.

The covenants of Masonry are more than the obligations.

"The obligations of Masonry are, in the sense of the definition, covenants, and so are the constitution and by-laws."—Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, p. 76.

The complete covenant, then, is the oath that binds the novitiate to the constitution and by-laws, and the constitution and by-laws to which he is bound.

"What is it makes you a Mason?" "My obligation."

"It is 'the obligation which makes the Mason;' and the difference between one Mason and another consists simply in the fact that one keeps his obligations better than another."—Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, p. 218.

Every patriotic American is interested to know what is the nature and form of the Masonic obligation. Is it simply a promise or affirmation, or is it construed to be an oath with all the binding force of the same? Turning again to our friendly dictionary we learn this:

"An affirmation is not equivalent to an oath in Masonry, however it may be in common law, and is not legitimate in the working of the lodge."—Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, p. 13.

Now, does Freemasonry consider and teach its devotees to consider the so-called Masonic oath equal or superior in binding force to the civil oath?

"The covenant is irrevocable. Even though a Mason may be suspended or expelled; though he may withdraw from the lodge, journey into countries where Masons cannot be found, or become a subject of despotic governments that persecute, or a communicant of bigoted churches that denounce Masonry, he cannot cast off or nullify his Masonic covenant. No law of the land can affect it—no anathema of the church weaken it. It is irrevocable."—Webb's Freemasons' Monitor, p. 240.

Freemasonry is the most despotic, tyrannical and anti-republican system ever invented.

"The expulsion of a Mason, while it deprives him of every privilege with which his Masonic attachment endowed him, leaves him bound by every part and point of his Masonic covenant. Of this no act of his own or of the lodge can ever divest him. The tie of Masonry is perpetual."—Webb's Freemasons' Monitor, p. 257.

The Mason is tied hand and foot, soul and body to this arch-enemy of God and man.

"No method is provided for in the Masonic jurisprudence of modern times by which a member can withdraw himself from the authority of the society. He may resign his membership in the lodge, deny its government, even repudiate the ties by which he is bound to the institution, yet that authority remains unbroken. A 'due summons' from the lodge or Grand Lodge is obligatory upon him; and should he refuse obedience he will be disgracefully expelled from the society with public marks of ignominy that can never be erased."—Morris' Dictionary of Freemasonry, p. 29.

The American people will provide a way. Joseph Cook, in his lecture, went straight to the core of the whole business. These obligations are illegal, unlawful, treasonable, and the remedy is to punish all who impose or invoke them. Nothing short of this will protect society and government.

"A Grand Lodge is invested with power and authority over all the craft within its jurisdiction. It is the Supreme Court of Appeal in all Masonic cases, and to its decrees unlimited obedience must be paid by every lodge and every Mason situated within its control. The government of Grand Lodges is, therefore, completely despotic. While a Grand Lodge exists, its edicts must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges."—Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, p. 185.

A Masonic case is one in which either a Mason or Masonry is interested.

"The first duty of the reader of this synopsis is to obey the edicts of his Grand Lodge. Right or wrong, his very existence as a Mason hangs upon obedience to the powers immediately set above him. Failure in this must infallibly bring down expulsion, which, as a Masonic death, ends all. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy, or disobedience."—Webb's Freemasons' Monitor, p. 196.

All other crimes are pardonable except disobedience to Masonic authority, which every member is sworn to obey without question.

But we are encroaching on your space and must stop short, simply stating that all who wish these excerpts connectedly with other damaging evidences, should have our "Masonic Government," which we for the present mail to any address for only two cents.

TRUE AND FALSE SERVICE AND WORSHIP.

BY REV. CYRUS SMITH.

The idea of Mr. Ronayne, that to expose the "Christless religion of Freemasonry" is to advertise it and cause lodgery to grow, because the world is so corrupt that it has a relish for that kind of religion, is in a degree correct; and he who has no pleasure in, but detests evil when exposed to his view, may know it is one token of his favor with the God of Israel. It has been claimed that not more than ten per cent of the professed followers of Christ are real Christians. If that be so [It cannot be so proved.—ED.] then ninety per cent of the church have a "Christless religion," whether they belong to the lodge or not.

Dr. Walker in his "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation" says, "Man is a worshiping animal." To worship is that part of man's nature over which the will has complete control. The will always decides in true or false worship which master to serve. All humanity worship right or wrong. All worship the god they serve. There is but little intelligence needed in the service of false worship, and no wisdom. Consequently very many "worship they know not what." God in Christ, and Satan, the god of this world, are worshiped. We are either serving one or the other of those masters. "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are." But "no man can serve two masters." There is but one way to serve the true God. Christ is "the way." There are very many ways to worship and serve Satan. The benefits of serving the right master will never have an end. To serve the wrong master has the opposite effect.

Man in his unregenerate state, serving the wrong master, is on the side of the devil's church, the lodge, though he is seldom aware of the fact. And to show him that the religion of the lodge is Christless has not the best and right effect except that he becomes converted to God and serves him only and continually. Those who think they are in a regenerated state, but serve the wrong master, compromise with the lodge even in an anti-secrecy church. Bishop Weaver in 1862 said of secret societies, "Their religion in the main is a Christless religion." He now opposes those whom he caused by his teaching to shun a "Christless religion." He no longer opposes that which he taught us to, and is no longer in harmony with his own teaching in regard to what he called a "Christless religion." But he will not confess that he has any relish for "Christless religion." Nor can any one be induced to make such a confession. But all human beings love the religion of the master they serve, whether they be saint or sinner. Men's spiritual taste becomes depraved or they never could relish a compromise with that which they know to be a "Christless religion." But let the workers continue to let their light shine on the religion of secret societies. And show, too, the beauties and benefits of the religion of Jesus Christ, that people may choose intelligently "whom they will serve." "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

De Kalb, Iowa.

TWO OATHS.

Not long since I had a conversation with one of our county officials who has taken seven degrees in Freemasonry. Speaking of the charge that Masonry binds its members to conceal crime and protect criminals, he gave an instance from his own official life to prove this charge untrue.

He said that not long since he arrested a burglar who had taken many degrees in Freemasonry and who appealed to him as a Mason for release. These appeals he refused to heed, and when the case was called in court, the prosecuting attorney being ill, it so chanced that the case was conducted for the State by two Freemasons, one a Knight Templar, another a master of the lodge. He said that the prosecution was most ably managed and the burglar sent to State's prison for twenty years. This was to him a proof that Freemasonry does not require its members to assist one another in cases where law is violated.

Very unfortunately the premises are not sufficient to support the conclusion. No one so far as we are informed has ever claimed that all Freemasons would protect their Masonic brethren who had violated the laws of the land. That there are many Freemasons who would entirely refuse to be partners in any such perversion of justice we very well know. The trouble is, however, that there are men of another stamp in Masonry and that the oaths which are interpreted in one way by honorable officials are interpreted in another by those of a different stamp. The obligations bind Masons to recognize the signs of Masons, and to aid and assist them in cases of difficulty without specifying what the difficulty may be.

Albert Pike, one of the most eminent Freemasons in the United States, declared in a public address that Northern Freemasons who refused to recognize the signs of Southern Masons during the war made themselves infamous. If Masons are bound to assist one another when engaged in war against the nation it is a small thing that they help one another when simply burglarizing a house. Treason is far worse than burglary, yet all who have studied the case know that Freemasonry excludes no man from its privileges because he is a traitor; and these oaths which protect treason and traitors are made and interpreted by a certain class of officials to call for the protection of criminals of all sorts who ask for aid under the sign of distress.

As was recently said there are very many honorable men connected with the secret orders who value their citizenship and their civil oaths far more highly than their oaths to the secret lodge. We are glad to know that this is true, but the oath is against the civic oath, and no man can tell which will be observed until after the test. No man's conscience should be compelled to decide whether to keep the oath to the State or the oath to the lodge. Men who take the one ought not to take the other. The recent case in Salt Lake City denying citizenship to men who had sworn the secret oaths of Mormonism is correct principle, and universally applied as it should be, would destroy the citizenship to all persons who swear allegiance to secret powers.—Wheaton College Record.

"THE GRANGE AND COUNTRY CHURCHES."

ADDRESS DELIVERED AT BOSTON IN PARK STREET CHURCH, DEC. 17, 1890—2:30 P. M., BY L. W. FRINK, PASTOR.

In some parts of the country, both are found. We have granges, and we have churches. What relation do they sustain to each other? What is the character of each? When these questions are answered correctly, we are able to mark the tendency, both of the local grange and of the local country church.

Many of the country churches are independent bodies, having no bishops or popes. They hire their own pastors, and together, "pastor and people" labor for Jesus Christ, in the salvation of souls. They give no account of their stewardship to other churches or powers, but deal directly with the Great Head of the church. They are, in polity, congregational.

It is not so with the grange. That is a national institution, having State and subordinate granges under its control. Consequently the local grange is only an inconsiderate part of great whole.

I wish, at the outset, to be understood as speaking not of individuals, but of institutions; and while I address you upon the subject of "The Grange and Country Churches," what I shall say will be seen to apply especially to those in these institutions who profess to follow and obey Christ. If there are any in the grange who are not belivers in Christ, and who are resolved not to accept him as their Saviour, with such I have no controversy, no issue. My message to-day to all such would be, "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." If any person in the grange or in any other society will not love Christ, and serve him, but is bent upon having a good time, to such I would say, get all the pleasure out of these things possible, for you will be wretched enough when you pass from this world —wretched forever. I love Christ, and I love his people. My loyalty to him, as well as my love for them, compels me to speak. It is in the kindest spirit that I deliver the message, and I would that in such a spirit it might be received.

If I have a just conception of the nature of the Christian life, and a correct apprehension of the Scriptures bearing upon Christian duties, Christians are to be "the light of the world." They are in the world, but they are not, or should not be, of it. They mingle with worldly men and women, as Christ's ambassadors. With them Christ is all in all. All they have, and are, they hold for him and his service.

To Christian people, then, I say, any institution or society that cannot bear, or will not tolerate, candid investigation, is not worthy of your support. [Voice: "That is so."] But, are there not many in the grange that are good Christian people? And if they declare that the institution is all right, are they not to be believed? If I could speak the truth, without offending any of this class,—or indeed any other class, I should be most happy to do so; but the truth must be spoken. ["Yes."] It is a moral necessity, from which there is no release save in the discharge of the duty. When Christian people in the grange tell me that there is no evil in the grange, but all is good, I give them credit for being sincere; but because they say so, I have no proof that such is indeed the case. So a faithful Romanist, or Jesuit, or Mormon might say, and think he was telling the truth. So the slaveholders of our country said years ago, of the institution of slavery.

To such deceived persons shall we tell their wrong and say repent? Must John the Baptist tell Herod the will of God concerning his relations with Herodias? So, it would seem, from the sacred narrative, and for his fidelity, he won the grand testimonial from Christ, "Of those born of women there hath not risen a greater."

Whether Christian people can belong to the grange and belong to the church, without suffering loss spiritually, is not perhaps quite clear to many adherents to both institutions. Some, it may be, think there is no cnoflict between these institutions. In regard to this, let me say, no Christian can have two sets of opinions, two creeds or modes of worship that are radically different, without being a great loser; ["That's so, brother"] for as an eye that looks not straight and full at its object sees nothing as it is, so a mind or heart divided between heaven and earth is all dark. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Christianity permits no compromise of its principles or doctrines with any religion. It is not A religion but THE religion. ["Amen."] It demands of all its adherents that they should "honor the Son even as they honor the Father."

Ostensibly, the grange is for a laudable purpose. The Worcester Daily Spy this morning represents the Massachusetts State lecturer, Geo. C. Howard, as having said yesterday at the session of the State grange in that city, "While the educational advantages of the grange do not take the place of public schools, it aims to supplement the schools. A great many of the farmers' boys leave school at an early age, and for them the advantages of the grange are great. Stop thought and progress ceases."

The conclusion is perfectly logical that any institution that calls together young people, that draws them out of themselves, that awakens them from mental idleness and quickens their capacity for thought, must be of value to any community in which it exists. A part of this work the saloons right here in the city of Boston perform. They call the young people together, and I know of nothing that draws them out of themselves so effectually. [Laughter.]

The same paper reports the State master, N. B. Douglass, as having said at yesterday's session, "The grange should appropriate money to build up the order and keep pace with the rival organizations. The plan of co-operative buying has not proved satisfactory." In that city this afternoon, while we are gathered here, those grangers are to work the third degree in full form, and to-night the sixth degree will be conferred. Such is the supplemental work of the public schools. Is it praiseworthy?

In opening a subordinate grange, the overseer says:

"By command of the worthy master, I proclaim this grange opened in ample form for promoting the welfare of our country and of mankind, and for advancing the interests, elevating the characters, and increasing the influence of all patrons of husbandry, by properly transacting our business and by exemplifying our principles in faith, in hope, and in charity with fidelity."

But in reality, the grange rejects the supreme authority of the Bible, and yet it proposes the same ultimate end as the doctrines of Christianity, viz., the sanctification and salvation of the soul. In being initiated the candidates are told:

"The road you have travelled is familiar and easy; but the one you are now entering is full of obstacles, rough and uneven, environed with dangers, and leads you know not where."

Having crossed the field, filled with obstacles, etc., the master of the grange, among other things, says:

"We are constantly passing (blindfold) over obstacles in the field of life, confidently believing that God will ultimately bring us into the broad and pleasant fields of paradise."

The scope of this declaration appears, when it is remembered that no barrier exists against infidels joining the grange,—no belief in A Supreme Being, as in several other orders, being required. But grangers tell me that their organization is not a religious order! If not, why should they find it needful to have a religious manual, with a funeral ceremony provided for the chaplain's use? Judged by its own language, I say that its religion is a false religion. It rejects the supreme authority of the Bible which forbids Christians yoking themselves with unbelievers, 2 Cor. 6: 14–18. Hence for Christians to unite with the grange, involves fellowship with unbelievers. Such fellowship is sinful. ["Hear, hear."] The grange obligation even cannot be taken without sinning, as Lev. 5: 4, 5 and 17, as well as the reference to Paul's writings, most clearly shows.

Sometimes, as an excuse or pretext for joining the grange, I have been told, "The members of this grange are nearly all church members,"—to which I have replied, "Yes, and over in the next town they may be nearly all infidels." This local grange is only a part of the whole. All pay tribute to the national treasury. Sinning ignorantly, one's guilt is lessened; sinning after light comes, one sins without excuse. If he remains in such a course, he sins wilfully. This unequal yoking may seem of small importance, since the application of the ceremony of initiation is said to be "as gentle as that of the silken thread that binds a wreath of flowers," although it holds its members as with a "band of iron;" but it involves a great principle, nevertheless.

When the grange master tells the candidate that the grange obligation will not conflict with a Christian's "moral, social, religious or civil duties," if that grange master happens to be an unbeliever, I would like to ask, what does he know of a Christian's religious duties? Even if he is a Christian who makes the statement, that is the opinion of somebody else, and not of the candidate; the testimony of another conscience rather than the testimony of his own.

Just before closing, the grange master says:

"Brothers and sisters, as we are again to separate and mingle with the world, let us not forget the precepts of our order. . . . . Keeping ourselves unspotted from the world."

From this it would seem that worldlings cease to be of the world, as soon as they become grangers. In the ritual, it is to be said there are some pretty word pictures; but not a little of its theology is decidedly unscriptural, and therefore false.

Among the "precepts" of the order which its members are requested not to forget, I find such as the following, viz.:

"In no occupation does a man's daily labor bring him in such close companionship with the great Creator, as in the cultivation of the soil."

"Let us fertilize our minds with the virtues of love and truth and charity that never fail to add vigor and happiness to life, so that at the harvest, the ripened grain may meet our Heavenly Father's approval and be garnered in the paradise above."

"Allow no returning spring to pass without planting one fruit-tree and one vine, hoping thereby that your labor will help hasten the advent of that glorious time when every one may sit under his own vine and fruit-tree, and every heart be made glad by the yield thereof."

"The fields of our labor are ever white unto harvest, and in them, he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal."

"This it is to love the country and to make it not the home of the person only, but of the soul.".

"Brothers, you have labored diligently and I say to you, 'Well done, good and faithful servants.'" "Sisters, having made full proof of your ministry," "be kind to one another."....."Weave for yourself garlands of noble deeds that shall adorn your life on earth, and be crowns of rejoicing in immortality." "Be careful then to engraft those truths which shall be a guide and teacher when your voice shall be silent and you have passed to another and a better world." "And now, my sisters, that all may extend to you the 'right hand of fellowship,' I declare a recess for interchange of greetings and courtesies."

The installing officers says of the grange teachings:

"These teachings are the loftiest that man can seek." "There is no calling more elevating to the mind than agriculture, when viewed as presented in our order." "We believe there is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labor."

"And now, patrons, cherishing in our hearts every kind feeling towards all other orders and associations which seek to promote human welfare, let us strive with them, working hand in hand for the good of our fellow-beings."

I believe the Mormon's secret society and the Clan-na-Gael's both claimed to be for the promotion of human welfare. So are many others ready to assume such distinction; but "by their fruits ye shall know them."

The seventh degree in the grange organization (of which members of the national grange who have served one year may be a part) has charge of the secret work of the order, and "shall be a court of impeachment of all officers of the national grange." The national grange has the power to "frame, amend, or repeal laws;" and whatever laws it may frame, to those laws, all State and subordinate granges must conform.

"The ritual adopted by the national grange shall be used in all subordinate granges, and any desired alteration in the same must be submitted to, and receive the sanction of, the national grange."

But I am told by grange advocates that the grange is different from what is was a year ago; that the ritual has been changed, and that those who used to know about the grange, now "know nothing." But according to this law concerning the ritual, it seems to be not sueh an easy task in a few months to revolutionize the workings of the order. It is true that an important change has been made in grange tactics of late; for at the twenty-fourth annual session of the national grange, at Atlanta, Ga., November, 1890, it was declared that "Juvenile granges may now be established under the jurisdiction of the subordinate granges, admitting children from eight to fourteen years of age; admission, fifteen cents; dues, five cents a quarter." The significance of such a decision, and its importance to "the welfare of our country and of mankind," may well be pondered by those parents who see no harm in permitting their children to be trained in a course of which the parents themselves are denied knowledge, unless they will join the order.

Moreover, in all the working of the four degrees, which are wrought out in subordinate granges, the name Jesus Christ is not mentioned. The only place used in the ritual is in the funeral service at the grave, where it is mentioned twice. Thus we see that while the grange has its prayers and ceremonies, yet in the light of the law relating to the ritual Christ is practically denied. He is not honored by name, nor given equal honor with the "Almighty Father." If, therefore, in the grange prayers the "Father" is not approached in the name of Jesus, may we not justly ask, "To whom do grangers pray?" Jesus himself has said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

In view of all this testimony, what shall—what must the conclusion be concerning the relation of the grange and country churches?

Unless it be universalist churches, the relation is not helpful, since the theology of the grange manual is clearly universalistic. Not only from the teachings of the manual of the grange, but also from the experiences of professing Christians in the grange, the conclusion is unavoidable that the grange destroys the spirituality of its members; it robs professing Christians of their love for the meetings and work of the churches, and thereby robs the churches of workers, of members and of money. Yea, it perverts the Christian conscience so that the individual seems to be unable to distinguish between TRUTH and error;—these fruits, to say nothing of the sensitiveness which it breeds, the cliques it produces, and the self-satisfaction kindled and fostered in the hearts of worldlings so that it is almost impossible for the churches to reach them with the Gospel of Christ,—these are enough to condemn it as unworthy of Christian patronage or support. ["True, brother."] Because of these things, I say, the grange is a curse to the country, and a stumbling-block to sinners in coming to Christ and to his church. The church to be attractive for sinners must be Christ-like; but towards Christ-likeness, grange membership does not tend. Indeed, I know of no Christian in the grange or in any other secret organization who has received the baptism of the Holy Spirit; but a number who have received such a blessing have told me that they had to leave the lodge; the two did not go together. [Applause.]

All about us we can behold too many specimens of this false religion; one severed from the atonement of Christ, one of good works alone, by which men hope to get to heaven, or the grangers' paradise. Too much does the church walk with the world, so that it is difficult to distinguish the worldling from the Christian; the litter of the serpent from the brood of the dove. Said Jesus, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

It is my desire that every professing Christian may be separated from the world, separated unto Christ, emptied of self and sin, that the Holy Spirit may fill the heart, and the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ may be enjoyed, "giving no offence in anything, that the ministry be not blamed," and not unto self, but unto Christ Jesus "that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen." [Applause.]

THE GREATEST SIN.—A young man being in deep distress of mind, applied to Dr. Goodwin for advice and consolation. After he had laid before him the long and black list of sins that troubled his conscience, the doctor reminded him that there was one blacker still, which he had not named. "What can that be, sir?" he despondingly asked. "The sin," replied the doctor, "I refer to is that of refusing to believe in Christ Jesus as the Saviour." The simple words banished the anxious one's guilty fears.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A fairy-like scene —A W. C. T. U. president on athletic sports in college.— The endowment orders in politics.— The laws changed to benefit liquor-dealers.—Municipal suffrage for women.

Our old-fashioned winter is treating us to many fairy-like spectacles—from the ice-storm of one or two weeks ago, when every elm and wayside shrub looked as if they had been suddenly transplanted out of the enchanted gardens around some Alladin's palace, to the more delicate and visionary beauty of a morning like this, when all the trees to the tiniest twig are covered with a mantle of new-fallen snow. We seem to walk in an unreal world, where, as in dreams, even the most commonplace objects take on strange and fantastic forms. But presto! the sun comes out, and the snowy robe of Mother Earth grows white and dazzling as the garments of those who walk the streets of the New Jerusalem. Surely if one small planet like ours contains such wonderful variety and extremes of beauty, what will the whole universe with its systems of worlds, countless as the drops of dew that gem the grass on a summer morning, have to show us when we are given the freedom of our Father's house, and can roam through all its chambers at will?

A W. C. T. U. president commenting the other day on the craze for base ball and other kindred sports in our colleges, and the untold mischief to the student's morals, of which they are the prolific source, said she thought it a bad sign as well as a grievous evil under the sun that in our institutions of learning, athletics should so largely take the lead of *mental*ics—an opinion in which I heartily coincide. But isn't it a little queer that we have to coin a word to express what we mean when we refer to pure exercise of mind as distinguished from those of the body? Even in the wonderful old Greek tongue I believe there is no word exactly correspondent in the realm of mind to what athletics is in the physical; and yet the ancients were wiser in some things than we moderns. They knew they could not get a splendid animal, and a soul cultivated to the highest degree, united in the same individual; and they did not attempt it. All the energy and enthusiasm, the time and animal force which a student expends in physical training, is so much taken from a higher set of faculties, and he can no more hope to excel in both than he could be at once an Edison and a John L. Sullivan. An account of a base ball match like the one which culminated in such disgraceful, drunken vandalism at Harvard, will take up whole columns in the daily press; but whoever heard of Harvard or Yale contesting the palm of victory with each other in some philosophic or literary debate, and growing wild, and the general public with them, over the result?

It is a little odd, by the way, that the perpetrators of these foolish and criminal acts have either never been discovered, or being the sons of wealthy parents, have been shielded from public disgrace by a conspiracy of silence on the part of the faculty. The question naturally arises, why college students may do with impunity things that would put anybody else in States prison, and whether college secret societies haven't a good deal to do with this shielding of offenders. It is certain that these deeds of lawlessness prevail in exact ratio to these secret combinations among the students, and the amount of encouragement which they receive from their respective faculties.

Florence in Hampshire county is suffering from the craze for entering endowment orders to such an extent that one or two of her leading merchants have been obliged to close out their business, owing to the depression which it has caused the local trade. The Iron Hall has 196 members, all contributing about $25 each a year; the sisterhood of the Iron Hall has 100 members, the People's Five-Year Benefit order 269, while the Fraternal Circle, Commercial Endowment, Progressive Benefit, and others show a similar proportion of membership and assessments. Now let any one with a mathematical turn of mind figure up the aggregate sum which the members of all these orders in the one small town of Florence pay into their several treasuries, and he will be appalled at the amount. No wonder that business cannot flourish in the vampire clutches of the endowment orders, for so far as sucking the life-blood out of legitimate trade is concerned they are even worse than the saloon, for unlike that they take the money of the sober and industrious instead of the vicious and improvident classes. "The effect on the town", says the Springfield Republican, "is very much what the effect would be of a yearly investment of thousands of dollars by citizens in the Louisiana lottery wheel at New Orleans."

These societies are not generally looked upon in the light of political organizations; but the system of organized secrecy, even when the secrecy is in infinitesimal doses, is sure to invite political wire-pullers. We have a case to the point in the Farmers' Alliance; and now the endowment orders are said to be silently but vigorously helping forward Speaker Barrett in his boom for the Massachnsetts governorship. The following from the Traveler is one of the straws which show why our legislators are so favorable to these orders, while they must know how they are swindling the dear people whose interests they profess to have so much at heart: "Brockton is said to be solid for Barrett. It is a great city for endowment societies, and they claim to be a power in the primary meetings when they set themselves to work." Thus by manipulating the primaries, they cannot only secure nominations favorable to their interest, but can defeat the election of every candidate who incurs their displeasure, whatever his talents or integrity. Considering their immense membership, and the unscrupulous character of their leaders, no one can doubt the "power" of these orders to intimidate and control.

Boston liquor-dealers have already secured one change in the law for their express benefit, and are eagerly hoping for "more to follow." At special city elections they can now keep open, except in those wards where the election is held.

Once more the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union has petitioned the Legislature for municipal suffrage for women. Nobody expects, and they themselves least of all, that they will get it; but with a heroic perseverance for which future generations will honor them they continue to ply with arguments the deaf ears of our law-givers. I have often wondered if the latter see the humorous side to this question, as it was well expressed by a certain wealthy lady in the city, who said that though she was a real estate owner, and her four daughters are young women of more than average intelligence, yet the only person in her household who has a voice in the administration of national and municipal affairs is Cato, their colored butler! Of course the liquor men as well as their high-license sympathizers may be trusted to fight municipal suffrage for women to the last ditch; but it seems to me a pity that Mr. Dunning, the new editor of the Congregationalist, when interviewed lately on the subject, should express himself as having no opinion about it. Surely the editor of a great religious paper ought to have opinions on all important matters that affect the weal of church and state. This unfortunate habit of never leading public opinion, but always lagging a little way behind it, is what has prevented the Congregationalist from taking its true place as a moulder of current thought.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

A young man wanted to get from a philosopher an argument for the immortality of the soul. "Sir," was the reply, "what have you done to deserve it?" A man may know the exact altitude of all the holy hills of Palestine; he may have sailed with guide-book to Lake Gennesaret; he may have bowed at the Holy Tomb; he may have climbed Olivet and Sinai's hoary peak—but if that man cannot forgive an enemy, or master his temner, or control his appetites, we throw him and Mount Sinai into the Red Sea as worse than useless, for all his knowledge has not helped pay a debt. The fact is, men are fearfully hard on one another. You want cash or collateral. You want deeds, not intentions. You want a man who lives holy, not a man who has read Jeremy Taylor on "Holy Living." You want a man who fought Xerxes, not a man who has read in Plutarch about the Greeks who fought him. Everywhere and in all things it is the doer who wins and is commended. Success succeeds. The man who uses five talents well gets other five; and the man who has but one, and does not use it, is stripped of even that one. That is the way of the world—and of God, too, when it comes to rewarding. Then let us be doers of the Word, not hearers.—Rev. John R. Paxton.

REFORM NEWS.

SOUTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA MEETINGS.

McALEVY'S FORT,
Huntingdon Co., Pa., Jan. 26, '91.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am on higher ground than when I last wrote. The Psalmist exclaimed, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." Again, "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even for ever." I have come over the mountains and here nestled in the valley I find some of God's people. As the towering mountains protect from destructive storms, so does our Heavenly Father those who put their trust in him. What a blessed thought to the one who feels his weakness as compared with the giant forces of evil at work!

I found Bro. Aiken, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, Airville, had planned a series of meetings for his people, and at his request I remained for two services. There was a good attendance at each, and I judge a good spiritual interest prevailed. Bro. A. and several of this congregation are readers of the Cynosure, and of course up to the times on the secrecy question. He kindly volunteered to try and arrange for a series of lectures, which it is thought could be given to better advantage later.

Learning that the Stone Valley U. P. congregation had not been able to secure preaching for some weeks, and it being thought that such service as I could render would be acceptable, I made my way to this place before the Sabbath. I stopped a short time at York and found Bro. Chalfant well, and full of plans for the furtherance of the causes nearest his heart, of which ours is not the least.

At Harrisburg I had the pleasure of meeting the members of Big Spring presbytery of the United Presbyterian church. A called meeting of this presbytery was held to consider the resignation of Rev. J. B. Work, pastor of the McCoysville charge. Bro. Work has been appointed to succeed Rev. McDowell as principal of the U. P., Norfolk, Va., mission school. The congregations that this brother has served for three years past were very reluctant to part with their pastor; but as the call to this new field seemed to be from the Lord, the presbytery complied with his request. He will commence work in his new field about Feb. 1.

Bro. John White's face smiled a welcome to me as usual at Steelton. No matter how adverse are earthly circumstances he knows that "joy which passeth understanding." As the steel works in which he labors are only running half their usual time, which means to the men half pay, it would be but natural that he should have felt his own needs great. The joy with which he slipped a five-dollar gold piece into my hand for our work is only known to those who make personal sacrifice for the Lord's cause. Many words of approval and some subscriptions to the Cynosure were received while at Steelton.

An army of men, women and children crowded the streets of Harrisburg inauguration day to do honor to the newly-elected governor. Eternity alone can reveal the sorrows and woes caused by the drunks of that day. The saloons were all open. Many were intoxicated before noon. As I took the 12:10 train for Mexico I cannot report the closing scenes of this great gathering. At Mexico, I am assured there will be an opening for lectures later. Communion service and special meetings made them inopportune at present.

As I expected, my service was most welcome to friends here. I spoke Sabbath morning and evening to good congregations and have an appointment to lecture this evening. Two lectures given here last year served as an introduction, so I feel quite at home. There is no little stir, I am told, among the secretists. One man in Ennisville, I am told, wishes to discuss the merits of the Golden Eagles with me. As I know but little about this bird, I can perhaps learn something from this gentleman, and have promised a friend if an arrangement can be made for a discussion of profit, I will remain another evening to attend it.

TUESDAY, Jan. 27.—The lecture of last evening was well attended. Many secretists, I am told, were present. A good collection showed the interest of friends. Time and space do not permit mention of the many personal kindnesses received; suffice it to say that I shall carry many pleasant recollections of this visit to Stone Valley. The Golden Eagle man backed out when I told him I would discuss the merits of his society if he chose to meet in public discussion, as he had suggested.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MOUNTAIN WORK IN KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky.

There is much to encourage faithful labor among the mountain people. Not that they are all saints, or are likely to be, but all are willing to listen without gainsaying to the simple truths of God's Word. I have recently made a number of visits to Jackson and Rockcastle counties, and though it involved great labor and fatigue, I felt abundantly rewarded in the good that seemed to be accomplished. This has been my only reward, for the people here felt too poor to contribute of their means.

Last Saturday and Sabbath I was at Pine Grove. The ride was very fatiguing as the roads were exceedingly bad, but I met good and attentive congregations, to whom I preached three times. This little church had their house of worship burned last summer. It was the best school-house in the county, and had been known as Pine Grove Academy. They had also been aided in their school work by the American Missionary Association. When that aid was withdrawn and their house burned, they were much cast down. But they have put up a new building on the old foundations, and during the past month have held a series of meetings with the result of seven or eight additions to the church. They have also called one of their number to be their pastor, and will rally around him. Another brother has, within a few months, developed a considerable capacity to preach, and goes out to destitute communities. Though his education consists in little more than a capacity to read and write, he is a diligent student of the Bible, and will do good to the people among whom he labors. I have undertaken to solicit some books for this brother, James Rose, and for their pastor, Jos. Lunsford. Are there not some ministerial brethren who can spare some books from their libraries, and who will send them to me at Berea?

Lest it shall be thought that there is no special work to do in that region, I would say that our congregation on Sabbath was somewhat annoyed by several men and boys who were drunk. Two men, under cover of a United States government license, were selling whisky, and some more were becoming a terror to the people. No licenses are granted in Jackson county, but the people seemed too much terrorized to punish these violators of the law.

I may add that the winter term of Berea College is unusually full, and everything in reference to it is prosperous.

LODGE OATHS.

ARCADE, N. Y.

"Let us hear from all the Cynosure readers who have an opinion about Masonic oaths."

I hardly know whether I may be counted, properly, among those thus invited. For, being in the sixty-eighth year of my life in Christ, I have, as a natural and legitimate sequence, long since passed out of the dimly-lighted chamber of opinion, having received a "shock of enlightenment," from the Word and Spirit of God, into the chamber of positive knowledge, in regard to this matter. Believing fully, as I do, in the declaration of the world's Saviour, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life, "I have followed him, and have in my own case experienced the fulfillment of the negative and the positive declarations given and therefore there is no such darkness of my mental or my spiritual vision, in regard to "Masonic oaths," as that I am left in the twilight of barely an "opinion" in regard to their character.

In the light of the world's luminary they are shown to be silly, degrading, wicked and horribly blasphemous. Freemasonry pure and unmixed, does not acknowledge the God of the Bible, for it very emphatically ignores and denies Him of whom the Bible declares that, "whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father." Masonry has a god, but that God has no Saviour but itself. The Bible speaks of "the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine." It is probable that Masonry's god is one of these, judging from the fact that many Masons turn with a keen zest from "labor to refreshment." The oaths may be consistent with the choice of such a god.

It is well to spread out before the gaze of the world such depravity as is revealed in the taking of them, but such revelation must not be relied upon as a converting force. The name of Jesus the Christ is the ONLY power to save from the wiles of the devil, be they Masonry, rum, voters who place in power defenders of saloons, denominational or sect schism in the family of Christ, or any other diabolism.

R. W. LYMAN.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You ask for opinions touching Masonic oaths. I freely give you mine. I can only regard them as being, both in spirit and letter, at war with the plain teachings of God's Word, and directly against the interests and claims of our holy religion, and in every sense damageing to the cause of our Divine Redeemer in the world. How professedly good men can assume them has long been mysterious to me; and it grows none the less so with my advancing years. They feel and see religion very differently from me. I do not want to stand in their shoes in time or eternity.

GRACE CROWNS THE WORK.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 26, 1891.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Tennyson has celebrated in verse the "Knights of the Round Table," a special order of good King Arthur. Only the fittest were allowed in it. Those who distinguished themselves on the field of battle and in the tournament were accepted. But Arthur could not make his brave knights virtuous; and he found at last that he had nursed a nest of scorpions. Nothing but the grace of God can change the human heart and make the man worthy, upright and true. A reform that does not recognize this fact must fail. In physical geography a "water-shed" is the dividing ridge from which the water flows both ways. The entrance of the Holy Spirit into the human heart is the "water-shed" of human destiny. Without that life our being flows backward and downward until it empties into the lake of fire. With that Spirit our lives flow onward and upward until they empty into the crystal sea.

Sabbath morning I preached in Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, Covington, Ky., Rev. W. H. Neel, pastor. They have some 450 members, 170 being added in the two years of Bro. Neel's pastorate. Sabbath reform was well received by the people. At 3 P. M. I preached in the Work House. There are more prisoners there now than at our last visit. There are bright, well-educated men among them. The more part are low down. Some of them when brought there are filthy to excess and covered with vermin. They are taken through the bath, barbered, and dressed in clean clothes; and then it takes constant watching and urging to make them wash and change their garments. Such men, lost to all honor and self-respect, come there frequently. And the warden assured me that they would not wash from the time they were released until sent back again. Sin has made terrible havoc of men.

While speaking there a temperance meeting was being held in St. Paul M. E. church, Bishop Walden presiding. Dr. Morris expressed the belief that more women drink in Cincinnati than men. The saloon-keepers recognize this feature of their trade, and so they have "Entrance for Ladies" at every saloon. The Work House has its share of female inmates. As one looks into their faces we cannot help thinking of the words of Tennyson, "A fallen woman is the worst of men."

In our reform work we reach all we can. We know it is only a minority, but that is all that is necessary. D'Aubigne remarks, "When a great revolution is to be effected in the bosom of a people (who have the Reformation particularly in view), God instructs the minority by the Holy Scriptures, and the majority by the dispensations of the divine government."

J. M. FOSTER.

A GIDEON'S BAND.

CRANDON, WIS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—President Harrison's proclamation is a grand one. He invites all nations to unite with ours at Chicago, Ill., in 1893, from the first day of May to the last Thursday of October of the same year, by representatives to present such exhibits to the World's Columbian Exposition as will fully illustrate their resources and industries, with their progress and civilization.

Now this is a wise movement for the children of this world. Shall they continue to be wiser than the children of light? Luke 16: 8. God forbid that this state of things should continue any longer. Hence a new proclamation from the Creator of all worlds, to that class of his people who may be found in this and all other nations of this earth who are willing and would be glad to take their places, as did Gideon's three hundred, in a band to follow God only during this important six months at the WORLD'S FAIR. As there can be in the band but three hundred at one and the same time, should God send along the true and the tried by the thousand all will find work by the hour, the day, or the week, according to the numbers on hand; no one of this class to be left out. Hence Gideon's true band can write me at any time.

All who write me, in order to be answered in full, must make plain to me as to why they are called to this particular work. As God alone will run this department of the Exposition, as in Gideon's case, God is to give all the orders. The vaunting and fearful classes God cannot admit. All of the Lord's papers in the known world are invited to copy. All the papers which insert the above will please send me a copy of their paper, so I may know how far and how fast this notice is spreading.

By reading seven verses of the 50th Psalm, all may see this is the mighty God's arrangement. As men from the rising of the sun, unto the going down thereof, will assemble to see the beautiful and the wonderful; as our God gathers his saints from all nations unto himself, and proves to the whole world that they are one; then must all admit that "out of Zion beauty in its perfection shines." This alone will pay Chicago, in that it is worth more to them than the $10,000,000 and the whole world, one hundred-fold more than all their expenses!

Hence let God's band, as in Gideon's day, come to the front and be on time. R. SMITH.

PHYSICIAN, HEAL THYSELF.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Jan. 19, '91.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Evangelist Geo. L. Barker, a revivalist of considerable local reputation, has just closed a two-weeks' service of protracted meetings in the Trinity M. E. church of this city, and departed to other fields of labor. Quite a number have professed conversion and united with the church on probation as a result of his labors here, while the church edifice was crowded to its utmost seating capacity nearly every night in the week and at both services on the Sabbath, indicating the ability of the evangelist to catch and interest the public ear.

One or two incidents, however, connected with this evangelist's labors in our city, both this and the preceding winter, have, we are sorry to say, manifested a weakness, as we think, which we were more sorry to observe. During his labors in our city last winter he took the liberty to announce publicly in the church where he was conducting his revival services, that he was a member of the society of Golden Eagle (one of the recent offshoots of organized secretism), and that by special request of the local "nest" (as we suppose the local branches of the order must be called) he would on a given date preach them a special sermon in the name of the order or society; which appointment he doubtless filled.

There is a young man residing in this city who, standing upon the platform of the N. C. A., regarding the evils of organized secretism, and being well aware of Mr. Barker's attitude toward such societies, as exemplified in the above cited incident, took the liberty, on Mr. Barker's return to this city this winter, of sending him some anti-secret tracts through the postoffice, hoping to thereby at least call his attention to the fact that the propriety of Christians belonging to such clandestine associations had at least been called in question by some of the greatest and best men whose names have ever graced the pages of American history and the profession of the Christian ministry.

Well, that same evening the evangelist remarked in the public service that he had been receiving some anonymous letters, and that among them was one containing four tracts deploring the evils of secret societies. (This was all that the envelope contained.) He said that he supposed that it was the purpose of the sender to intimate that he should not belong to secret societies, intimating that whoever he, the sender, was, he was a coward because he did not enclose his name (when there was no personal message sent). He then proceeded to say that he should join all the secret societies he wanted to, adding that the one who sent the tracts was no Christian anyhow, whoever he was.

The young man who sent the tracts had no idea of being adjudged a coward for failing to furnish his name when he had sent no personal message, and being not in the least ashamed or afraid to confess to having sent the tracts, much less of the Christian sentiments they contained, immediately sat down and wrote the reverend gentleman an open, free and frank letter, in which he "claimed the honor" of having sent the tracts, and sending him also two or three more containing the sentiments of D. L. Moody, Geo. F. Pentecost, Dr. Howard Crosby and Nathaniel Colver. Granting him the legal right to join any secret society he chose, the Clan-na-Gael and Mormon Endowment House not excepted, he yet expressed a sincere doubt as to his moral right to form any such unholy alliances. The young man also informed the evangelist that he was endeavoring to lead a Christian life, and that he was a member of the church where he (Mr. Barker) was holding his revival meetings. The evangelist has not been heard from further on the question, and the probabilities are that he never will be, i. e., by the young man.

How can these professed Christian ministers maintain such an attitude toward these "works of darkness," while even the chief official organ of their church, the New York Christian Advocate, speaks out unmistakably in the Sept. 25th, 1890, number on the question of Christian ministers desecrating the sanctity of God's house by preaching set sermons to such societies!

God hasten the chariot wheels of right and reform. In the language of Hon. J. R. Lowell:

"I honor the man who is willing to sink
Half his present repute for the freedom to think.
And when he has thought, be his muse strong or weak,
Will risk t'other half for the freedom to speak."

DEMPSTER TOWER.

PITH AND POINT.

ONE CRAZE AFTER ANOTHER.

A few years ago I thought that anti-secrecy was gaining ground here. I started a anti-secret library and induced a number to take the Cynosure. But the G. A. R. seemed to sweep the reform sentiment away. The last year or two there has been more freedom in talking about secret societies, but now the Alliance is the popular thing. But whether the farmers can hold their own against the old and trained secretists of the old parties, remains to be seen. I would love to see the day when Christ's teaching alone is followed by his professed followers.—W. D. C.

AN OCTOGENARIAN.

I have taken the paper almost from the first and have taken a great interest in reading it. I have been diligent in getting others to read the paper, and to obtain new subscribers, and to distribute tracts. I can only distribute them this winter by putting them into letters, as my health is very poor. I have passed my eighty years in life. I want to read the Cynosure as long as I am able.—(Dea.) EBENEZER SMITH, Strafford, N. H.

THE LINOTYPE.—THE LATE MISSIONARY BROWN.

Can you tell me anything about the Linotype? Something was said about it in the Cynosure of Aug. 1st 1890, and I have seen nothing more about it. What is it? I began taking an anti-slavery paper published at Chicago, and called the "Christian Contributor." It was consolidated with another paper and afterwards removed to the State of New York. The name of the editor and the city or town is gone from my memory. But it became the organ of the American Baptist Free Mission Society, and was edited by Nathan Brown (a returned missionary), and was called the American Baptist. I continued to take it till Elder Brown went to Japan, and its name changed to the Baptist Weekly. As soon as I found a copy of the Christian Cynosure I subscribed for it, and have taken it ever since. Elder Brown attended a Free Mission mass meeting held in Bedford, Ohio, where I lived; he came to our house and stayed all night. I corresponded with him since we came to Nebraska City. He had some city lots here which I looked after for him.—HARRIS JOHNSON.

The Linotype is a machine which sets up a line of matrices in which is cast a line of type, and doing this continuously it produces lines of type, ready for the press. It is much more successful than the old forms of type-setting machines.

THE LODGE AND SECTARIANISM.

In an article in the last Literary Digest, there is one point that we do well to consider, i. e., that the divisions of Protestantism are the occasion of the rise and growth of Freemasonry. The remedy for Masonry and all its legitimate and illegitimate off-spring is, an active, united and aggressive Christianity. So long as denominationalism is the prevailing influence among Protestants, there never will be a candid and ample discussion of the lodge system. The pulpits and newspapers that represent the sects, cannot afford to enter into a discussion of this question. To do so will be to imperil their denominational interests. The bulwark of slavery was sectarian divisions; so it is to the lodge system.—H. H. HINMAN.

SHARPER POINTS.

I have received three copies of your splendid paper. I am pastor of the colored Baptist church of this place, and like the paper very much indeed.—(Rev.) C. H. CAREY, Prescott, Ark.

I am one alone for the reform here, and have taken the Cynosure ever since it started. I don't want the paper to stop as long as it stands for truth and righteousness.—C. O. RUSSELL.

I have taken the Cynosure since before the Chicago fire, and have tried to enlarge its circulation, with a little success. I consider it a first-class paper, and when I have renewed, have always sent other names along.—T. KINGSNORTH, Sonoma, Mich.

May God bless and hold you up and assist you to cry aloud and spare not. I do, and always have since my conversion, like to see people take the stand that Paul took when he said, "For me to live is Christ, to die is gain." Once more I say, God bless you for Jesus' sake. —(Rev.) A. ALVERSON.

LITERATURE.

In this age of cyclopedias and dictionaries the enterprising New York publishers, Funk & Wagnalls, have undertaken a great enterprise; nothing less than the publication of the "Standard Dictionary of the English language." This title may seem to border on presumption, but a comparison of its pages with "the best" completed work of the kind is very favorable to the claim of the publishers. In some important points this dictionary differs widely from the plans of others: (1) The "locating" of the verifying quotations; that is, the giving in each instance not only the name of the author, but also the name of the book and the number of the page where the quotation can be found; to thus "locate" 50,000 quotations is of itself a herculean task. (2) The use, in the pronunciation of words, of the Scientific Alphabet, adopted by the American Philological Association. (3) The placing of the etomology after the definition. (4) The placing of the most important current definition first, and the obsolescent and obsolete meanings last, that is, the substitution of the order of usage for the Historic Order usually followed in dictionaries. (5) In the case of disputed pronunciation the giving of the pronunciations preferred by other dictionaries. (5) The giving of 50,000 vocabulary words more than are to be found in any other single volume dictionary in England or America. No new word is admitted to a vocabulary place, unless it has been passed upon by the able men in charge of this department, namely, Julius H. Seelye of Amherst College, Edward S. Sheldon of Harvard University, Edward Everett Hale, Charles A. Dana, and Howard Crosby. (7) The indication by the use of upper and lower case initial letters, as to whether words in the vocabulary are to be written as proper names or common names, etc., etc. The publishers announce a special discount to advance subscribers, and a still further reduction to subscribers to the Voice, Missionary Review or Homiletic Review.

Scribner's Magazine for February contains a variety of rich illustrations. Edward L. Wilson—author of "In Scripture Lands" and well known for many years as an enthusiastic and adventurous photographer—records in "Mount Washington in Winter" the incidents and beauties and hardships of five notable ascents of that peak. The illustrations reproduce some of the most wonderful views of snow in the White Mountains. The narrative has the real charm or stirring adventures, with the added merit of thorough appreciation of beauty and grandeur in nature. In "About Africa," J. Scott Keltie takes the African Exhibition in London as a text for a review of fifty years of African exploration—from Livingstone to Stanley. In brief compass he presents a clear and entertaining account of each explorer's part in enlarging the area of known country in the Dark Continent. A series of maps graphically illustrates this, and there are portraits of Livingstone, Hannington, Burton, Speke, Grant, Du Chaillu, Baker, Johnston, Cameron, and Wissmann. Mr. Keltie states succinctly many of the great African problems which are waiting to be solved. Sir Edwin Arnold's third "Japonica" paper continues the subject of Japanese people, with special reference to their habits in dining, and other domestic customs. "A Box of Autographs" is Richard Henry Stoddard's account of some of his unique treasures, with fac-similes of manuscripts of Addison, Burns, Mrs. Browning, Campbell, Scott, Thackeray, and other worthies.

Music-loving girls and those with vocal aspirations, will find a rich treat in The Ladies' Home Journal for February, in which Emma C. Thursby, Campanini, Madame Albani, Clara Louise Kellogg, Maud Powell and Albert Parsons have crisp and practical articles on voice-training, piano-playing and music and vocalics generally. There is many a help and hint in the words of these great artists, who make room further on in the number for Sister Rose Gertrude's first printed article on "My Work Among the Lepers," in which the young heroine of the leper settlement of Molokai tells the true reasons why she renounced her work among the stricken lepers. Edward Bellamy follows his original nationalistic ideas in an article on "Woman in the Year 2,000," which will certainly be entertaining to thousands of women, since the picture is a bright and sparkling one. George W. Cable begins a series of papers on "How to Teach the Bible."

In the February Arena, Camille Flammarion, probably the most eminent European astronomer, writes at length on "New Discoveries on Mars." His paper is accompanied with a full-page geographical map of this wonderful star, as prepared by Flammarion and other leading astronomers. It also contains two small maps illustrating strange changes that have recently taken place on one portion of Mars. The distinguished Frenchman's paper in the short compass of sixteen pages gives the busy reader the important astronomical discoveries of recent years in a nutshell.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1891.—No lover of a fine plant or garden can afford to be without a copy. It is an elegant book of over 100 pages 8¼x10½ inches, beautiful colored illustrations of sunrise amaranthus, hydrangea and potatoes. Instructions for planting, cultivating, etc. Full list of everything that can be desired in the way of vegetable and flower seeds, plants, bulbs, etc. Also full particulars regarding the cash prizes of $1,000 and $200. The novelties have been tested and found worthy of cultivation. It costs nothing, because the 10 cents you send for it can be deducted from the first order forwarded. Secure a copy of James Vick Seedsman, Rochester, N. Y.

Skakespeare will please excuse us if we modify him thus: Thrice is he clad who hath his system strengthened with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and he but naked, though arrayed in furs, whose blood is poor or with disease corrupted. An incomparable medicine!

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure Bilious and Nervous Ills.

THE LOVER'S LAMENT.

Your face is like a drooping flower,
Sweetheart!
I see you fading, hour by hour,
Sweetheart!
Your rounded outlines waste away,
In vain I weep, in vain I pray,
What power Death's cruel hand can stay?
Sweetheart! Sweetheart!
Why, nothing but Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

The hand of time deals lightly with a woman in perfect health. But all functional derangements and disorders peculiar to women leave their mark. You needn't have them. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to your rescue as no other medicine can. It cures them.

For periodical pains, prolapsus and other displacements, bearing-down sensations, and all "female complaints" and "weaknesses," it is a positive remedy.

The "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful, restorative tonic and nervine, imparting strength to the whole system in general, and to the uterine organs and appendages in particular. It keeps years from your face and figure—but adds years to your life. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case. If it doesn't, your money is returned.

World's Dispensary Medical Association, Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Well! Well!"

That's the way you feel after one or two of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have done their work. You feel well, instead of bilious and constipated; your sick headache, dizziness and indigestion are gone. It's done mildly and easily, too. You don't have to feel worse before you feel better. That is the trouble with the huge, old-fashioned pill. These are small, sugar-coated, easiest to take. One little Pellet's a laxative, three to four are cathartic. They regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels—quickly, but thoroughly. They're the cheapest pill, sold by druggists, because you only pay for the good you get.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1891.

PROF. SWING ON THE NEXT CONFERENCE.

Prof. David Swing publishes our committee's call for an anti-secret conference, with comments, in the Evening Journal, Jan. 24. We suggest that those who have access to the Journal re-read his article. Mr. Edgar Wylie, of Chicago Theological Seminary, has a very sensible reply to Dr. Swing in the Journal of Jan. 30. But as our readers will be glad to know that the Journal has opened its columns to the discussion and that Dr. Swing has embarked in it, we give some sketches of what he has to say.

He criticises the call as indefinite because it uses the words "the secret lodge system" instead of Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship. As the conference held last April in the First M. E. Church, Chicago, was addressed by Joseph Cook, Dr. Goodwin, and many other prominent men; and as its ample minutes were all ordered and sold in an edition amounting to several thousands; those who issue the present call my be excused for taking it for granted that the public understand what they mean by "the secret lodge system" without minute explanations or being suspected of secrecy. Dr. Swing also speaks of "men who organized a secret society for helping escaped slaves to Canada." The answer to this is that no such society ever was "organized" or had an existence. The writer of this, with his church and friends in Cincinnati, aided many such escaping slaves; and we were well acquainted with those who operated "the underground railroad," east and west, and they were all opposed to secret societies. Levi Coffin and the Quakers have always turned secret societies out of their church; and John Rankin of Ripley, Ohio, who aided more fugitive slaves than any other one man, preached against all secret societies. A person who should have proposed to "organize a secret society," as Dr. Swing says they did, to aid escaping slaves, would have been regarded with abhorrence. Dr. Swing was in Ohio before coming to Chicago, but neither there, nor here, has been connected with unpopular reforms; and he cannot therefore justly be blamed for ignorance concerning them. Indeed, those who read his articles will notice that it asserts nothing, proves nothing, advocates nothing; and as he has taken in hand to advise us, we return his favor by inviting him to call at the building, given by that great citizen, Mr. Philo Carpenter, No. 221 W. Madison St., where he will get from the gentlemanly young men in charge, all the information concerning the secret lodge system which he is disappointed not to find in the brief "call" which he publishes; and he will thus escape the stinging reproach of our greatest, truest statesman, John Quincy Adams, who, speaking of the non-committal clergy of his day, said they profess concerning secret societies "an ignorance which they are careful to preserve."

Dr. Swing will there learn that Freemasonry, which is now erecting a twenty-story Babel in Chicago, means something more serious than a lockless, stockless gun without a barrel; and he will read the opinions of men of whom America and the world are justly proud: notably of Daniel Webster, who wrote to the Alleghany convention that "all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm," and he approved the enactment of a law prohibiting them; and of Seward, who crowned his distinguished life by his utterance in the U. S. Senate:

> "Before I would place may hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men."

Dr. Swing is not so old that he has lost the power to blush. He may regret that he has likened such men as Charles G. Finney, Joseph Cook, Dr. Goodwin, Gen. Grant, and a host of other noble Americans who have written and published against secret societies, to timid old women; and the lodges which are eviscerating the morals and religion of this country, to "guns without lock, stock or barrel." We would not be severe on Dr. Swing. He has a certain good-humored brilliancy of parts which God may yet employ for noble uses. He has been cast off by his Presbyterian brethren, who took slave-holders into their General Assembly, and kept them there, while slavery was throttling the country; and who now fellowship lodges which swear their members to have their throats cut if they reveal their doings. It is not wonderful that he should be puzzled to know why brethren who could fellowship the murderers of Morgan, could not fellowship him; and that he should take a pleasant, good-humored revenge by criticising men who, like Presbyterians, are in earnest in what they do believe.

We therefore invite Dr. Swing, in sober earnest, to the company of men and women who are as much opposed to one plain sin as they are to another. We will furnish him, gratis, all the information concerning the lodge which he fails to find in that brief "call." And if he will attend our coming conference, prepared to give us,—not his hinted approbation of possible secret orders to discover wife-whippers, gamblers, and cruelty to dogs and horses, but his sober estimate of the one thousand secret lodges actually existing in Chicago, we promise him a courteous reception and a fair share in the discussions.

And, haply, when the secret "strongholds" of Satan shall be pulled down, as they surely will be, we may look back upon their ruins, as now we look back on the ruins of the slave system, without the upbraidings of conscience that we spent our time criticising others, while ourselves teaching nothing in particular and "shunning to declare the whole counsel of God."

ROMISH CONSISTENCY.

Rev. John Lee, of Joliet, Ill., sends us a marked copy of the Catholic Mirror, Baltimore, containing his letter to that paper, and the editor's reply, in which it appears that, prior to 1870, when the Pope was declared infallible, Father Keenan's Catechism, endorsed by Archbishop Hughes and the Romish priesthood generally, declared the dogma of the Pope's infallibility "a Protestant invention." An edition of Keenan's Catechism, issued after 1870, omits that article, because the Council of 1870 had converted what was declared, by infallible authority, to be a "Protestant invention," into an infallible doctrine of the Romish church.

The Mirror editor publishes Rev. Mr. Lee's letter and replies to it. He treats it as a trivial matter that priests in Europe and America, by endorsing Keenan's Catechism, declare the Pope's infallibility "a Protestant invention" (of course a falsehood); and an ecumenical infallible council should declare the same "infallibility" an infallible truth. The editor coolly says, that before 1870 Catholics believed the infallibility (invented by Protestants) all the same as after the Council declared it. But after the Protestant lie had been exalted into infallible truth, Keenan properly "omitted," dropped out of his infallible Catechism the declaration that infallibility was a lie invented by Protestants!

This is certainly cool. This editor says the universal belief of a Protestant invention (lie) is "a wholly insignificant fact."

ROMISH PURITY.

In the same number of the Mirror a furious attack is made on Luther's marriage with the nun Catherine Bora. The writer calls it a violation of the Second Commandment, which forbids taking God's name in vain. At twenty-four years of age Luther made a vow of chastity as an Augustinian monk. At forty-two he broke that vow by marriage, and thus took the name of God in vain: and the Mirror article says, "How strange that Christian men and women in this land should honor him as the champion of freedom, religion, and light." The answer to this singular remark is this:

1. Vows made in restraint of marriage are immoral and void by English and American law, which law multitudes of Romanists accept and swear to.

2. "Forbidding to marry," 1 Tim. 4: 3, is in Scripture called a "doctrine of devils" taught "in the latter times" by men "speaking lies in hypocrisy," "having their conscience seared with a hot iron!" Will our Romish friend explain this terrible Scripture?

3. Paul commands bishops to marry, Titus 1: 6 and 1 Tim. 3: 2.

4. The first prohibition of marriage to the Romish clergy was the local council of Eliberis in Spain, A. D. 305. It was not forbidden by a pope till eighty years after, by Siricius in 385. And now celibacy is not a matter of doctrine but of discipline.

4. Paul says, "I will that the younger women marry." If nuns are young they are included. Catherine Bora was 26.

5. The argument for keeping priests unmarried was, "The affections of married priests for their wives, children, relatives and country, would detach them from the Roman See." Thousands of men, compelled by this order of Pope Siricius, cast off their wives and children. Thus Romish celibacy was, and is, the most gigantic iniquity on record. Luther's faults mentioned by the Mirror were the remnants of his brutality as a monk. But for an intelligent paper like the Mirror to call Luther's marriage "unchastity," and the cause of unchastity in Protestant countries, argues in that sheet an immense ignorance or seared conscience. We have not to go off the North American continent to find Romish priests openly keeping concubines and raising children by them; while convents and nunneries are often houses of prostitution.

A NEW CONSTELLATION RISING.

"One swallow does not make a summer," neither does one reformer make a reformation. Elijah seemed almost to have accomplished such a work, but the more quiet teaching force of Elisha was needed. Wickliffe, Huss and Savonarola prepared the way for Luther; and even while he was leading the reformed conscience of Germany in a way he knew not, other watch-fires blazed up in the mountains of Switzerland under Farel and Zwingle, to answer to the bonfire of the Pope's bull in the Wittemburg town square.

It was so with the anti-slavery cause, and so, too, with our own. While in Chicago, Boston, Washington and other cities, our banner is set up for Christ against his lodge enemy, in St. Louis a new and independent work has just begun. A few weeks since Rev. Dr. B. Carradine preached a powerful sermon before an audience of two thousand in the Centenary M. E. church, for an hour and a half arraigning the lodge system in the name of Christ and his church in an eloquent and logical manner.

Dr. Carradine is presumably of the M. E. Church South, as he not long since came to St. Louis from New Orleans, where he was well known as an opponent of the lottery system. When the St. Louis papers asked for the sermon and professed to print it entire, yet left out the strongest half, the New Orleans press printed the omitted portion. It is an able address which all the readers of the Cynosure will want to see.

As the representative of another denomination which seems to be rising grandly on the horizon of our reform we hail this herald of the new constellation of the M. E. church. There are many pastors of that faith in the North who will heartily take the hand of their St. Louis brother. Our agent, Bro. Hawley, has been reporting them from time to time in Iowa. We could name others in various parts of the land who will be ready when a Gideon, filled with the Spirit of the Lord, shall blow his trumpet. We shall find them at hand as when the Baptist brethren, Gordon, Gifford, Grant and Cunningham, stood up in Boston in 1889, or when the Congregationalists were represented by such names as Cook, Goodwin, Clarke and King in our last Chicago conference. Thus as these constellations rise one after another to usher in our day.

> "The world rolls Freedom's radiant way,

—Several articles and letters in the present issue discuss the Masonic oaths from various standpoints. Let others write on the same topic, so that side lights from every quarter may be thrown upon it.

—Ripley, Ohio, is the present address of I. R. B. Arnold of the River Mission. He is doing good work at the river towns as he floats along. All who have religious papers of value for distribution to the thousands he meets can send to that point until further notice.

—The National Farmer's Alliance (Northern) which was founded as a non-secret association, is gravitating toward the Southern, secret, negrophobist society of the same name, we fear. At the eleventh annual meeting, held at Omaha lately, "representatives of the press were refused all information."

—The last number of the Advance is devoted to the Home Missionary cause, and a double number is required to tell the story of this work adequately. This fact alone is eloquent of the greatness of the work; and the Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, etc., could repeat the record again and again.

—We print again on page 15, the copy of the call for the next conference to be held in this city shortly. Let each of our readers get the signatures of their pastors and others whose names ought to be given to promote such a meeting, and forward them to the Corresponding Secretary, W. I. Phillips, at this office.

—Rev. M. H. Nichols, our Pacific agent, lectured in the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church at Tacoma on Sabbath afternoon, Jan. 18, to a good audience, who gave good heed to the truth spoken. Bro. Nichols has been assisting the Free Methodist brethren in revival meetings, and is invited by pastors of two Methodist Episcopal churches to aid them also. He hopes to find the churches more willing soon to receive and believe the whole truth respecting the work of God and the devices of the devil to destroy it.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston of Oakland, California, has been engaged to take editorial charge of Our Banner, and will soon move to Philadelphia to take up his new work. Dr. Johnston has for years been identified with the Chinese mission established by the Reformed Presbyterians in California. Failing health constrained him to give that labor into younger hands. Mrs. Johnston has been also prominent in Christian work in California. She is president of the W. C. T. U. of the State and edits its organ. The removal to Philadelphia will sever many associations these well-beloved people have formed in the Pacific metropolis, and take them from a beautiful home in the highlands of East Oakland.

—The Clan-na-Gael is not yet out of business. Some months ago John Spelman, the young son of Edward Spelman, the millionaire distiller of Peoria, president of the whisky trust and high muck-a-muck in the Clan-na-Gael, was arrested and indicted for burglary. The case against him was a clear one, but the defense was that the culprit was insane. The jury so decided and Spelman was sent to the asylum at Kankakee. News has now been received that he has been released from the asylum and has disappeared. Spelman was once arrested at Peoria in the act of burglary and was bound over, but skipped his bail. He was also wanted for similar crimes at Pekin and at Evansville, Ind., having robbed a ticket office at the latter place. He is also wanted by the postoffice department for the theft of a mail bag near Peoria. He is certainly in need of a secret society.

—As he concluded a sermon on the subject "Is Life Worth Living?" last Sabbath morning, Rev. Neville D. Fanning was taken suddenly ill and died soon after. He had just been installed pastor of the Oak Park Congregational church, Minneapolis, in which he was ministering when the sudden summons came. Mr. Fanning began his work as a minister of the Gospel as a Free Methodist some twenty-five years ago. In 1867, when stationed at Aurora, he called, with another brother minister of the same denomination, on the editor of the Cynosure to advise a meeting opposing the lodge. The Aurora convention of that year and the organization of the N. C. A. at Pittsburgh next year was the result. Mr. Fanning was afterward pastor of an independent church at Marengo, Ill., but was obliged to remove to a more favorable climate because of ill-health. He had been for some twelve years connected with the Congregationalists.

—John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, saloon-keeper, drunkard and wife-beater, is a member in good standing of the "Protective Order of Elks." He belongs to a lodge in Newark, New Jersey. A few days since the papers published an order from "Grand Exalted Ruler Simon Quinlin," a physician located far south on Indiana Avenue in this city, expelling Sullivan from the order. It transpires that the bruiser was reported at his old business of pounding—this time not his wife, but a brother Elk. So our Chicago Grand Exalted doctor summarily cuts him off. But the lodge in Newark does not so understand it, and says this man is yet a good member, and fit company for the actors and sporting people who belong to the order. One of the judges of our Illinois Supreme Court lately joined this honorable fraternity, and there is a Chicago Episcopalian preacher named Perry, who is forever advertising himself as a member. They are excellent company for Sullivan, perhaps; but their reputation for virtue and other good things is not improved by the relation. This episode reveals a feature of the Elks which is more or less common to all the lodges. Sullivan's past life of brutality and debauchery has no effect on his membership; he can beat women to his heart's content; but if he clinches a fist under the nose of an "Elk" he is suddenly a rascal and out he goes.

The New York Independent is continuing its good work for the Sabbath and the World's Fair. In addition to the opinions of over one hundred Senators and Representatives who lately gave their opinion, its columns now give us two letters from the Cabinet in which the late Secretary Windom and Attorney General Miller strengthen the hands of all good men. Mr. Miller holds that one day of the week devoted to rest is more valuable, both economically and morally, than used in any other way; while Mr. Windom expresses his earnest sympathy with the sentiment that would preserve the American Sabbath inviolate. Sixteen governors also give their views; eight would have the gates closed on the Sabbath day, five think they should be open, two express no opinion, and one appears to be undecided.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—One out of every 549 in the State of Connecticut attends college. The ratio is not equalled by any other State.

—Alexander Montgomery of San Francisco, has given $250,000 to the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of California.

—The teachers of Philadelphia have taken steps towards establishing a fund for the pensioning of teachers. The association is open to all teachers who are eligible, any time within two years of the organization. About 1,100 teachers have joined the association, and a fund of $17,000 is already provided.

—The report of the treasurer of Harvard College shows the invested funds of the college to amount to $7,121,854. During the last year the gifts for the capital account have amounted to $277,282 and gifts for immediate use to $162,225, while numerous gifts for the library and for other uses for the college are acknowledged.

—The Baptist Education Society has been in operation two years, and in that time has distributed $160,000 among institutions of different grades, on terms that have been accepted by these institutions, and will, on compliance with the conditions, yield endowments amounting to between $900,000 and $1,000,000.—The Examiner.

—Eastman's Seminary at Clarksville, Mich., has been changed in name to Beulah Seminary. Mr. Eastman, the founder, managed it for one year and then disposed of it to the "Primitive Holiness Mission," which now controls it by a board of directors, one of whom is Rev. S. Shaw. Mrs. Etta E. Shaw is principal of the school. It is largely a charitable institution. The worthy poor and orphans will be received at $1.50 a week, including board, room, tuition, washing, mending, etc. To pay expenses of the school, agents canvass the country for contributions. The pupils number nearly 100. Further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. S. B. Shaw, Clarksville, Mich.

—Dartmouth College is located at Hanover, N. H., just across the Connecticut river from Norwich, Vt. The faculty of the college having succeeded in enforcing the prohibition law in Hanover, so as to preserve the students from temptation, a liquor seller whose place was shut up moved across the river and reopened his saloon at the Vermont end of the bridge, for the express purpose of catering to the students of Dartmouth College. The Vermont Supreme Court very soon had a chance to try him on 1,000 distinct charges, and he was convicted of 715 offenses against the prohibitory law of Vermont, thanks to the energy of the Dartmouth faculty, and the aggregate of fines imposed on him was $8,000.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 28, 1891.

The present situation in Congress gives a bit of encouragement for those interested in moral reform legislation, to hope that after all something may be accomplished at this session, provided the bone of political contention, which is now apparently out of the way, will be allowed to stay out of the way.

The W. C. T. U. never tires in the good work. This week its members succeeded in prevailing upon the police authorities to seize a lot of indecent lithographs and posters used to advertise a theatrical company. The ladies should keep this up, as there have been few weeks for a long time that pictures of this class have not been posted in the most conspicuous places that could possibly be found for them, that were lewd enough to bring a blush to the face of every lady compelled to pass them.

Recently I had occasion to express my belief that the statement made by a member of Congress affirming that more wine was consumed in Washington than in any other city of its population, was correct. This week I accidentally saw the following paragraph in a letter, giving the personal experience of a New York lady, which I quote as further proof on the subject:

"It is the custom in this town to serve punch at all afternoon teas, and even the unpretending at-home days. Mrs. B. gives you rum punch, Mrs. X. has a claret cup, Mrs. W. champagne cocktail in a glass bowl with a big ladle beside it. Dear me! When you get through at Mrs. W.'s you don't pay much attention as to what sort of beverage is to be found at the next hospitable mansion, but you drink it all the same. It is bound to have rum in it. Everything has rum in it—even the tea. Yes, indeed. One lovely lady I know makes a specialty of 'rum tea.' It consists of half a cup of hot tea with sufficient Santa Cruz to fill up the receptacle. It doesn't taste very strong when you drink it. But it tastes strong afterwards. I assure you that a round of teas in Washington means as many glasses of punch as the visiting cards you leave, and never has such a variety of this particular concoction been seen anywhere on the face of the earth—red punch, white punch, amber punch, green punch, pink punch."

Comments are superfluous. The disgraceful story is fully set forth.

Secretary Windom, in carrying out a most commendable custom of the government, has just awarded a silver life-saving medal to Daniel J. Reagan, of South Boston, Massachusetts, in recognition of his bravery and skill in saving Theodore Westman from drowning in Boston harbor on the last 4th of July. Nearly all civilized countries encourage brave men in the saving of human lives by giving honorary decorations of some kind to the savers; but what about the savers of souls?

The virtues, the example, and the life-work of the late George Bancroft, formed the subject of Rev. Dr. Bartlett's sermon last Sunday evening, his text being Job. 5: 26, "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like a shock of corn cometh in his season." Dr. Bartlett did full justice to his subject, and among other striking oratorical etchings was this one: "He stands for many as American history. He did many things during his life, but that is what he was. If a great sculptor should undertake to represent American history, he would carve the figure of Bancroft. He had been a politician at times; he had spoken when Lincoln's remains were received at New York, and had delivered the address on Lincoln before the two houses of Congress; but we do not associate him with politics or any other form of literature—he is to us, statuesque and severe, American history." *

The "Catechism on Alcohol," published by the English National Temperance League, has reached a circulation in this country of 292,870 copies. It has also been translated into Finnish, German, and Bohemian, and lately into Urdu, in order to further the temperance work in India.

Prof. E. L. Youmans says that alcohol is specifically and to all intents and purposes a cerebral poison. It seizes with its disorganizing energy upon the brain, that mysterious part whose steady and undisturbed action holds man in true and responsible relations with his family, with society, and with God, and it is this fearful fact that gives to government and society their tremendous interest in the question.

THE HOME.

THE ROOF OF THE WORLD HANGS LOW.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

O, the roof of the world hangs low, so low,
That the winds of heaven sweep by,
And the angels sing, while the breezes blow,
And the hills seem nearer the sky;
O, it hangs so low that the faintest prayer
Goes up to the Father's ear;
And the heart, be it ever so faint, can dare
All danger, with heaven so near.

So low, we can feel from the Father-land
Heaven's fragrant breezes blow;
So low, we can reach and clasp his hand
The nearer to heaven we go;
So low, not a whisper is breathed in vain
While love's sweet fountains flow:—
O, be glad, my friend, that in joy or pain
The roof of the world hangs low!

So low, that he marks the sparrow's fall,
And he heeds the raven's cry;
And he hears his children when loud they call,
And the mourner's faintest cry.
So low, that he knows when our hearts are sad,
And he marks when our tear-drops flow;
And so, though his throne be hihg, I am glad
That the roof of the world hangs low.

Though bitter may be our strife with sin,
And though dark be our field of wrong,
It is only the humble and meek who win,
It is only the brave who are strong.
We can feel, though our path may thorny be,
The breath of the Spirit blow;
So we pass through his gates on bended knee,
For the roof of the world hangs low.

So low, that 'tis easy to lift the bars
That swing 'neath the heaven's blue;
So that safe from this dark world's strife and wars,
His conquerors may march through.
He holds on our brows a golden crown
Which the faithful win, and so
We march through his gates with heads bowed down,
For the roof of the world hangs low.

RECENT RESEARCHES INTO BIBLE LANDS.

The geographical position and history of Palestine were such, that its people came into contact with all the leading nations of antiquity. Not only with such smaller people as the Edomites, Moabites and Philistines, but also with the powerful Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians and Persians, was the fate of Israel often bound up. In these lands, too, Biblical investigations have been reaping rich and ever richer harvests.

Not the least is this the case in Egypt, the land of archæological surprises. While it is true that with a single exception, and even that of doubtful character, the hieroglyphs do not contain any direct reference to the Israelites and their sojourn in Egypt, yet these same records, in everything that they give concerning the old customs and manners of the Egyptians, agree with and even confirm to the smallest minutiæ the Egyptian historical data and background of Genesis and Exodus. The researches of Egyptology have not only an apologetic value, but have also contributed positively to the interpretation of a number of points. The further these investigations have been pushed, the more it appears that where Herodotus and other historians do not agree with the Biblical accounts of Egypt, the native records of the latter prove the correctness of these accounts. Just within recent months have these investigations contributed valued material. We refer not so much to the rediscovery by M. Naville of the great storehouses built by the Israelites in Goshen, of which mention is made in the opening chapters of Exodus, as to the wonderful discovery at Tell-el-Armana of scores and scores of tablets, covered with cuneiform inscriptions, which show that fifteen hundred years before Christ, there was an active literary movement in Western Asia and Egypt, and that extensive correspondence was carried on throughout the whole region. Prof. Sayce has made a special study of these tablets, and according to his statements we learn that in the fifteenth century before Christ—a century before the exodus—active literary intercourse was carried on throughout the civilized world of Western Asia, between Babylonia and Egypt and the smaller states of Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia, and East Cappadocia. This intercourse was carried on by means of the Babylonian language and script, and demonstrates that Babylonian was the language of culture and diplomacy all over the civilized East. Sayce says that Kirjath-Sepher signifies Booktown, and it is assumed that this was the seat of a famous library.

The existence of a literature at such an early period, has received a wonderful confirmation in the inscriptions found by Dr. Edward Glazer last year in Southern Arabia. He gathered 1,031 of these, and they are revealing a new world of Biblical history. It appears that as early as almost five thousand years before Christ, a kingdom was established under Jewish influence in Southern Arabia. The bearing of these discoveries on Biblical discussion is apparent. For decades it has been the favorite view of neological critics that the traditional views of an early literature in Israel, dating back to the days of Moses, must be given up for want of evidence; and here we have a wealth of evidence, that over the whole period intervening between the age of the patriarchs and Moses, there existed an active literary movement throughout the whole length and breadth of the land in which Israel moved and lived. The data thus furnished by the tiles of Egypt and the rocks of Arabia are cold facts, before which subjective rationalizing must hush.

Another of the most gratifying and remarkable finds in this line of search has been the actual rediscovery of a once powerful Oriental and Biblical people, the Hittites, of whom nearly all traces had been lost in secular literature. It is now known that the Hittites were a strong people on the borders of Babylon as far back as twenty-four hundred years before Christ.

Ancient Babylon and Nineveh have proved regular storehouses for the Bible student. Literally tens of thousands of cuneiform inscriptions have been unearthed. A whole library has been discovered in the palace of Assurbanipel, including two epic poems. In one of these, of which the Biblical Nimrod is the hero, there are found accounts of the creation and the flood which have a remarkable similarity to those of the Bible.

In spite of radical critics, the tendency of this whole field of research, as of all modern Oriental research, has been to confirm and strengthen the Biblical records.—Prof. Geo. H. Schodde in Homiletic Review.

ORIENTAL JUSTICE.

Dr. Henry M. Scudder relates a case of Oriental justice that cannot be outdone for sharp and subtle discriminations even by a Philadelphia jurist:

"Four men, partners in business, bought some cotton bales. That the rats might not destroy the cotton they purchased a cat. They agreed that each should own a particular leg of the cat; and each adorned with beads and other ornaments the leg thus apportioned to him. The cat, by an accident, injured one of its legs. The owner of that member wound about it a rag soaked in oil. The cat going too near the fire, set the rag on fire, and being in great pain, rushed in among the cotton bales where she had been accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton thereby took fire and was burned up. It was a total loss. The three other partners brought a suit to recover the value of the cotton against the fourth partner who owned the particular leg of the cat.

"The judge examined the case and decided thus: 'The leg that had the oil rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use that leg; in fact, it held up that leg, and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton, and are alone culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three partners who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was the proprietor of the injured leg.' "—Exchange.

George M. Pullman, the possessor of $50,000,000, recently said to a correspondent of the New York Tribune, when asked how it feels to be a millionaire: "I have never thought of that. But now that you mention it, I believe that I am no better off—certainly no happier—than I was when I didn't have a dollar to my name and had to work from daylight until dark. I wore a good suit of clothing then, and I can only wear one suit now. I relished three meals a day then a good deal more than I do three meals a day now. I had fewer cares; I slept better, and I may add, generally, that I believe I was far happier in those days than I have been many times since I became a millionaire. And yet it is a comfortable feeling to be rich."

THE INVENTION OF THE COTTON GIN.

One day, in the fall of 1792, when General Washington was President of the United States, a company of Georgia planters happened to be assembled at the house, near Savannah, of Mrs. Nathaniel Greene, widow of the famous General Greene of the Revolution. Several of these planters had been officers under the command of the general, and they had called, naturally enough, to pay their respects to his widow.

The conversation turned on the depressed condition of the Southern States since the close of the war. The planters were generally in debt, their lands were mortgaged, their products afforded little profit, and many of the younger and more enterprising people were moving away. The cause of this state of things, these planters agreed, was the difficulty of raising cotton without profit, owing to the great labor required in separating the fibers of the cotton from the seeds.

Many of our readers, we presume, have never seen cotton growing, not even a boll, or pod, of cotton. This pod, which is as large as a hen's egg, bursts when it is ripe, and the cotton gushes out at the top in a beautiful white flock. If you examine this flock closely you discover that it contains eight or ten large seeds, much resembling, in size and shape, the seeds of a lemon. The fibers of the cotton adhere so tightly to the seeds, that to get one pound of clean cotton without wasting any, used to require a whole day's labor. It was this fact that rendered the raising of cotton so little profitable, and kept the Southern States from sharing in the prosperity enjoyed by the States of the North after the close of the Revolutionary war.

When the gentlemen had been conversing for some time, the idea was started that perhaps this work could be done by a machine. Mrs. Greene then remarked:

"Gentlemen, apply to my young friend, Mr. Whitney; he can make anything."

Few words have ever been spoken on this globe that have had such important and memorable consequences as this simple observation by Mrs. Nathaniel Greene.

Eli Whitney, of whom she spoke, was a young Yankee, born in Massachusetts and developed in Connecticut, who had come to Georgia to teach, and, having been taken sick, had been invited by this hospitable lady to reside in her house till he should recover. He was the son of a poor farmer, and had worked his way through college without assistance—as Yankee boys often do. From early boyhood he had exhibited wonderful skill in mechanics, and in college he used to repair the philosophical apparatus with remarkable nicety—to the great admiration of professors and students.

During his residence with Mrs. Greene he had made for her an ingenious tambour-frame on a new principle, as well as many curious toys for her children. Hence her advice, "Apply to my young friend, Mr. Whitney; he can make anything."

She now introduced Mr. Whitney to her friends, who described to him the difficulties under which they labored. He told them that he had never seen a pod of cotton in his life. Without giving them any promises, he resolved to procure some raw cotton forthwith and see what he could do with it. Searching about the wharves of Savannah, he found, at length, some unclean cotton, and, taking home a bundle of it in his hands, he shut himself up in a room in the basement, and set to work to invent the machine required.

All the winter he labored in his solitary cell. There were no proper tools to be had in Savannah. He made his own tools. There was no wire. He made his own wire. The children, the servants, the visitors to the house, wondered what he could be doing in the basement all alone; but he said nothing, and kept on tinkering, hammering and thinking, till, early in the spring of 1793, he had completed his work. Having set up the mysterious machine in a shed, he invited a number of planters to come and witness its operation. Its success was complete. The gentlemen saw, with unbounded wonder and delight, that one man with this young Yankee's engine, could clean as much in one day as a man could clean by hand in a whole winter. The cotton grown on a large plantation could be separated from the seed in a few days, which before had required the constant labor of a hundred hands for several months. Thus was the cotton-gin invented.—Selected.

SITTING BULL AND LITTLE EAGLE.

The famous and dangerous Indian chief, Sitting Bull, was arrested (Dec. 15th) by a body of Indian policemen, in the service of the government. In the attempt at a rescue which followed, five of the Indian policemen were killed. One of these, Little Eagle, was a Christian Indian.

The American Missionary for March, 1888, contained a sketch of the heroic death of Harry Little Eagle, an Indian boy who died in the triumph of Christian faith. Connected with the account of his death was a reference to the father of the little boy, Little Eagle, the policeman whose death is mentioned above. We cannot forbear making an extract from the sketch. His father, Little Eagle, was present and seemed inspired. New Year's Day he stood up before some Teton Indians and said: "I am one of you. You all know me. You all see me. You see the same body that has been on the war-path with you many times; the same body that has been rigged out in paint and feathers and rattlers, and has danced with you in the dance. The body is the same, but that is all. The part of me that your eyes cannot see is not the same, I am not the same. I think differently; I feel differently; I plan differently. I like different things; I am a new man. My heart is made clean in Christ. When I first tried to follow Christ, I was satisfied. I tried to do right and I thought God would own me. When my boy died he said: 'Tell the people that God has said: Thou shalt have no God but me. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not commit adultry. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' Then my heart was heavy. All day and night I sat mute. I said: 'I have done all these things and my boy never did any of them. He will be saved and I shall be lost.' I went to Winona (Miss Collins, our missionary) and told her. She told me: 'My friend, if we never had sinned, Christ would not have died. Because you sinned and broke God's laws, Christ died for you. His death makes you his.' Then light came. Yes, I am a sinner, just like the rest of you. We have all done the same things. Now I stand here acquitted. Come to Christ. Come to God."

TEMPERANCE.

DR. CHEEVER'S BRAVERY.

This was the title given to the author of "Deacon Giles' Distillery" by his classmate, Longfellow. The death of Dr. Cheever brings out many reminiscences of him. Horace Greeley was wont to call him "the man that made sinners miserable." A very Boanerges he was when attacking sin; rose-water methods of reform were too slow for him, and impersonal dealing with iniquity was a thing to make him frantic. Yet this son of thunder was the lovingest of men, tender and pitiful when dealing with the penitent sinner, as he was firm in denunciation of organized sin. He was a pioneer temperance worker, his vision of "Deacon Giles' Distillery" having been one of the first bombshells dropped into the enemy's camp. An old gentleman lately gave me a copy of this book, one of the first edition, with its quaint pictures, showing the deacon's distillery with the casks labelled, not "Rum," "Brandy," "Gin," but "Destruction," "Poverty," "Ruin," "Death." It is hard for us to realize the great commotion this harmless-looking pamphlet caused. Its immediate result was a riot and mobbing of Dr. Cheever in the streets of Salem, and his arrest for "libelling one of his church members," for Deacon Giles was a deacon in his own church. He was prosecuted, convicted and imprisoned for thirty days in Salem jail; that imprisonment made his Dream immortal. It had an immense circulation in this country and in Great Britain; was translated and largely circulated in the language of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, Norway and Sweden.

Not long before his death Dr. Cheever related an instance of strange fruitage from this early seed-sowing. He had preached in Boston, and as he came down the aisle from the pulpit was accosted by a middle-aged, well-dressed stranger who introduced himself as Mr. Giles, the son of Deacon Giles, owner of the famous Salem distillery. "I stopped you, Dr. Cheever," he said, "to thank you for writing that Dream. It was the means of making me think of the evil effects of distilling intoxicating liquors, and determined me to give up distilling; further reflection under the influence of the Holy Spirit led me to see that I was a lost and guilty sinner, and brought me to confess and renounce my sins and accept the offer of salvation through Jesus Christ." Dr. Cheever was very much touched by the incident.

Slavery as well as intemperance felt the weight of his blows; there was no evil which he did not denounce fearlessly. Nor was his work altogether polemic; he was a poet and philosopher as well as a brave fighter, and as the smoke of battle drifts away, posterity will love him for his poetry as we now venerate him for his fearless denunciation of wrong.—Union Signal.

OKLAHOMA AND THE WHISKY BUSINESS.

The deliberate refusal of the present Federal Administration to enforce the Prohibition enacted by Congress for Oklahoma, and the allowing by President Harrison's appointees of hundreds of lawless liquor dives to gain a foothold in the new Territory in spite of their sworn statements to uphold the law, has at last borne its legitimate fruit in the shape of an infamous license law for the once Prohibition Territory. Oklahoma is no longer under Congressional Prohibition. The Legislature which adjourned last week passed almost at the last moment, in spite of the protests of temperance people, a law providing for license in the Territory. The fee is placed at $200, and an additional fee of not less than $100 or more than $500 may be charged by other cities. County Commissioners are empowered to grant licenses on petition of thirty tax-payers. A bond of $2,000 is required; no gambling device, pool or billiard table is allowed in saloons; neither blinds nor screens. The sale of liquor is forbidden within three miles of any camp-meeting. A fine of $25 is imposed for sales to minors; $50, for sales to insane, idiots or habitual drunkards, and $100 for sales on Sunday and election day. Any officer failing to enforce the law shall be removed from office. The Legislature, which was controlled by the Farmers' Alliance, refused to consider a Prohibition bill or to enact Woman Suffrage.—Voice.

SAWED THE SALOON IN TWO.

On Jan. 21 Street Commissioner Patterson of Kansas City, Kan., and his corps of workmen yesterday sawed and tore down the Kansas end of the notorious Bill Lewis' saloon in Toad-a-Loup. The Missouri end is left standing. The saloon stood on the State line of Kansas and Missouri, and Lewis ran the place without a license. The exact location of the line was never determined until yesterday, and Lewis when arrested by the officers of one State always claimed to be doing business in the other. Yesterday the State line was definitely located, and that part of the building found to be on the Kansas side was sawed off and torn down, which proceeding is authorized by the Kansas prohibition law.—Daily News.

AN EXAMPLE TO AMERICA.

"Students' Total Abstinence Union" is the name of an organization of ministerial students of six Nonconformist theological colleges in England, which held its annual soiree recently at the Wesleyan College, Richmond. There are 239 theological students in these colleges, of whom 232 are abstainers. The Union has been in existence thirty-four years, and when formed in 1856 the percentage of abstainers among all the students was forty. Now the percentage of abstainers is ninety-seven. In three of the six colleges all of the students are now abstainers. We wish as much could be said of the students of all our American colleges.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Elijah and Elisha.—vs. 1–8. It was fitting that Elijah, the most unique and wonderful of all the Old Testament prophets, should have this strange and glorious termination of his career. He had burst upon Israel's wicked king and court like a whirlwind of divine wrath, and by a whirlwind he is carried up to heaven; a kind of foregleam of that blessed lot awaiting those of God's saints who shall be alive at Christ's second coming—caught up to meet the Lord in the air without tasting death. Impelled by a divine forewarning that he is soon to depart, he sets out on a farewell tour, visiting the schools of the prophets in the south, and doubtless warning and exhorting them to be true to their God, and stand as the nation's bulwarks against the tide of heathenism which was ever threatening under Israel's apostate kings to overwhelm the land. There may have been two reasons why he dissuades Elisha from accompanying him:—the desire for solitude in such an hour, and the wish to spare his loving friend and disciple the pain of witnessing his final departure. Elisha's answer reminds us at once of Ruth's in its unconquerable fidelity, its tender and clinging affection. The young prophets at all these widely sundered places, even at Jericho in the neighboring kingdom of Judah, meet him with mysterious intimations that he is about to lose his beloved master, but they tell him no new thing. "Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace." A great sorrow is always dumb. It is not strange that Elisha did not want to talk about it, still less that he did not wish it to become a subject for common talk and gossip. "And they two went on" till they came to Jordan. Here their further journey seemed impossible, but Elijah with his mantle smote the waters, and they parted right and left leaving a pathway through. There are Jordans of sorrow so bitter that we cry out with the psalmist, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." But we have God's word of promise that if we cling in faith to him they shall never overwhelm us; and we may even pass through them dry-shod if our faith is strong enough to take hold of God with a perfect, unfaltering trust. But death is the Jordan that rolls darkly before every human soul. A little child was much afraid to pass over "the dark river" as she had heard it called, but she put her faith in Jesus, and with her last breath she exclaimed in joyful tones, "Why, it is only a little brook!" The happy deaths of so many Christian believers show us that if we cannot pass over it dry-shod, the great and swelling river will indeed shrink to "a little brook" if we are supported by the everlasting arms beneath us.

2. Elijah translated.—vs. 9–11. The desire to leave some valuable gift behind one as a keepsake to a dear friend is a natural human wish. Jesus had this desire and so he instituted the Last Supper to be his abiding memorial to every believer until he should come again. "What shall I do unto thee?" Not, "What shall I give unto thee?" Elijah had neither money nor lands to leave him, but as a prophet he had power to bestow what neither silver nor gold could buy. Yet Elisha does not ask for temporal advancement, or for anything which looked toward self-aggrandizement,—only for a double portion of his master's spirit, his zeal, his faithfulness, his power with God, that he might carry on the work after him as his spiritual heir. Elijah might well say, looking back on his own life, an exile and an outlaw, yet called to deliver his message from God in the very teeth of death, "Thou hast asked a hard thing." Would Elisha, made of so different mold, be able to drink such a bitter cup? Yet he could not have one without the other, any more than the sons of Zebedee could share Jesus' throne without sharing his baptism of anguish and death. If we would be the spiritual heirs of the great and good who have gone before us, we must not shrink from walking in the same path of hardship and drinking the same bitter cup of scorn and misunderstanding. If a young preacher wants the spirit of Bunyan or Wesley or Paul to rest upon him, he must be as brave for truth as they were, counting not his own life dear unto him. And if we would be not merely the sons and daughters of Puritan sires by natural descent, but their spiritual heirs, we must bear their unflinching testimony against all the evils that would bring our nation into bondage—rum, Romanism, and above all, the lodge with its false worships, based on the very system of Baalism against which Elijah warred.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The revival meetings in Beloit, Wis., conducted by the evangelist, B. F. Mills, resulted in a general awakening of all the churches, and a large number of conversions: about 500 pledge-cards were signed. Mr. Mills, during the ten days, preached twice daily and three times on Sunday, as well as on Friday and on Tuesday, each of which days was observed as a week-day Sabbath. The students of Beloit College warmly engaged in the work, and there were many among them that began the Christian life. Meetings are still being held in the various churches under the direction of the several pastors.

—Frank Hoover, a student of Iowa College, while spending vacation at his home near Quasqueton, Iowa, began a few Gospel meetings in the neighborhood. A revival interest was apparent at once, and soon about thirty persons had professed conversion, and the people are asking for a church organization.

—Central Park church, in this city, began revival services the first week in January. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Sears, preached each evening for three weeks. As a result of these efforts there were sixty-six conversions and fifty-one accessions to the membership.

—Some two years ago at the People's Tabernacle, Denver, an Indian was converted and joined the church. Since then he has taken an active part in the work. Pastor Uzzell has just completed arrangements to send him to an Indian school for a five years' course of instruction preparatory to becoming a missionary to his native tribe, the Cheyennes.

—A San Francisco dispatch says: Advices from Tahiti report that wreckage has been discovered supposed to be from the missionary schooner Phœbe Chapman, which left Honolulu a year ago in charge of Elder J. H. Cudeny, of Nebraska. All hands are now given up as lost. Another missionary schooner was sent to the South Seas some months ago, and reports that there is no longer any doubt of the missionary Cudeny's fate.

—In Australia the Christian Endeavor movement seems to be spreading with the same rapidity as in America, though the first society there is scarcely more than a year old. The first meeting of the Victorian Christian Endeavor Union indicated much interest, and its proceedings have been published in pamphlet form. There is talk of forming an Australian United Society of Christian Endeavor similar to the one in America.

—In Jaffna, Ceylon, the Christian women take from the portion of rice daily measured out for the family food, a double handful and put it into a bag hanging against the wall for an offering to God's work. A heathen priest heard of the practice and commended it, introducing it among the heathen women, and from their offerings, in time, a temple was built. This shows how little things aggregate and become powers for good or evil.—Heathen Woman's Friend.

—It is not easy to get full statistics of colored membership in the churches of the United States. Colored members are counted with white members in the thousands of congregations, both North and South. We can only give in the table which follows an approximate idea of the number of colored communicants, as we find them in colored churches, or colored conferences. In no case is the number overstated:

Churches.	Communicants.
Colored Baptists,	1,071,000
African Methodists,	1,199,000
Presbyterian (North),	16,661
Cumberland Presbyterian,	15,000
Disciples of Christ (estimated),	15,000
Congregational (in the South),	7,209
Christians,	5,000
Union American Methodist Episcopal,	3,500
Protestant Episcopal,	4,000
Union African Methodist Protestant,	3,000
Methodist Episcopal Church (South),	653
Southern Presbyterian,	267
Free Baptists, Lutherans and others,	.....
Total,	2,340,290

This is not all, as we have intimated, of colored communicants. The million of colored Baptists hardly covers the number in Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina. There must be large numbers in Northern and Western States of which we have no account.—Southern Presbyterian.

CONFERENCE LETTERS.

From A. O. Bersell, Professor of the Greek Language and Literature, Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.:

In signing the enclosed call, the views of which I am in hearty sympathy with, I have not proposed any time, leaving that to those who better can determine the most suitable for such a meeting.

From R. A. Torrey, Superintendent of the Bible Institute, for home and foreign missions, Pearson St., Chicago:

I certainly believe with all my heart, that the union of Christians with men of the world in any way is certainly contrary to the Word of God. I am, however, not willing to sign a call for a conference, for the simple reason that I think we are conferenced to death.

From Rev. Nathaniel Smith, Geneseo, Ill.:

I sympathize most truly with you in your efforts to exterminate secret lodges. I have been opposed to Masonry since Morgan's abduction, which I very well remember. But now, being past 80, I cannot trust myself to go far from home in the winter. But I give you my good wishes for success.

From Rev. A. Willey, Northfield, Minn., Anti-slavery historian:

I regard secret lodges as one of the greatest dangers of our country. Our government rests on individual responsibility, and so does Christianity; but this is transferred to the lodge, and is what that is. Personality is lost in the organism, and that will be and do whatever human nature all concealed will do. "Every one must give account of himself to God." But this system substitutes the word lodge, for himself, and thus defies the Almighty. Let this go on a little farther, and our country will be in the hands of these combinations, sworn to total concealment by their lives. Where then shall we be? Ruined,—lost. And manhood and honor are lost in this skulking, hiding, concealing; confessing on the surface that they are either ashamed or afraid to have people know what they are about. And some of these systems, like Masonry, are paganism substituted for Christianity. It is insisted that Christians ought to have no complicity with these works of darkness, but to come out and keep out. And every church of Christ should hold this position. May the light so shine by constant endeavor that this shall be gained. The religious press has great responsibility on this subject.

From Rev. James D. Smith, Lodi, Wis.:

I trust the "Conference" may be a great means of good.

From Rev. E. F. Bartholomew, D.D., Professor of English Literature and Philosophy, Augustana College:

I am in the most hearty sympathy with the movement against secret societies.

From Rev. G. D. Gordon, Dunreith, Ind.:

While I am in sympathy with the movement against oath-bound secret organizations, I am not prepared to sign the call sent me, from several considerations. Principally, however, because I am not prepared to endorse the statement of ¶ 3, in the call. It may be true, and I would not be surprised if the Last Day will show it to be so, that connection with such organizations is "always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter them." But I am not yet prepared to say I believe it to be true.

From Rev. A. Rohnstrom, Swedish Baptist pastor:

I am very thankful for the copy of Joseph Cook's address. Translate it in Swedish and let it be spread all over the country.

From Rev. J. S. Thompson, Utica, Ohio:

I take pleasure in attaching my name to the call that you inclosed to me. I trust that the convention may be marked with as great a measure of success as the last one was, and that great good may come of it. Your work is one that deserves the support of every Christian man and woman, and especially of every Christian minister; but I am sorry that so many are entangled in associations with the lodge, so that they have no desire to speak the truth in regard to it, and that so many others have their mouths shut through fear of offending some of their hearers who are associated with the lodge. The whole system is working evil, is endangering our free institutions, but worst of all, is hindering the coming of the kingdom of Christ, and keeping them out of heaven by offering them another way of salvation than through the shed blood of the Son of God. May God bless you in your work.

From Rev. L. Taylor, Rutland, Ill.:

I am in hearty sympathy with the proposed convention, and may the time speedily come when the lodges will exist no longer.

From Rev. W. P. McNary, Tarkio, Mo.:

I am glad there is some person to do this work. I appear to be so busy in my pastoral work that I cannot get time for the various kinds of reform work that I am interested in. I hope you will have as good a meeting as we had last year.

For the last three months of 1890 the Christian Cynosure has given especial attention to the college secret societies for the benefit of the hundreds of colleges to whose reading-rooms it is sent. This interesting discussion, in which have appeared the opinions of some of the very ablest American educators, will be incidentally continued next year.

But with the first of the year will begin to be published the results of a wider investigation than has yet been made into the identity of

MODERN AND ANCIENT SECRETISM.

The ancient secret societies were the MYSTERIES practiced in Chaldea, Egypt, Phœnicia, Greece, Rome, etc. These were the pagan religious systems of the ancient world.

WERE THEY RELATED TO THE LODGES OF TO-DAY?

This question we shall endeavor to answer. We believe that new evidence of the most intimate relation has been lately found, and that the presentation of this evidence to be made in the "Cynosure" will amaze Christendom the moment it is realized.

THE WHITE CROSS LEAGUE and Social Purity movement is come none too soon, as will appear in the course of this investigation.

In connection with this most important topic the Cynosure will give particular attention to the publishing them in full so far as they can be obtained, and showing their absolute incompatibility to good citizenship as well as to Christianity.

The peculiar features which have made the Cynosure so valuable in the past will be continued. Current events and the interference of the lodge in them will have especial attention. Able correspondence will be continued from New England, Washington, the Southern Mississippi district, and the Pacific Coast. The portraits and sketches of notable persons who have been identified with Christian reforms will be continued, and will be, as in the past, a very popular feature of the paper. The Sabbath-school lesson notes by Miss E. E. Flagg will be continued. For all who wish to wisely improve every opportunity against the lodge they are the best. The Home and Temperance and other departments will continue to be filled with excellent reading for the fireside.

BE SURE

that the Cynosure comes to your home during 1891.

You can nowhere else read fully the writings and sayings of such men as Joseph Cook, D. L. Moody, George F. Pentecost, D.D., E. P. Goodwin, D.D., Pres. J. Blanchard, Pres. H. H. George, and a host of men as good if not as great, on the subject of secret societies.

Nowhere else can you read of the progress of this reform week by week; and as the secret societies are now beginning openly to nominate and elect men to Congress and State offices, as they number hundreds of orders and millions of members, the issues they raise are of importance to every American.

Since the lodges are so aggressive every citizen should understand their nature and history and something of the men who invented and who manage them. You need the Cynosure, therefore, to keep abreast of the times as a well-informed American.

You ought also to help on this movement against the secret lodges. How better begin than by subscribing for the Cynosure? And $1.50 is but little to give in aid of so good a cause.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE LEGISLATURES.

In the lower branches of the Legislatures of New York, Indiana, and West Virginia resolutions were adopted on Monday against making appropriation for the World's Columbian Exposition should Congress pass the elections bill.

Thursday the Legislature of Pennsylvania adopted a resolution calling on the United States Senators from Pennsylvania to support the Federal elections bill by all fair and honorable means.

The Missouri Senate passed a resolution Friday pledging itself not to appropriate any money for the World's Fair should the force bill become a law.

The Nebraska House Friday afternoon indefinitely postponed the bill providing for a recount of the votes cast at the late election on the prohibitory amendment. The bill appropriating $100,000 for the relief of the drought sufferers in the western part of the State, was passed by a unanimous vote.

In the Wisconsin House Tuesday the Bennett law was repealed, the vote being taken under suspension of the rules. Both branches balloted separately for United States Senator, resulting in the election of Colonel Vilas.

A bill providing for the Australian ballot system only needs the signature of the Governor to become a law in Oregon.

COUNTRY.

The Iowa Supreme Court decided Friday that under the prohibitory law an injunction against a building in which liquors are sold is perpetual.

Hon. William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, died Thursday at 10:05 o'clock in the banquet hall at Delmonico's, New York, where he was the guest of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation. His had been the first toast of the evening. He had finished his response, had seated himself, swooned at once, and died almost immediately. Every effort to restore him was made, but in vain. He died of heart disease.

A humane bureau has been established at Kansas City to prevent the shipping of hogs and cattle in the same cars, resulting in many of the animals being maimed or killed. Several shippers have been fined for their cruel economy.

Reports from Grand Rapids, Mich., say the annual sales of furniture have practically closed, with the largest business in the history of the trade.

The Live Stock Indicator, of Kansas City, has special reports from the principal cattle feeding districts of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska which show that

HOOD'S COMPOUND EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA — TRADE MARK —

The importance of purifying the blood cannot be overestimated, for without pure blood you cannot enjoy good health.

At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is worthy your confidence. It is peculiar in that it strengthens and builds up the system, creates an appetite, and tones the digestion, while it eradicates disease. Give it a trial.

FOR MINISTERS

is especially adapted. They will at once derstand the references to the idolatrous systems of the nations. And the idolatrous worship of the Masonic lodge is thus more clearly seen and easily understood. Will you furnish each pastor in your place with one of these pamphlets?

HOME AND HEALTH.

HASTY EATING.

There is no doubt that the average American eats too rapidly. No one who has witnessed the feats of deglutition performed by commercial travelers at a railway station will cavil at this assertion. It is safe to attribute the national disease of dyspepsia to this cause fully as much as to the indigestible viands of which the ordinary citizen makes his chief diet. And this haste is not confined to the hotel eating-room or the railway eating-house. In the private household as astonishing and disgusting exhibitions of rapid gorging may be seen as are ever witnessed in public restaurants.

No one who had once beheld the spectacle could ever forget the fashion in which meals were conducted in a certain home where wealth and every evidence of outward refinement gave promise of better things. The father, a man of business from his sixteenth year, plainly considered eating the duty to be accomplished at the table, and quite ignored such minor considerations as the interchange of thought or observation, or any of the social features usually connected with the operation of dining. If he could not quite equal Napoleon the First, who was said to have often devoured his entire dinner in six minutes, he did not fall far behind the great warrior. Soup, meat, vegetables, dessert, were swallowed in rapid succession and in almost utter silence. The slight delay inseparable from a change of courses was endured impatiently. Almost before the last mouthful was down, the eager man would push back his chair, spring to his feet, and, with a muttered word of farewell, make a rush for the street. In an instant the slam of the front door would announce that he was on his way back to his office.

His children were not backward in imitating him, and all the pleadings of their refined, careworn mother were powerless to check the influence of the father's example. With such a rush at meal-times, elegant or even tolerably decent table manners were impossible, and the visitor in the home found eating a difficult business when accompanied by the sight of a haste and habits that often could only be described as revolting.

If the mid-day meal must be hurried, let it also be simple. There is no rhyme or reason in attempting to dispose of a three or four course dinner in thirty or forty minutes. If only half an hour can be allowed for the repast, let this consist of two courses only, either a soup and a meat course, a meat course and a salad, or a meat course and a dessert. These should be served promptly, but in an orderly fashion, and both the conduct of the dinner and the gastric powers will be benefited by such simplicity.

Upon this point the house mother must insist. Even if her husband will not conform to her wishes in this regard, she should require from servants and children a certain amount of propriety in serving the meal and decorum in its discussion. After seeing that the dinner is punctually served, and that the courses follow one another promptly, she should herself set the example of deliberate eating, and should strive, by the introduction of interesting subjects, to encourage the pleasant chat that is a potent aid to digestion. It will cost an effort to do this when she is weary and harrassed by household worries, but she will enjoy her own meal more if her mind is, by any agreeable means, distracted for a little while from her cares.—Christine Terhune Herrick, in Harper's Bazaar.

THE EGG A REMEDY FOR DYSENTERY.

The egg is considered one of the best remedies for dysentery; beaten up slightly, with or without sugar, and swallowed at a gulp, it tends, by its emolient qualities, to lessen the inflammation of the stomach and intestines, and by forming a transient coating on these organs, to enable nature to resume her health sway over a diseased body. Two, or at most three eggs per day would be all that is required in ordinary cases; and since eggs, are not merely medicine, but food as well, the lighter the diet otherwise and the quieter the patient is kept, the more certain and rapid is the recovery.—Hall's Journal of Health.

OBITUARY.

MRS. J. B. NESSELL, whose maiden name was Polly Rublee, was born at Lanesboro, Berkshire Co., Mass., April 2d, 1817. At the age of four years her parents moved to New York, and settled on a farm near what is now the pleasant village of Ellington, Chautauqua Co., which has always been her home, although for the past few years she has lived much of the time with a daughter, Mrs. E. J. McConnell of Mayville, or her son, A. H. Stafford of Jamestown. She gave her heart to her Saviour in her youth; and though it was her lot to pass through many and severe trials she was ever firm in her faith in God's promises, ever believing that "All things work for good to them that love God." At the age of 22 she was married to Austin Stafford, and became the mother of three boys; the youngest was only one year old when the father died. About eight years after this loss, she married J. B. Nessell. One daughter was born to them. Mr. Nessell will be well remembered by some Cynosure readers, as he was a most earnest reformer and never missed a copy of the paper from the time the first one was published. Mrs. Nessell was in earnest sympathy with him, and she was greatly interested in every good work. On the morning of Jan. 3d, 1891, after many weeks of patient suffering, our All-wise Father took her to himself, and we are assured that all is well with her. Two sons, J. C. Stafford of Midland, Mich., and A. H. Stafford of Jamestown, N. Y.; one daughter, Mrs. E. J. McConnell of Mayville, and a living step-daughter, Mrs. A. P. White of Jamestown, besides a large circle of relations and friends, will mourn her loss.

The Lover's Lament.

Your face is like a drooping flower,
Sweetheart!
I see you fading, hour by hour,
Sweetheart!
Your rounded outlines waste away,
In vain I weep, in vain I pray,
What power Death's cruel hand can stay?
Sweetheart, Sweetheart!

Why, nothing but Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It imparts strength to the failing system, cures organic troubles, and for debilitated and feeble women generally, is unequaled. It dispels melancholy and nervousness, and builds up both flesh and strength. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it refunded.

Convincing Evidence

That Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures Rheumatism and kindred complaints is abundant. This medicine eradicates from the blood all trace of the disease, and so invigorates the system that a perfect restoration to health is inevitable.

"In Oakland, La., 22 years ago, I had been sick a year and a half with sciatic rheumatism. The extreme pains that I suffered wasted my flesh to the bone, and my strength and vitality were well nigh exhausted. My skin was yellow and rough, showing a bad state of the blood, and it is more than likely that blood poison existed, as I have taken large quantities of mercury. After the sciatica was in a measure under control, I was put under treatment to cleanse the blood and give me strength. This was continued several weeks, but to no purpose. My physician then suggested the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it is to this medicine I owe my restoration to health. From actual experience in the use of various blood-purifiers, I am confident that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal."—J. W. Pickle, Farmerville, La.

"I have known Mr. J. W. Pickle for many years, and consider him a truthful man."—R. B. Dawkins, Mayor of Farmerville, La.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Rheumatism.

"During the past year my joints, which had become stiff and sore, caused me great pain, especially at the close of a day's work. At times my fingers were so lame I was unable to hold a needle, while the pain at night prevented my sleeping. I suffered also from nervous chills and a want of appetite. I tried outward applications and took remedies prescribed by my doctor; but all to no purpose. A short time ago my son-in-law, Wm. Woods, of Hollis, N. H., was cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla of an inflammatory disease of the eyes, and seeing him so much benefited, I thought I would try this medicine for my own trouble. The result is a complete cure of the pains, stiffness, and swelling from which I suffered so much. The Sarsaparilla has had a good effect on my appetite and nerves, so that I have better strength and no more chills."—Eliza Halvorson, Nashua, N. H.

"After being many years afflicted with rheumatism, I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great success."—J. B. Bridge, Boston, Mass.

FOR A

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ON THE

SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

We, the undersigned, believe that there is no good which can be accomplished, in times of peace and in a free land, by secret societies which cannot be secured more easily and perfectly by open organization.

We believe that much of the time and money so greatly needed by the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ is wasted in the large and unprofitable expenses of secret orders.

We believe that the union of Christians with men of the world in oath-bound organizations is forbidden by the Word of God and always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter such societies.

We believe that some oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country.

We therefore invite all those who sympathize with us in the views above expressed, to meet in "A Conference of Christians," to be held under the auspices of "The National Christian Association," in the city of Chicago ..... to consult and pray respecting the best method of saving men, the churches, and our land from the injurious influence of such societies.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Low water in a saw-mill boiler at Meredith, Mich., Wednesday, caused an explosion which killed two men and injured many others.

Miss Grace Gridley, of Amboy, Ill., aged 18, awoke Saturday from a trance of nine months' duration. She lost little flesh, but is unable to talk.

T. A. Mann, of Minden, Neb., becoming enraged at a cow, tied her in a stall and sawed her legs off. He was compelled to flee to escape lynching.

It was reported Thursday that the wheat crop of Nebraska was 10,000,000 bushels short of the amount reported by the Governor, and that the growing crop was in bad condition.

Fire broke out in the Chapin mine at Iron Mountain, Mich., Thursday evening. Eight miners were imprisoned below, all but two of whom escaped.

By an explosion of fire-damp in the Mammoth shaft at Scottdale, Pa., Jan. 27, over 100 miners were ushered into eternity and many seriously injured. The explosion occurred shortly after 9 o'clock and it is supposed was the result of the ignition of a miner's oil lamp. The after-damp, which followed the fire-damp explosion, suffocated nearly every workman. A special from the Mammoth mines January 29: This afternoon it was discovered by the rolls of the company that twenty-three more men are missing, in addition to the 107 found dead. This increases the total dead to 130. It is probable the remaining twenty-three will not be found for weeks, owing to the immense piles of wreckage that must be undermined.

Lieut. Schwatka, the arctic explorer and lecturer, was probably fatally injured in Mason City, Iowa, Jan. 30. Upon returning from a drive he ascended the steps of his hotel and when near the top fell backward over the banister to the floor beneath. His face and head are terribly bruised.

Ten tramps attempted to take possession of a passenger train at Tippecanoe, Ohio. They attacked the train crew with knives; the latter were re-enforced by the engine men and finally drove the tramps out of the car after shooting three of them, two mortally.

Four men were killed by the explosion of a bleacher in a paper mill at Rock Falls, Ill., Wednesday evening.

It was reported Tuesday that Captain Godfrey and six soldiers of the Seventh Cavalry were fatally injured in the Union Pacific wreck at Irving, Kan., Monday night.

FOREIGN.

Dispatches from Greece tell of a horrible disaster wrought by an evalanche. A huge mass of snow, ice and earth came rolling down from the mountains upon the town of Athamana, and twenty-five persons were killed outright and many injured, while eighty houses were destroyed.

At a meeting in London of delegates of English workmen's and shipping unions Thursday, it was decided to attack the shipping federation by means of a series of strikes, beginning in Liverpool and London.

The great railroad strike in Scotland has at last collapsed and the leaders of the strikers are treating with the officials of the different companies with the view of securing for the men their former places.

According to Chilean advices there have been desperate and sanguinary battles fought in the provinces of Chile between the rebel forces and the government troops. Many have been killed on both sides, but the reports are conflicting as to which side proved victorious. There seems to be but little action taken on either side at Santiago de Chile, the capital.

An insurrection in Portugal was suppressed Sunday after a battle in the streets of Oporto. The front of the Town Hall and several buildings in other streets, where conflicts took place are much damaged and battered. Most of the insurgents who surrendered themselves were conveyed abroad a man-of-war to-day. It is estimated that 24,000 shots from rifles and machine guns were fired during the fighting. It has transpired that the insurgents counted upon simultaneous risings at Coimbra, Braga, and Vizen, and were only waiting for the departure of the troops to attack the capital, but it appears that dissension revealed at recent Republican conferences upset their plans.

Signor Crispi, the Prime Minister of Italy, tendered his resignation Saturday, but King Humbert refused to accept it. There is a heavy deficit in the Italian treasury, and there is no hope but of its increase. The French press is pleased at the downfall of Crispi, claiming his administration as hostile to the good feeling between the two nations.

There are startling rumors current in Polish circles in Warsaw to the effect that Russian nihilists are preparing for another political murder. March 13, the anniversary of the assassination of Czar Alexander, is said to be the date determined upon by the nihilists for their next coup.

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

Our Chicago Knight Templar Masons are only five-cent heroes after all. A young lady in Saginaw, Michigan, was desperately burned several weeks ago, and last week the operation of skin-drafting was performed to save her life. Her sister gave, with genuine heroism, eleven pieces of her own skin one inch wide and seven long for this purpose. The physicians who performed the difficult and dangerous operation successfully, were honorable and gallant gentlemen who could not refrain from contrasting this brave deed with the petty affair of the Chicago Masons, which was so widely heralded all over the country as almost an act of martyrdom for the sake of their lodge oaths.

The sixteenth year of the Boston Monday Lectureship opened in Tremont Temple at noon on Monday the 2nd inst. with an attendance that shows unabated interest in the lecturer and his themes. The preludes will this year be devoted to such reform themes as, Anti-Mormonism, Constitutional Prohibition, High License, Municipal Misrule, Sabbath Observance, Race Riots in the South, Jesuit Aggression in America, and the Friends and Foes of Free Schools. Mr. Cook has been urged to repeat these lectures in other cities, and the general lyceum field has been demanding more and more of his time. The season, in view of these demands, will close this year on March 9, with six lectures instead of the usual eight, Mr. Cook promising during the year two emergency discourses in Boston when the Lectureship Committee shall arrange for them. Rev. Drs. Gordon and Gray are members of this committee, the former being chairman.

An important element in the approaching municipal election in Chicago is the "Sunday Rest League," an organization of secular character, whose object is to secure the Sabbath for rest for the workingmen of all classes. The League now reports every ward of the city in working order, and that its total membership is 32,000. These may not all be voters, but so large a proportion are such, that they no doubt hold the balance of power between the old parties in the city. They agree to support no candidate who does not give pledges to use his endeavor to close the Sunday saloon. The corrupt and incompetent Past Grand Master, now Mayor of Chicago, would hardly be trusted by this League even though he should pledge himself most solemnly to this object. Like the Mormons, he is too well known, and suspected. If no other candidate is named who will agree to this platform, the League will nominate one. The importance of such a movement, and the need of its success is most manifest, as Chicago will now elect for the World's Fair.

THE LATE DR. HASSELQUIST.

Enclosing a subscription to Prof. Dickie for the Prohibition cause in politics, Dr. Herrick Johnson of the McCormick Theological Seminary, writes an epigrammatic note that is good for all reforms and reformers: "Ceasless agitation: frank, thorough, carnest, honest, manly discussion; organized, aggressive persistent work;—by these we shall capture convictions and at last carry our cause. No rancor, no spleen, no bandying of offensive epithets, no over-statement; but facts, figures, merciless logic, tender appeal, storming the judgment, evoking the conscience, moving the will. In the end we shall rout this foe to everything good."

The Senate last week authorized the publication of a message by President Harrison respecting the African slave trade and liquor traffic. The message was dated two weeks ago, Jan. 29, and is really a letter of transmittal, sent for the ratification of the Senate, of the general act agreed upon last summer by the representatives of eighteen nations, including the United States, most of the European governments, the Shah of Persia and the Sultans of Turkey and Zanzibar. The provisions of this act are of the utmost importance for Africa. They are of a stringent nature and propose the practical exclusion of firearms and spirituous liquors from equatorial Africa, as well as the abolition of the slave trade. As a means of effecting the latter purpose an international bureau is to be established at Zanzibar, as well as strongly occupied posts in Central Africa. The construction of roads and railroads, and the establishment of steamboats in the inland waters, supported by fortified posts, will also help to secure the proposed end. The government of Holland has refused for some time to agree to this compact, and the delays that have already and that must yet be overcome, will make the enforcement of such vastly important measures more difficult. Especially in the suppression of the liquor traffic, after these murderous years, when it has been free to the ghouls of Christendom, and the vicious appetite has been fixed in large populations of Africa, every hour of delay is grievous. But let America be foremost to do her part in removing this curse from Africa and make amends for past dishonor.

The National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, though started unhappily in the unrighteous path of secretism, does not present so hopeless an outlook as many of the lodges. At the late national meeting at Ocala, Florida, they resolved:

"That we, the National Farmers' Alliance of America, believing that obedience to and veneration for the laws of God is the conserving and saving force of human government, do hereby request that the Directors of the great National Fair of 1892 do not desecrate the American Sabbath by keeping open the gates of the same on the Lord's day."

This resolution drew no serious opposition and no one voted against it. This is good evidence that the members are not yet fully imbued with the lodge spirit and may be saved from further demoralization. If they can stand upon this plank of the platform of rightcous government long enough to be persuaded to step upon another, they may be won away from lodgery altogether. The secret societies which, as such, have regard for the Sabbath day could almost be counted on the fingers of one hand.

CONGRESS SHOULD FORBID IT.

BY WILBUR F. CRAFTS, D. D.

I have been saying to Sabbath reform workers of late, that I think we have made a mistake in petitioning the Commission instead of Congress, in regard to the Sabbath at the World's Fair. I am glad to find my thought confirmed so admirably by the following words in a recent Washington letter to the Christian Cynosure:

"Congress is the authority to impress with the necessity for closing the Exposition on Sundays. It will be a much more forcible and useful object lesson to foreign nations for Congress to enact a law prohibiting the opening of the Exposition on Sunday, thus showing a dutiful recognition of God's law by our highest law-making power, than it will be to have the Exposition closed on Sundays by the order of the Columbian Commission, a subordinate body; and besides that, if there is no law against its being open on Sunday, and the attendance should not be as large during the week as the Commission anticipates, the Commission might see fit to change their minds and authorize it to open on Sundays, when it would be too late to prevent it. There is only one safe way, and that is to demand of Congress the enactment of a law that will make it impossible to open the Exposition on the Sabbath day. Remember that, and address your petitions to Congress, and not to the Columbian Commission."

This closing advice we are the more encouraged to adopt because the Independent symposium shows a majority of Congress to be against Sunday opening, and because a bill has been introduced in both houses of Congress as follows:

"A bill to prohibit the opening of any exhibition or exposition on Sunday where appropriations of the United States are expended. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no exhibition or exposition for which appropriation is made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday. Sec. 2 That any violation of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars for every violation of the foregoing act."

Let every church and convention and other organization opposed to Sabbath opening at once adopt, by vote, and send to one of the Senators and the appropriate Representative, with signa tures of presiding officer and statement as to the organization voting and its membership, the following petitions:

To the United States Senate: We earnestly petition you to pass the bill "to prohibit the opening of any exhibition or exposition on Sunday where appropriations of the United States are expended."

To the United States House of Representatives: We earnestly petition you to pass the bill "to prohibit the opening of any exhibition or exposition on Sunday where appropriations of the United States are expended."

Personal letters to Senators and Congressmen are even more effective than petitions. Let writing to Congressmen about pending legislation become the people's habit. That is the way to make "government of the people, by the people, for the people," something more than a pretty saying. Legislators tell me they seldom get any letters that are not selfish—if not applications for office, at least for seeds. A letter that urges attention to a great moral question from philanthropic motives is "as rare as a day in June," that is, there are only about thirty such in a Congressman's big mail in a year. They are, therefore, influential, even though badly written. Such letters have been quoted in the Senate as evidence in the workingmen's interest in pending bills. The Sunday rest bills for the capital and for the World's Fair would doubtless become a law during this Congress, if every one who believes in them would at once write to his two Senators and his Congressman, the stockholders in the national corporations, thus informing the directors of their wishes. Let us try righting by writing.

The petitions to the Commission have been the occasion of useful agitation at least, but are manifestly insufficient. The above law having been passed by both houses of Congress and signed by the President would be a final victory, but a decision of the Commission might be reversed at any moment.

A PROPHECY AGAINST CERTAIN EDITORS.

THE OBSEQUIOUSNESS AND BASE SUBSERVIENCY OF THE OLD POLITICAL PARTY PAPERS TO THE DEPRAVING LIQUOR POWER—AND THE PATRONAGE THAT POWER CONTROLS!

BY GEO. W. CLARK.

This is true of almost every old political party paper throughout the country, and especially in our cities. So obsequious and completely are they subsidized or cowardized by the all-controlling liquor interest, and the pecuniary and political patronage it dispenses, that it seems impossible through them to enlighten and arouse the people to a sense of the danger that threatens our institutions, our rights, our liberties, our government and our homes from the debasing, demoralizing and depraving influence of the liquor traffic! The chicanery, bribery, and brute force used by the liquorites to carry elections in the interest of the saloons, and to defeat prohibition, are not only often condoned, but studiedly concealed from their readers. Look at the bribe money and the liquor machinations used to buy up these papers, and carry, for instance, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania for whisky!

And where are the old political party papers that exposed and denounced this bribery and chicanery before the people? One of the daily papers of Detroit, soon after the recent election in Nebraska had a contemptuous "fling" at ex-Gov. St. John, to the effect that, "though he lectured in that State for the amendment at a hundred dollars a night, the measure was defeated by a large majority!" But this same editor had neither the independence, the fairness, or the sense of justice to show up before the people the base selling out of the political press to the liquorites, nor the brutal mob-violence used to cheat the people out of the inestimable benefits of the amendment. A correction and an expose of these frauds and outrages was sent to three of the daily papers of this city, but not one of them had the true independence to publish the expose or condemn the outrages. So Miss Francis E. Willard, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Gougar and many ministers of the Gospel labored earnestly and ably to save the State from the blighting curse of the grog-shops, but mercenary considerations, aided by such papers, and by brute force, carried the State for rum and ruin!

The ablest speeches of the best men and women do not always—for the time being, at least—carry the most righteous cause to victory, as the history of reforms and reformers clearly prove. The hue and cry, "Away with him!" "Crucify him!" often carries the crowd, even against their own saviours and benefactors! The stale lies iterated and reiterated about St. John and the "exorbitant receipts" of temperance workers, have been refuted again and again, but like Banquo's ghost will not be let to stay "down," so long as they can be used for sinister ends. It is an old saying, however, that "the laborer is worthy his hire." Especially is this true, if the labors are for the betterment of mankind. But they deserve no reward but the "wages of sin," who labor for the degradation and ruin of mankind.

The frauds, the bribery, bulldozing intimidations and mob-violence resorted to, for the purpose of defeating prohibition in Nebraska, as shown by the testimony of numerous and respectable citizens, I have never seen refuted by any one of the old political party papers throughout the country; and it is only through some few liberal reform papers that a small portion of the people get the facts.

I have affidavits in my possession describing "intimidations from the opening of the campaign to the close of the election," giving accounts of assaults upon respectable people, and upon ministers of the Gospel; one declaring that "during the two hours he was at the amendment headquarters, several persons came in from different wards who had been assaulted. Some had been egged. Some had been stoned and driven by violence away from the polls." Other gross and violent outrages were perpetuated by the whisky-be-deviled mobocrats to defeat the righteous cause of temperance and prohibition, and to fasten upon the people of the State the saloon curse and all the horrors that come of it. In most cases, it is asserted the police stood quietly by, witnessing these flagrant wrongs upon loyal citizens without rebuke, interference, or protest.

Such, fellow citizens, is the depraved and fearful state of things to which this exotic, this gross, sensual and devilish saloon, with the God-condemning and law-and-order defying power it has been allowed to attain, is bringing our country and its elections! And now what old-party paper has had the manliness or patriotism to expose and denounce these now common and menacing outrages as they deserve, or the wickedly-legalized cause that produces such flagrant outlawry? Not only do these papers fail to show up the hideous nature of this crime and misery-breeding traffic, but they sell their columns to its interests for money, pander to its power for votes, and advocate licensing its hellish dens for revenue!! O! how we need such an independent, untrammeled, fearless, outspoken political press as Horace Greely made the New York Tribune, forty years ago! They would admire and liberally support such journalism, as they did the dauntless and faithful Tribune, which became in consequence the leading and most popular journal in the United States.

It is just as much the duty of editors of newspapers to "cry aloud and spare not, and show the people their sins," as it is the duty of the ministers of the Gospel; and their responsibility is the greater, if anything, from the fact that the editors speak to thousands every day, while the ministers speak to a few hundreds only once or twice a week.

But, "it is an ill wind that blows no good to anybody." There is in this Nebraska election a source of rejoicing as well as regret and mortification, a source of encouragement to the friends of temperance and prohibition, facts which the old-party papers do not herald, that in the face of such gross and violent outrages, the iniquitious "perpetual license" scheme was defeated, and over 82,000 VOTES WERE CAST FOR CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION!! All hail Nebraska!

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

"Thrice is he armed who hath his quarrel just!"

So, Try, try AGAIN, Nebraska!

WORTH NOTING.—The secular press announces that Abbe Mesmer has started from Rome to assume his position at the head of the Roman Catholic University in Washington. In this case at least, we regret that the law which prohibits the importation of contract labor will not be enforced. We trust, however, that the American public will not lose sight of the fact that this new university is to be placed under the direction of a foreigner, and of one who comes with the blessing of a pope who, from his hatred of free institutions, continues to keep up the farce of his being a prisoner in the Vatican, and is arrayed in open antagonism to the civil law of Italy. If the man is like the master, we may reasonably expect that the consistent policy which has been so long maintained in Italy will not be forgotten in America.—Missionary Review.

THE COMMAND FOR TO-DAY.

The command of God, "Come out from among them and be ye separate," seems to be attracting increased attention among certain classes of religionists at the present time, and the lines between thoroughly loyal believers in Christ and these who seek to hold the world in one hand while professing his name, seem to be widening. God's people are distinctly commanded to "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," which, we contend, has pertinent reference to the marriage relation, business partnerships, and all social and fraternal organizations other than those with a distinctively Christian character. Any organization that admits Christians and men of the world on terms of equality is one where no Christian man can legitimately belong. The broad principle involved in this divine command for separation of church and world, will deny the right of Christian men to join and support lodges of Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and all the multitude of fraternities—in themselves good, bad and indifferent—which are growing to be as numerous as the frogs in Egypt. "In secret have I said nothing," was a statement characteristic of the ministry of Christ, as it will be of that of his followers. Secret oaths are open to the suspicion of disloyalty to the human government, as they are certainly disloyal to His government who said, "Swear not at all." Secret lodges take the time that belongs to God, the money that is needed for his cause, the effort that perishing souls urgently need, and all for the maintenance of a system that has a pernicious effect upon deep and fervent piety and degrades by its limitation the true meaning of the word "brother."

The National Christian Association, with its headquarters in Chicago, is set for the opposition of all secret societies, and for a reform movement concerning them among the churches of Christ. Its organ, the Christian Cynosure, is a 16-page weekly, which discusses fearlessly and fairly the various phases of the lodge question, and is a useful compendium of information on the subject, gathered from all parts of the country.—Messiah's Herald.

SECRET WORK IN ITALY.

The announcement that affairs in Italy have been brought to a crisis and that Sig. Crispi, the pupil and friend of Bismarck, has been forced to lay down the reins of government is certainly a surprise, but the crisis was not entirely unexpected. When Sig. Crispi a few years ago demanded the resignation of his colleague, Seismit-Doda, on account of his participation in an irridentist banquet, and intrusted the treasury department to Sig Grimaldi, a pronounced high-taxer, he sowed the wind, making his reaping of the whirlwind only a question of time.

The irridentists of Italy are the men who want to extend the Italian government—whether monarchy or republic is immaterial to them—over all territories inhabited by Italians which are now parts of the Austrian empire. They are nationalists of a very pronounced type, in the European sense of the term, and most cordial haters of the Austrian government if not of the entire German people. Their political affiliation lies largely with the old conservative party by whose overthrow Crispi came in power four years ago, and their sympathies are rather for than against the Pope and the Catholic hierarchy. Their real political strength is problematical, but their secret influence is of the most dangerous character, as they employ generally the most approved methods of exciting fanaticism—secret, oath-bound societies. To challenge their open hostility would, under all circumstances, have been a very risky step for Crispi to take, but he aggravated this risk by arousing another, an economic opposition —through adopting a high-tax policy.

Italian finances have not been very sound for a considerable period. Expenses have largely been maintained on the scale of extravagance which grew out of the many separate royal and ducal administrations and continued to impoverish united Italy just as much as she was oppressed before the accomplishment of national union. Doda had advocated reforms in administrative organization with a view to retrenchment, but his successor proposed to cover the existing deficit by increasing revenues derived from indirect taxation.

To make matters still worse, Crispi committed a great indiscretion when the question was presented to Parliament. He answered the protest against an increase of the burdens of taxation by charging the conservatives with having humiliated Italy into a position of dependency upon foreign powers through their financial policy, and this unfortunate allusion to the old Franco-Italian alliance brought out all the hidden nationalist fanaticism of the Roman race in the chambers, and a coalition of by no means homogeneous political forces which completely routed Crispi.

It is not at all probable, however, that this coalition will outlive the fall of Crispi many days. When the excitement cools down Italian statesmen will find it the wisest course to maintain Italy's present foreign relations in order to obtain time for a complete reorganization of the country upon an economic basis. Neither the irridentists nor the Vatican nor France will gain anything by Italy's present predicament, but it will unquestionably mark the beginning of economic reforms which are likely to wipe out of existence the last traces of the old regime.—Chicago Daily News.

A FARMER'S SERMON.

THE BUSINESS PRINCIPLES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

From a paper read before the Wichita, Kan., Association of Congregational Churches and Ministers, by Rev. T. C. Moffatt.

What are the teachings of the New Testament concerning the secular affairs of men? Strange to say most of them, or at least the most direct and positive ones, are found in the writings of the intensely spiritual apostle Paul; proof that the highest spirituality and the best common sense in temporal matters are not antagonistic.

Paul's first exhortation is to industry. He says to Titus, "Let our people also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses that they be not unfruitful." The margin gives us in this place "profess honest occupations" or "trades." Again, he says to the Thessalonians, "Study to be quiet and to do your own business and to work with your hands." He had given them the same charge when he was with them. The purpose of this industry he declares to be that they "may walk honestly toward them that are without and may have need of nothing." He exhorts the Romans to be "in diligence not slothful," or as the old version reads, "not slothful in business."

There is a class of men in our country whose principle of life it is, not only not to be diligent, but not to do any work whatever whenever it can possibly be avoided. He who can get along with doing the least is the best fellow. The man who can beat his way from Boston to California without spending a cent or doing a stroke of work, is among them a distinguished hero. This is a grievous social disease, and for it Paul prescribes heroic treatment. He instructed the Thessalonians both by letter and by word of mouth, "If any among you will not work neither let him eat."

The authorities ought to make the most earnest endeavor to distinguish between the honest laborer, in search of work, and the professional tramp, but when the latter is found the Pauline remedy ought to be applied vigorously enough to cure the evil.

Perhaps that injunction of Paul which most squarely antagonizes the business principles of our day, is his words to the Romans, "Owe no man anything but to love one another." These words have been translated out of very plain Greek into very plain English, but with what a foreign sound do they fall upon the ear of the Kansas boomer. They are totally contrary to his ideas.

Debts may be classified into three divisions, debts of necessity, debts of convenience and boom debts.

The second class is scarcely worth dwelling upon. There may be such a thing as necessary debts, yet we believe that the man who deliberately sets out to live up to this financial injunction of Paul as well as all other divine commands will be provided for up to the very very verge of miracle. It is our observation that most indebtedness and that which is pressing upon the public with such paralyzing, killing force is simply boom debt. Debt has been adopted as a business principle. If one wishes to embark in business and has not the requisite means the thing to do is to borrow all that seems to be needful and pay the interest demanded. Do not keep out of debt; take upon you all the debt you think you can get out from under. This is the road to success. And so the country is rotten with false capital, and we are a generation of boomers and rustlers and hustlers. When I hear these words I think of fine business blocks covered to the cupola with mortgages, with a little business in the front end of the rooms. I think of fine stocks of goods on every article of which there is a lien of some kind. I think of small towns with a system of waterworks and a stand-pipe high above the buildings, but not so high as the bonds voted to get it. I think of the farms plastered over with mortgages, some of them to buy costly and short-lived machinery, some of them to build fine buildings before the time, some of them to "put your money into stock," some to go into some great cattle-feeding speculation and some to "buy more land to raise more corn to feed more hogs." A friend of mine stood one day with a farmer on an eminence which commanded a wide view of farming country and asked him how many of the farms in sight were not mortgaged. The answer was, "One, possibly two." I see this same anti-Pauline business principle invading the ecclesiastical domain. I see two churches built where there ought to have been but one; I see churches built 40x50 when they ought to have been 30x40 and 30x40 when they ought to have been 20x30. I see the State superintendents and bishops and presiding elders in a state of perplexity over the scarcity of men,—not men of piety, not men of ability, not men of education, but men who can pick up the pieces of an exploded boom and build something out of them. Great is modern finance!

"Owe no man anything but to love one another." If we looked upon the Epistle to the Romans as a mere literary relic, we might say that Paul was an "old granny" who did not understand the financial methods of our grand and glorious modern civilization. But there are some of us who believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and when we see the ditch into which these modern financial methods have thrown us, all the more do these words of Paul sound to us like the voice of God. What shall we say to Christian churches that in the face of apostolic injunction cumber themselves with a load of obligations to the world? What shall we say of a church board whose business it is to help on the churches in their violation of the Pauline command? All over the West there are churches sitting in the ashes of discouragement, in an atmosphere of unpleasant letters, beneath the shadow of debts they owe to their church building boards, debts, many of them at least, utterly needless. But "credit," "loan," "mortgage," "on time," these are the watchwords of modern finance. Nor can men be made to see the folly of it. You shall see a man stick and hang for twenty-five cents on a little trade and then you shall see that same man give his note for a hundred dollars for an article that can be purchased for ninety dollars cash and calmly go on to pay ten per cent interest on it for perhaps five years. Do you suppose you can convince him that he has simply paid a hundred and fifty dollars for a ninety-dollar article? Try it, and you will be a wiser man. Great is modern finance! And we are told that the wealth of the country is all running into the hands of a few men. I do not wonder that it does. I wonder they do not get it faster than they do. I wonder they do not get it all. But if we cannot put this matter on grounds of common sense, may we not put it on grounds purely Christian? May not those who believe in Paul as an apostle be made to believe in Paul's financial injunctions? How can a man stand on the highest Christian ground who owes anything?

Paul repeatedly enjoins his converts to work with their hands, and was proud of the fact that he could do so and did so himself. He had at least one trade and often worked at it. A little investigation will show that no small part of the difficulties of people to-day is due to the fact that they do not know how to work with their hands, or if so, their ability in this direction is quite limited. The last generation made a grave mistake in the education of the present one. Their motto in many cases was "Educate, educate, educate," but they meant by education simply intellectual education. Education of the mind seemed to them the summum bonum. Let a boy but be well trained in the learning of the schools and his future success and prosperity they felt to be assured. The result was that a large percentage of the youth from their natural bent got away without any intellectual training to speak of, while the rest would now be better off if they knew how to do more things with their hands. This is preeminently true of our agricultural population. Nobody can truthfully deny that the agricultural interests of our country are in a deplorable shape. Nor can any one deny that, as agriculture is the fundamental industry, its decay or embarrassment places all other legitimate interests in a precarious condition. The remedies proposed are various. Some blame the farmers for not using better methods, keeping better stock, and being more saving of their present products.

But so long as the conditions under which they are now working exist we cannot see how this would avail anything. The more they adopted better methods the more they must, the more saving they were of what is now produced the more they must be, the better stock they kept the better they would be obliged to keep and the market would still take "all that the traffic will bear." The difficulty is somewhere else.

The farmers organize into alliances, but those of us who have had to do with one alliance movement, who nursed it when it was weak and sat up with it when it died, will not be very sanguine of the success of such combinations. There is nothing political or commercial that they can do except to act as a temporary disturbing force. The only thing they might do to an advantage would be to teach their members, and especially the young, sound, Christian business principles, but this is the very thing above everything else that they will not do. It is a great deal easier to lament over the poor crops or low prices as the case may be and lay it to John J. Ingalls. Under present conditions it is always either poor crops or low prices or both.

Paul's deliverance on the agricultural question is this, "The husbandman that laboreth must be the first to partake of the fruits." But how? After years of study over the matter I have come to believe that the answer to this question lies in no small measure in Paul's injunction to the Thessalonians, "Study to do your own business and to work with your hands." But does not the farmer work with his hands? Yes, in certain directions but not in directions enough so that he can be said to study to do his "own business." He does not study independence. The attempt has been made to place the farming business on the same plane as other trades, to reduce the number of products to as few as possible and by producing an immense amount of one or two staples to secure money to procure other necessities. The course of agriculture for some years has been marked by the decay of domestic industries. It is boasted of by agricultural and household writers, says Mrs. Helen E. Starrett, "Clothes-making, soap-making, starch-making, laundry-work, coffee-browning, yeast-making, butter-making—all are gone." And she proposes to send after them cookery. Yes, these and a thousand other domestic industries indoors and out are gone, but when they went they took with them the farmer's independence.

He must now go into the market and give "whatever the traffic will bear." His position is altogether different from that of others. He alone must take the prices of others both ways, and in the nature of the case there seems to be no way to help it. He is at the mercy of everybody, especially if he be in debt. If now there be no compensating element in the case his condition is a sorry one. But there is such a compensating element. It consists in the number of things he may do with his hands, if he will, to supply his needs independent of everybody else. But the farmers have to a great extent thrown away this compensation and forgotten the arts of their fathers. How many of them can lay a stone wall, or hew a timber, or put up a building, or sew a strap, or cobble a shoe, or weld an iron? They say this is not their trade. Many of them cannot saw a board nor cure a ham nor do a multitude of things they need to have done. It is not their trade. And so they go out into the great commercial mill to be ground to powder between the nether millstone of the prices they must take and the upper millstone of the prices they must pay. I am sometimes astonished that men who are loud in support of a national protective system will, when it comes to the adminstration of their own little empires of 80, 160, or 320 acres, go and do the exact opposite. They are in favor of building up our national manufacturing industries, but when it comes to their own farms they do just exactly what the nation would do if we had absolute free trade. If the farmer would adopt the policy of producing to a greater extent the things needed to supply his wants, would he not be more independent and prosperous?

If the money that has been spent for Russian apples and apricots and other impracticable fruits, or the money that has been paid out for seeds that ought to have been saved at home had been invested in forest trees, or if the osage hedges that have been set had been planted in forest form, what difference would it make to the Kansas farmers to-day how much the coal traffic would bear?

When every farmer's boy can work in wood, iron, stone and leather, when he can cure meats, when he can build a plain house from the lowest stone in the cellar wall to the last brick on the chimney, when he understands how, so far as is possible within reasonable bounds, to supply his wants from the farm, it will not make so much difference about tariffs and monopolies and grain gambling and the money in circulation. And a general commercial system built upon the foundation of such an agricultural ideal would be a sound structure. True, it might not help on the phenomenal growth of our cities in which we take such a braggart interest, but the whole financial system would not tremble every time the hot wind was drying up the corn crop.

The prophet Zechariah asks, "Who hath despised the day of small things?" If it were not for the circumstance of his being dead he might find the answer in Kansas. We are continually engaged on the problem of the big. We have no patience with small beginnings or anything that is small. We want everything on a grand scale, pretentious, brilliant. We want everything to go up like a rocket even if it does speedily come down like the stick. All this is foreign to the spirit of New Testament Christianity. "Content with such things as ye have" is an apostolic injunction which, while it does not contravene an honorable advancement, does emphatically antagonize the spirit of the Western boomer.

I am aware that these business principles of the New Testament are very old-fashioned. They are no new departure, no new political economy. But they go clear around, through, over and under all the industrial questions of the day. The precepts of the old Bible are sufficient for all things.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Superstition in New England—Activity among the liquor men—The N. H. W. C. T. U. accept a Portsmouth brewer's money—Lack of permanent result in revivals.

More or less superstition seems to be inherent in the human mind, and I doubt whether the highest civilization is after all so much of an eliminating factor as is generally supposed. It is true that superstition in a civilized community will take on other and more agreeable forms than in one that is uncivilized, and this seems to be about all the material difference. I have met with those from the old country who believed firmly in spooks and fairies, while one can find plenty of native-born Yankees who are as staunch disciples of astrology as ever were found among the disciples of Dr. Dee. The study of the stars in their supposed relation to human destiny has been widely revived of late years. Spiritualism has had its humbuggery and impostures so many times and so fully revealed that it is somewhat on the down grade, though still numbering multitudes of believers; but astrology is comparatively a new fad. There is something fascinating in the idea of reading one's future by the stars, and thinking that we are really of sufficient importance to have our lives mapped out in the heavens ages before we came into being. I do not pretend to know anything about the books which treat of this science, if such it may be called, or the general character of those who make their living by its practice; but that it may be as disastrous as Spiritualism to an ill-balanced mind seems proved by the sad case of a woman in Brockton, Mass., who recently poisoned herself and three children because an astrologer had told her her husband was unfaithful to her. This desire to gain knowledge by other than the normal human faculties, always seemed to me part and parcel of Satan's old temptation to Eve, "Ye shall be as gods." The inherent God-given dignity of man is always sacrificed when not content to be made "a little lower than the angels;" we aspire to be made a little higher. John Weiss, in treating on Spiritualism, has something so fine on this point that I cannot forbear quoting: "Did Saul wear his crown when he went off by night to see the witch of Endor? No; 'he disguised himself and put on other raiment, and he went and two men with him,' dethroned, dismantled, and defrauded of himself.'" How many visit these modern necromancers as did Saul, with a sense of shame that makes them want to go in secret, thus degrading and lowering themselves in their illicit search after the hidden things of the future.

There is much activity among liquor men and the friends of temperance are bestirring themselves, but none too soon. New Hampshire's most effective prohibition law is what is known as the nuisance act, and Frank Jones with his Democratic and Republican allies are doing their best to secure a repeal, but it will be a sorry day for the Republican party when they do. A strong and concerted movement is also being made in Massachusetts to weaken the existing liquor laws—notably the anti-bar law. As we have a Democratic governor strongly committed to this step, there is much in the present situation of things to embolden those who advocate such repeal. Mr. Dudley, secretary of the Law and Order League, has promptly accepted the challenge of the Herald to show that the sit-down drink is better than the stand-up drink, and in a scathing letter to its editor, says that his chief reason for not wishing the law repealed is that all the liquor dealers desire it—and surely this is reason enough. If the open bar and the stand-up drink is so much more favorable to temperance than the opposite state of things, why should they want their sales diminished by going back to the old way? It is like lodgemen "breathing out threatenings and slaughter" against an anti-secret speaker, while claiming all the time that he is helping to bring more members into the lodge.

But if liquor men and Masons are not consistent, the world expects all white ribboners to be. The "Mercy Home" for fallen women is a noble charity which has been lately opened under the sheltering wing of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. But I grieve to say that they have accepted $100 (a very trifling sum, by the way) from the wife of Frank Jones, the money in question being given to her by her husband for that purpose. But does not Mrs. Knox, and all those pure and true women of New Hampshire who are marshaled under her leadership, know that the great curse of their fallen sisters, which is continually dragging them back again to the pit from which they have been rescued, is the drink habit? Do they not know that by means of a glass of liquor has been achieved the ruin of many an innocent girl? Are they ignorant of the fact (I state these things on the authority of the Worcester Weekly Times) that three most revolting wife-murders have been committed within four years by drunken men—almost under the shadow of Frank Jones' mammoth breweries? Are they aware that in Portsmouth jail three women accused of murder are now in one cell, two of which cases are directly and the third indirectly the result of the drink curse? Well does the Times call Portsmouth "the modern Sodom." But when the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. accepts money made in a business that has so cursed one of the oldest Puritan settlements in New England, there is danger that the organization will meet the fate of Lot's wife. We have fossilized churches enough that are dead as tombstones, and the Granite State will soon have a fossilized W. C. T. U. if they continue to accept money which is the price of blood—and from a man whose enormous wealth and vast political power has done more to defeat prohibition in New England than any other cause.

This reminds me of Dr. Meredith's assertion which has stirred up so much feeling lately in connection with the Moody meetings, that after the first Moody and Sankey campaign in Boston, strong, deep and successful as the work seemed to be, "there was no perceptible diminution in the tide of sin and misery in the city, no decrease of Sabbath desecration, intemperance and crime." So the great revival of 1858 seemed if anything to leave the public conscience more hardened on the subject of slavery and rivet still closer the Negro's fetters. But it is my hope and belief that among the young evangelists now coming to the front the Lord has his Elijahs who will not shun to declare his whole counsel in regard to the secret works of darkness and every popular sin.

REFORM NEWS.

THE MOUNTAIN MISSION WORK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The white population of the Southern States was formerly divided into two classes: the planters occupying the rich arable lands with their numerous slaves; and the mountain whites, who dwelt among the narrow valleys and along the rugged highlands of the country. They were descended originally from the Scotch and the Scotch Irish, and were possessed of firm and rugged natures. But centuries of seclusion from the rest of mankind, without education, and deprived of the business training common to men, has weakened them greatly. Possessed of few conveniences and comforts, often in want of the absolute necessities of life, they have little that they can call their own and little to labor for. There is probably no portion of the human family who need the Gospel, the missionary and the school more than the dwellers among the mountains of Virginia, Tennessee and the Carolinas. Having no slaves they generally remained true to the country, unless by force compelled to join the confederate army. So the American Missionary Association early began to care for them in their isolation and poverty. Secretism found little material for its unholy manipulations among these simple people; and the National Christian Association puts forth the hand of friendship to greet them.

Sherwood, Tenn., is in the midst of such a population, in a narrow valley in sight of the mountains of Alabama. Here is a flourishing American Missionary Association mission, with a church and an advanced Normal Academy. Rev. S. E. Lathrop, who has charge of this mission, is doing a very kind and faithful work, visiting from house to house, and caring for the sick, and dividing missionary boxes and barrels among the needy and destitute. Mrs. Lathrop, besides assisting in this work, has a large class in needle work. Some are married women, and there are many young people and little girls. They meet every week and prepare garments and bed quilts to be sent to the relief of the needy and destitute in distant places. The materials are furnished and sent here by the friends of missions from abroad, who are interested in this work, and give many barrels and boxes of clothing, shoes, books and papers for these mountain people.

The Academy is under the care of Prof. Hannum, and contains several grades. The higher mathematics and Latin are included; and Mrs. Hannum has charge of what might be called an infant class of thirty little ones, learning their A B C. This institution is doing, I think, a very important work for this people. The Carpenter anti-secrecy books I found in good order in the library here; and I understand that there are no secret societies in the place. I preached twice and assisted in the administration of the Lord's Supper, besides delivering two or three brief addresses during my stay in Sherwood. I was kindly cared for in Bro. Lathrop's family and felt much improved in health in consequence.

January 23d I went to Decherd to visit Terrill College, a new institution which is named after Pres. I. E. Terrill. They have a large, fine, new building, and some two hundred students. Pres. Terrill was the principal of the Winchester Normal two years ago, when we donated some of our anti-secrecy books to them; these books, he told me, he had placed in the college library at Decherd. They have no secret societies in the college.

On the 30th I went to Sewanee and spent the day looking through the University of the South, an Episcopal institution. As it was vacation, most of the students and faculty (General Kirby Smith is Professor of Mathematics, I believe,) were absent and I could do nothing but leave a few tracts in the library. The library and other buildings of the University are large, and show much architectural taste; but they are built apart from each other on the knobs of the hills, in the midst of the original forests. The shade is no doubt very delightful; but the rocks and sand of which the hills are composed, have little adaptation for farming or horticulture. On the 31st of January I arrived in Chattanooga.

NOTES FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

McALEVY'S FORT, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The cause which is so ably presented by your paper and lecturers of the Association, has been brought freshly to the minds of many of the followers of Christ in our valley, by a welcome visit from W. B. Stoddard. Accepting the truth set forth in the able address of Pres. Blanchard, namely, the strongholds of Satan to-day are the false priestism of papacy, Mormonism, paganism, spirit worship, the blindness in part of the Jews, and the lodges of Christless worship the world over—believing this to be true the exhortation of Paul to the Hebrews comes forcibly to our minds, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we let them slip." The Association is doing excellent work along this line and it will bear fruit in days to come.

Bro. Stoddard, while quite a young man, is a living testimony of what young men can do when God's grace is the motive power in the heart, enabling them to witness for the truth. The cause is not popular with a large class. When a sin is as dear as a right hand or a right eye, we do not want to see it. It is not strange that the friends of the cause speak evil of its defenders. So we have some here that did not regard his teachings as truths of God's Word. One of our public school teachers when requested to announce Bro. Stoddard's lecture, replied that he could not do so without violating his conscience. This exemplary young man (?) is a church member and belongs to the "Golden Eagles." Naturally we would expect to find one with such a keen sense of right and wrong active in all kinds of Christian work. Such, I am sorry to say, is not the case. While nominally a professor of religion, his every-day life would not lead us to think he had been born again. If his zeal for the Master's cause equaled his zeal for the order, no doubt his conscience would be a more correct moral guide, and his meat and his drink would be to promote the cause of Christ. While being personally acquainted with many young men who are members of secret orders, I have never known one that was full of the Holy Spirit.

The order in our midst that is most popular is the "Golden Eagles." True, it is a little one compared with the parent order, Masonry. Yet it is the little foxes that spoil the vines. And when we tolerate little sins we are led to greater ones. The members of this order are making active efforts to get young men, some of them mere boys, into it. In it are many young men, professed followers of Christ, extending the right hand of fellowship to, and claiming as brothers,

CORRESPONDENCE.

STATE LAW REPORTS FURNISH PROOF.

WESTON, Mich., Feb. 4, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I like the Cynosure for its out-spoken independence. The last two numbers are especially rich in reports and correspondence. Rev. Roland D. Grant's address is indeed refreshing. There is so much toadying to secret orders among the ministers of to-day, that the glory of the everlasting Gospel of Christ is in danger of being lost sight of. I am glad there are some Baptist ministers, as well as others, who have not bowed the knee to Baal. The old Jezebel of the lodge will doubtless hunt them as their foremother did Elijah, but God will take care of them and will commission them to organize work for the overthrow of the false worships, even as he did his ancient servant. Let them not be discouraged. There are more than seven thousand men in America who have not bowed to, nor kissed, Baal. May the number of such faithful watchmen on the walls of Zion be greatly increased.

Those of your readers who wish to find legal evidence that Masonic oaths and obligations have been revealed and made public property, will find it in Wendell's N. Y. Supreme Court reports, vol. 13, pp. 9–22. The same can also be found in the Missouri Law reports. The former of these reports can be found in almost every good law library. They put a quietus on the oft-repeated assertion that Masonry has never been revealed. Of course those who have read Morgan, Finney, Bernard, Ronayne, Doesberg and others, believe it now, but in these reports the evidence becomes simply incontrovertible. Yours for the truth,

C. QUICK.

A CASE BEFORE THE GREAT JUDGE.

DAYTON, O., Feb. 3, 1891.

Sabbath morning I preached in the Union Baptist church. They are in the midst of a revival. The gallery, isles and front of the pulpit were all filled up. Steps are being taken to put up a larger building. Last year I preached a series of discourses here. The colored people take as deep an interest in our work as the white. On Sabbath evening I preached in Finley M. E. chapel, Rev. Mr. Roughton, pastor. This young man is accomplishing a good work. His audiences have increased greatly. This church has been in a low state for many years. Their membership had run down, little money in the treasury, and not able (as they thought) to support a pastor. But the last conference sent them Bro. Roughton to make a trial. They are getting together, old members are coming back, all expenses are met and money in the treasury, and their hearts strengthened. Better days are in store for them.

At the close of my sermon the pastor said: "One week ago last Friday a man in this church hired to work for a certain firm in this city. Saturday evening the proprietor said, 'You must come and work to-morrow.'

" 'I cannot do that. I go to church on Sabbath.'

" 'If you do not come Sabbath you need not come Monday.'

" 'Well, just consider. I have been out of work. My wife and three children are hungry. We have had sickness and a doctor bill is to pay. I want to work.'

" 'You must work Sabbath or not at all.'

" 'Then, I will not work at all.'

"He came to church last Sabbath and told me. I went Monday to the man who had discharged him and said: 'You must come here and work next Sabbath or else stay away altogether.' 'Well, who owns this establishment?' 'Why, you do. I am not speaking for myself; I am pleading for a man whose wife and children are hungry.' 'I know who you mean; say nothing more. Go, tell him to come and I will take him back.'

"I went to hunt him. He was wheeling in coal from the street. The work was too heavy for him. He had no breakfast and was hungry. He was trying to get bread for his children. He fell before I reached him, and soon he died. I went back to the works and said to the proprietor: 'I came to tell you that man will not be back.' 'Why?' 'There is a trial on hand and he has been summoned as a witness.' 'What is the trial for?' 'Murder.' 'Murder! Who is the murderer?' 'You are the man. He died of hunger and a broken heart. He has gone to give his testimony before the Judge above. You will be summoned presently to answer to the charge of murder.'

"It is just as certainly murder to kill a man by heartless cruelty, relentless greed, and pitiless tyranny as to shoot him in cold blood. Many who scrupulously observe the Sabbath will have the charge of murder preferred against them at the last day."

On Tuesday afternoon I lectured in Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton. They have between fifty and sixty students. Two of their number went to West Africa as missionaries last term. In the mission to which they went a great revival is in progress. People come in from points 100 miles distant, find Christ and cast away their idols. The impressions of that revival were noted 1,500 miles in the interior.

A Prohibition convention is in progress in Dayton. Hon. John P. St. John spoke Monday night. He took President Harrison to task for attending banquets where he drank wine; and Vice President Morton for keeping a saloon in Washington. I was struck with Mr. Thompson's plea for funds. He said: "The Presbyterian church has 750,000 members. Last year they contributed $14,000,000. Deducting all home expenses and still you have left $4,000,000. Why cannot the Prohibitionists do as well. The Presbyterians gave $14,000,000 to save 35,000 souls last year. Why can we not give $14,000,000 this year to save 60,000 from a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell. The chairman urges that each be a committee of one to personally solicit funds. Another urged that every member of the party give systematically. That would provide the sinews of war. One can see that conscience is at work in these men.

J. M. FOSTER.

FARMERS' ORGANIZATIONS.

WEST UNITY, O.

I have been reading much in the last year about the reasons for the great movement of the farmers. I take the Ohio Farmer and the Farm and Home, which gives much information about the Farmers' League, Farmers' Alliance, Farmers' clubs, Industrial Union and Patrons of Industry; and as a man in Michigan thought it was a Democratic trick to establish the P. of I. only in Republican sections to defeat the Republican party, I wish to state in the Cynosure that the P. of Industry originated in Michigan, and is a non-partisan organization. Most all of the farmers in this country have joined it, and I have a chance to learn much about it and its objects.

As near as I can learn by reading farmers' papers, all their organizations are striving to better the laws of our nation. There has been so much class legislation enacted, it has brought serious depression on the farmers. The census-taker said at my house that two-thirds of the farmers he finds are mortgaged in our locality; and we live in a good country. Some laws that are favoring all other classes at the farmers' expense, should be amended or abolished; and as all other classes have organized to protect themselves and dictated to the legislature to favor their occupation, it is by concerted action only that the farmers can get their rights again as American citizens. It may be some of them advocate for a while the passing of laws that would be class legislation, but as the most of the farmers want truly American laws, I don't think they will aim to have anything but equal rights to all and special favors to none.

I will state what they wish: a law to procure the just taxation among the people; diminishing of National, State and county salaries; prohibition of National and State waste of moneys; free coinage of silver and the nation to manufacture all the money and put it in circulation, and take the management of the money business out of the control of national banks, so they cannot produce a money panic whenever they wish and bring great trouble on the people that are less wealthy; the prohibition of alien ownership of lands; the proper restrictions on railroad fare and freight; to stop extortions and to improve the condition of the nation generally; to educate one another in the best ways of agriculture and farm management. As far as I know most all the recent organizations are not secret, and have no religious form of receiving members nor forms of prayer; but they are for educative, social, and co-operative purposes.

B. J. BORTON.

A FAMOUS ANTI-MASON.

YORK, Pa., Jan. 28, 1891.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I have lately read a book entitled "Myron Holley; and what he did for Liberty and True Religion." Elizur Wright, of Boston, Mass., was probably its author.

Some of your readers may not know that Myron Holley was one of the great leaders of the Anti-masons during the Morgan crusade; that he was a prominent leader in the construction of the great Erie canal; that the great State of New York swindled him out of thirty thousand dollars; that the same great Empire State owes his children and grand-children one hundred thousand dollars now; that he was one of the leading men in the Liberty party of 1840; and that the American anti-secret party is really the grand-child of the famous old Liberty party.

Myron Holley was a red-hot American; and the book I am writing about is a red-hot book. It would burn the fingers, scorch the eyes, and singe the eyebrows of the politicians who now manage the Democratic-Republican menageries, saloons, caucuses, etc.

Myron Holley died in 1841, but his spirit still lives; and we have his burning words and his noble example before us. In the future I expect to place this great Anti-masonic writer and statesman before the Cynosure readers, from time to time, to drive away any chills that may be running up and down the backs of all our lukewarm friends. EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

NATIONAL ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF GOD.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In your issue of 25th of December I said, if some good brother would show us wherein we were wrong in not incorporating, voting, and holding offices, which require an oath to a constitution and government which has cast off God and his law and put "we the people" in their place, I would be much obliged.

But the good brother has not attempted to answer my question, but in Yankee fashion has asked me another, which I think if he had understood my article he would see was already answered. I think I stated that I knew of no other remedy for the sin and wickedness of our nation but to repent and return to God and take his law for our rule in all civil matters; then we could all vote. But if we incorporate with a government that does not acknowledge God nor his Son for the sake of getting good men into office, I fear we would be doing evil that good might come. It seems to me that to vote good men into office to carry on a corrupt government is like putting the cart before the horse; or like trying to build a nice structure on a rotten foundation. We read in Isaiah 9: 6, "For unto us a child is born; unto us a son is given; and the government shall be on his shoulder." This is the true foundation to build our civil structure on. If we build on any other it will be like the house built on the sand, sooner or later to fall, and great will be the fall of it. If our good brother, O. Tichenor, thinks I have not answered his questions fully, I will say to him we may have God in the Constitution by petitioning Congress to make an amendment. We believe in voting for amendments.

JOSIAH DIVOLL.

ZEAL FOR GOD NEEDED.

DEAR FELLOW CHRISTIANS who have been redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, that we from henceforth should live unto him as those alive from the dead, counting not our own lives dear unto ourselves, as readers of the Cynosure you are doubtless aware that we are approaching a crisis, and that an advance should be made at once all along the line. Our leaders have pressed the conflict to the gates, and shall they not be supported by all of us? Away with all fears of the enemy, as of the loss of friendship, property, or anything else. If Christ dwells in us the hope of glory, can we not fight the good fight of faith, and live here as strangers and pilgrims, seeking a city out of sight, "whose builder and maker is God?"

It is necessary that the list of Cynosure subscribers should be raised to ten thousand at once, and circulated all over the land. After all that has been said and done, but few comparatively know that there is such a paper. The great religious papers of our day appear to stand in dread of Masonic influence, and hardly dare say a word, while our young men are being swept into the lodge vortex. Surely it is time that we who know these things should be up and doing what we can, to create a healthy Christian sentiment against the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry. It is of the earth, earthy, worldly to the core.

We might expect unbelievers to be Masons; but what a spectacle to see professed Christians, even some ministers, knocking at the tyled doors at night "seeking light."

Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity and grieve not the Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.

F. A. ARMSTRONG.

PITH AND POINT.

A GOOD SORT OF A CHRISTIAN GIVES A GOOD REASON FOR RENEWING.

I thought I would drop the paper as I am taking so many, but it ought to be read by many around here, as three-fourths of the people belong to some secret society, and I am almost alone in our neighborhood; on that account thought I had better take it another year. After I read I send it to some one whom I hope may be set to thinking. The farmers are mostly Alliance men. Hoping this nation will see its error before long, and the Christians theirs also, I remain as ever an anti-secret society Christian.—JOHN MCLAREN.

REV. JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

The celebration at Wheaton in recognition of the past services of this man was most fitting. We had long felt that he was deserving more from both church and state than he was receiving. Fearlessly and uncompromisingly he has withstood the Goliath of oppression and wrong when others have cowed before power or been bought with flattery and favor. His early and earnest espousal of reform makes him a worthy example to the young men of this age. His self-sacrifice is beginning to be appreciated by those who have hated him without a cause. He will be even more appreciated by the next generation. We will teach our children and tell them to teach their children, to love and reverence his name for his uncompromising life-work in the cause of oppressed humanity.—(Rev.) B. M. AMSDEN, Manchester, Iowa.

READY TO VOTE HIS PRINCIPLES.

It has not been my privilege to do much for our reforms for the past twenty-five years except to vote for all of them in church, state and nation. I have distributed a number of tracts, books and copies of the Cynosure as I have had opportunity and received the consequent odium, ostracism and contempt that was the lot of the Master and all his true followers, ever since. It did not occur to me that I could do any more until I received your last circular. I therefore gladly comply with your request to send you names of some who I think would be likely to subscribe for the Cynosure. I have frequently asked persons to subscribe for it that professed to be friendly for the reform, but they look on it as detrimental to their interests in business, and their standing in popular society, etc. I am ready to do all that I can to put down and put away every sin, and to fearlessly advocate every virtue and truth. I hope to hear from some of the dear Cynosure friends when convenient. My very ardent and humble prayers are ever with you for our beloved Master s sake.—A. O. HOWELL, Champaign, Ill.

THE PITHIEST.

The older I get, and the more I see, hear and read the less love and respect I have for lodgery.—R. CANNING.

A great agitation stirs this city from the mischief of this secret work. But God reigns; may we ever do his will.—MRS. A. B. H., Philadelphia, Pa.

God bless the editor and guide the contributors to the Cynosure, that it may be a light to lead professed Christians out of the quagmire of secretism.—JAMES DRUMMOND.

I have taken the Cynosure almost from the time it was first published, without an interval except at the time of the Chicago fire, and that was short.—A. K. R., Northfield, O.

I intend to continue the Cynosure and will send money when my time is out. May the Lord bless it. I send every paper to some one through the mail. They need line upon line, precept upon precept.—S. L. WOOD.

The last is a magnificent number of the Cynosure. What a masterpiece is Miss Flagg's "Woman's Answer," for example! But it is by no means the only thing that makes the number notable and powerful.—(Rev.) J. ROBINSON.

By a kind providence the Christian Cynosure has fallen into my hand, and I believe that it speaks the truth on the different secret lodges. If you will send me some copies I will try and get some subscribers.—MRS. M. ROSS, Stratford, N. H.

The extra copies of the Cynosure, with the "Calculator," were received. Thanks. No difficulty in finding readers for them, but it is not so easy to secure subscribers, as things now are. I shall continue the effort and send in a name whenever one can be obtained.—W. C. B., Humboldt, Neb.

I thank you for what I receive each week from the Cynosure, which has become to me a household necessity, each issue bearing truths that I would could be imprinted upon the hearts of many, to whom I am sure it would be most useful. It is "The Truth" that makes free.—H. C. SPENCER, Wysox, Pa.

The Health Calendar came in due season. We find the recipes very valuable. I know of no better way for a person to invest a little money than to subscribe for the Cynosure and get the Calendar. I think if they will follow the good, wholesome teachings of the paper, and the good, wholesome recipes of the Calendar, they may be quite happy in this world as well as the world to come.—MISS M. E. MASON.

LITERATURE.

MEMORABILIA OF REV. DR. GEO. B. CHEEVER AND MRS. E. W. CHEEVER. 600 pages. Price, $2.00, cloth. John Wiley & Sons, 53 E. Tenth St., New York.

This volume, from the press of John Wiley & Sons, New York, is, as its name indicates, a miscellaneous collection of pieces which bear on the life and work of Rev. Dr. Cheever. It contains an introductory sketch by his brother, Rev. Henry T. Cheever, a funeral address by Rev. Dr. H. M. Booth, two parts and an appendix. Part first contains a very interesting story of the life of Mrs. Cheever, and her picture engraved on steel is the first page of part first, and a full page engraving of Rev. Dr. Cheever is found as a frontispiece of the book. The story of her life is intensely interesting and the record of her kindly service for the employed, the poor and the needy is adapted to render any careful reader more Christian in thought and action.

Part second contains the anniversary poems which Dr. Cheever was accustomed to write for his wife on the anniversary of their marriage day. There are forty-one of these anniversary poems, chaste and tender in thought, and usually elegant and powerful in expression. Her death, Nov. 19, 1888, of course put a period to these tokens of conjugal affection. There are other poems found in the volume which are largely religious and devotional, if not entirely so. His labor in reform enterprises seems to have been too direct and earnest to find expression in poetry. It was in oratory that he flamed forth against slavery, intemperance and other public iniquities. There are three or four great lessons already in his writings, contained in this work. The first one has been already referred to. The deep abiding affection which existed between this husband and wife are worthy of all praise and imitation in this age of general demoralization. The thoughts which are uttered concerning the care and training of children are of most abiding and transcendant importance. The third thought which is suggested is that of fidelity to the present truth. The whole life of this strong man was devoted to protests against the evils which were throned and crowned and sceptered in his day. He lived to see wrought marvelous changes, and yet died without the complete entrance on the promised land of which he prophesied and toward which he sought to lead the people of God. The last suggestion which may be made is that the divine promise of long life and temporal prosperity were, in the case of this brother as in so many others, fulfilled. Forty-one years he journeyed happily toward heaven with the companion of his youth. Until he had attained a ripe old age he lingered among men, his eye undimmed and his natural force unabated, and when at last his work was done, the record completed and ready for his departure, he left behind him not only the long and splendid service which he had been permitted to offer to the truth, but a share of the good things of this world to continue in various benevolent societies, the labors which during his life he had been glad to perform.

The book is one which may well be read and pondered by all those who stand at the dividing of the ways, and who are questioning whether to devote their lives to the service of God and humanity, or to seek by some other method the honor and immortality which can only in this way be secured.

Following the very able paper of Dr. McNiece, in the December number Our Day for January gives the report of the conferences held by the editor Joseph Cook and Mrs. Cook in Salt Lake last December. The opinions gathered at these meetings throw great light on the recent Mormon movements, and confirm the judgment of Mr. Cook in distrusting the Woodruff manifesto advising against polygamy. Dr. Crafts reviews in a cheerfully written paper the progress of Sabbath reform in 1890. The unfortunate meeting of the Sabbath Union will not check the progress of this grand movement. The Monday lecture of this number discusses in Mr. Cook's masterly style the "Scientific Temperance Instruction in Public Schools." The departments of "Editorial Notes" takes up the principles of the Farmers' Alliance and assassination as a weapon of secret societies.

The portrait of Talleyrand, by the famous French artist Greuze, forms the frontispiece to the February Century. The installment of the Talleyrand Memoirs in that number deals almost entirely with Talleyrand's relations with Napoleon Bonaparte. Talleyrand apologizes for taking office under the Directory; describes his first meeting with Bonaparte; then apologizes for supporting Bonaparte, and tells a number of interesting anecdotes concerning him. The installment closes with a very interesting report of the meeting between Napoleon, Goethe and Wieland. Miss Clare de Graffenreid, of the U. S. Labor Bureau, opens the number with a striking paper on "The Georgia Cracker in the Cotton Mills," illustrated by studies from life by Mr. Kemble. The California series reaches the discovery of gold, an account of which is given by John S. Hittell, Esq., the historian, accompanied by attractive illustrations,—among them a fac-simile of an entry in the diary of H. W. Bigler (one of the party of discovery), which fixes beyond peradventure the date of the discovery as the 24th of January, 1848, instead of the 19th, as still celebrated by the pioneer societies. There are also a view of Sutter's Mill, a map of the Placer Regions of California, portraits of Marshall the discoverer, and interesting caricatures of the rush to the diggings. In the department of "Californiana," is given Marshall's own account of the gold discovery as taken down from his lips in '49 at Coloma. A third paper by Gen. John Bidwell completes his narrative of events before the gold discovery, and deals with "Fremont in the Conquest of California," setting forth a view of those events somewhat in conflict with that of General Fremont. Among the illustrations of this article is a striking full-page engraving of Kit Carson. A brief series is begun in this number by George R. Parkin on "The Anglo-Saxon in the Southern Hemisphere," this article referring to the "Working Man in Australia."

Among the instructive articles for young readers in St. Nicholas for February are Max Bennett's account of "How the Mails are Carried." Pen and pencil combine to unravel the mysteries of the postal service,—how the letters are transported, assorted, and dropped at their destination. Noah Brooks continues his story of the Kansas settlers. Such narratives are fast becoming historical now that our railways take new settlers to their farms with ready-made houses to set up. One of the most attractive things in the number is "A Little Girl's Diary in the East," wherein a little miss of ten tells in her own way, and very nicely too, of a trip to the top of the Pyramids.

"It is interesting to know," says America of this city, "that the articles relating to points of Roman Catholic doctrine for Chamber's Encyclopedia have been revised by Cardinal Manning. To-day there is only one modern encyclopedia out of which the truth respecting the Roman Catholic church and its doctrines has not been expurgated. They are all blind lights except one."

People who use arsenical preparations for their complexion, do so at the risk of their lives. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is guaranteed free from any injurious drug, and is, therefore, the safest as well as the most powerful blood medicine in the world. It makes the skin clear.

Attention! If you desire a fine head of hair of a natural hue and free from dandruff, Hall's Hair Renewer is the best and safest preparation to accomplish it.

We should esteem it a special favor if our readers would kindly name the Cynosure when answering any advertisement in our columns.

right at the seat of difficulty, is accomplished by the sure and steady aim of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Don't fool around with a pop-gun, nor a "Flint-lock," when this reliable "Winchester" is within reach!

Dr. Sage's treatment of Catarrh in the Head is far superior to the ordinary, and when directions are reasonably well followed, results in a permanent cure. Don't longer be indifferent to the verified claims of this unfailing Remedy.

The worst forms of Catarrh disappear with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties effect a perfect and permanent cure, no matter how bad the case, or of how long standing. It's a remedy that succeeds where everything else has failed. Thousands of such cases can be pointed out. That's the reason its makers back their faith in it with money. They offer $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which they cannot cure.

It's a medicine that allows them to take such a risk.

Doesn't common sense lead you to take such a medicine?

"An advertising fake" you say.

Funny, isn't it, how some people prefer sickness to health when the remedy is positive and the guarantee absolute.

Wise men don't put money back of "fakes."

And "faking" doesn't pay.

After dinner, if you have discomfort and suffering, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, or Anti-Bilious Granules. They're made to assist Nature in her own way—quietly, but thoroughly. What the old-fashioned pill did forcibly, these do mildly and gently. They do more, too. Their effects are lasting; they regulate the system, as well as cleanse and renovate it. One little Pellet's a gentle laxative; three to four act as a cathartic. They're the smallest, cheapest, the easiest to take. Unequaled as a Liver Pill. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, because they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

You only pay for the good you get.

Can you ask more?

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1891.

A FARMER'S NUMBER of the Cynosure ought not to be unpopular, though we may not give precisely the advice of many agricultural journals. The evils of debt, of which Rev. T. C. Moffatt speaks so forcibly in his paper, and of the secret organization, are the rocks toward which siren voices are calling our friends of the soil. Wreck and ruin certainly lurk for them there. Let us seek a better way for the prosperity of our agricultural districts.

We can promise for next week the address of Rev. Dr. Carradine of St. Louis, a part of which was not received in time for this issue. This address is as remarkable as it is eloquent, and we make no invidious comparisons when we promise our readers that they have read few speeches of late years of more interest than this will prove to be.

THE NEW POLITICAL PARTY.

The Grand Council of the Farmers' Alliance at its session in Ocala, Florida, proposed a union of all labor organizations. A meeting was called for this purpose by said Grand Council, assembled at Washington, D. C., Jan. 22d, 1891. The Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, National Alliance, Knights of Labor, (Powderly,) Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association and the colored National Farmers' Alliance met, by representatives, in Kenmore Hotel at the above date. They agreed to call a meeting February, 1892, and to use the time intervening to discuss and agree on principles and measures. They adopted and published the following "demands:"

1. The abolition of National banks and substitution of Government treasury notes.
2. Free coinage of silver.
3. Laws forbidding foreign ownership of lands.
4. Equal taxation.—No monopolies.
5. Tariff rigidly limited to Government expenses.
6. Taxing incomes.
7. Government control of railroads; and, if that fails to cure abuses, Government ownership.
8. President, Vice President and Senators elected by popular vote.
9. Free, fair, secret ballot, and open, fair count. Improper intereference made felony.

This is one of the most extraordinary political movements yet made. Some of these demands are good and will be adopted. Humphrey, a colored man of Texas, was vice president and member of the executive committee, and Rogers (also colored), of North Carolina was on committee of by-laws, yet the meeting was ruled by Southerners. The objections to it are:

1. No reference to God, religion, or morals.
2. It is a secret "Order" with "Grand" officers.
3. The great Prohibition party is silently snubbed.

THE MORMON DISCUSSION.

Joseph Cook and his excellent wife have recently visited Salt Lake and submitted—he, to the governor, judges, lawyers, and clergymen; and she, to non-Mormon ladies—an exhaustive series of questions on the state and prospects of Mormonism. The whole subject is spread out in the January number of "Our Day." The matter was wisely planned and ably executed, and this single number of the monthly is worth the whole year's subscription.

We dislike to criticise so excellent a document, but, for the benefit of our readers who also read Our Day, we make two suggestions:

1. The oaths of Masonry are equal in turpitude to the oaths of the Endowment. Lay the two side by side and the truth of this appears on sight.
2. Priestism is as bad outside of Mormonism as in it.

Our Day, to be true and faithful, should make it apparent to all, that its opposition is not to Mormons, but to their errors and sins; and as thieves in the house are more dangerous than thieves outside, disloyal oaths in Chicago are more fatal to the country than at Salt Lake; and a priest who professedly sends men to heaven by his ceremonies is anti-Christ wherever he may be found.

We notice, too, throughout the whole number, that non-Mormons are called "Gentiles." This is unhappy. Gentiles in the Bible (and we know no other) were those nations who had no Messiah or Mediator and so had no access to God, and therefore, worshiped devils. (1 Cor. 10: 20.) The non-Mormons of Utah are not Gentiles but Americans, and should be Christians.

DR. T. N. HASSELQUIST.

"Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, the faithful fail from among the children of men," Ps. 12: 1. We have known this beloved man, now a saint with God, Dr. Hasselquist, since 1852, thirty-nine years ago. That year he came from Sweden to be pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran church in Galesburg, Ill.

At that time the Swedes began to break prairie and raise broom-corn and make money. A Swedish peasant preacher from the sect called Readers, who had been imprisoned by the Swedish bishops for the crime of preaching without their license, had led a colony of Readers into Henry county, Ill. They were a charming set of Christians, misled through their preacher's ignorance and their own. Their preacher, Eric Jansen, believed himself a prophet and taught the Swedes that he had all the power of Christ, but the power to work miracles. Rattlesnakes bit his people, and he taught them that if they had faith in him they could take up serpents, and if they drank any deadly thing they would not die. They died, however, and he told the people they died in the sin of unbelief. Jansen was shot by an adventurer named Root. His head fell within eight feet of the judge's seat in Cambridge court-house. Another Swede, named Hedstrom, protested against Jansen's errors, drew off some of his people, and formed a Methodist Episcopal church at Victoria and another at Galesburg.

In such a state of things the arrival of Hasselquist was a God-send to the rapidly increasing Scandinavians in Knox and adjacent counties. A mild, well educated, firm man, he was a devoted Christian, and the church which he raised up in Galesburg has still the largest audience-room in the city.

When he arrived there were two weak, Swedish churches in that region. Dr. Hasselquist started a paper, and kept the Swedes out of the Masonic and other secret lodges, and took clear, strong prohibition ground against liquor. In 1860 (eight years after his arrival) he started Augustana Synod and a college at Paxton, Ill. That Synod has now more than ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND members on its church books. Had he cringed to or joined the Masons, as did some of the leading Congregational ministers in Boston, he would have now left men arguing the question, "Is Augustana Synod declining?" as the Congregational papers are now discussing the "decline of Congregationalism."

After a few years at Paxton, Augustana College was moved to Rock Island, Ill., where the visitor sees from three to four hundred students, without a whiff of tobacco smoke among them, and if one of them is seen to enter a liquor-saloon he is required by the Faculty to give the reason why he was there.

When Mrs. Blanchard died, Dr. Hasselquist, who had been her guest in Galesburg when he first came over, wrote a letter of condolence in which he said, beautifully: "Mrs. Blanchard started to seek health in a change of climate. She has gone to a 'better country,' and now has perfect health; where the inhabitants shall never say: 'I am sick.'" (Isa. 33: 24.)

Well, this great, good man is gone. He was six years and twenty days younger than Gladstone, but he has gone before him. We grieve to part with him. But if we knew all that God knows we should not. As Moses and Elias, 1,500 years after entering heaven, were still engaged about their earthly labors, so let it be with our dear brother. He can do more for Augustana Synod and College now, than while on earth, for he is now "equal to the angels." (Luke 20: 36.) And the angel who revealed the Apocalypse to John, was one of the old prophets sent for that purpose. (Rev. 22: 9.) We are in the midst of the spirit world. And upon the scale of eternity all the children of God will be with Dr. Hasselquist in a few moments of duration. Nay, if we could "see as we are seen," we might possibly see him now. Here is his notice in the local press:

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., Feb. 4.—The venerable theologian, Dr. T. N. Hasselquist, president of Augustana College and Theological Seminary, died this morning. He was 75 years old. Fifty-two years of his life was devoted to the Lutheran ministry. His first pastoral labors in this country were in charge of the Evangelical Lutheran church at Galesburg, to which he was called from Sweden in 1852. Upon the establishment of the Augustana Lutheran Synod in 1860 he was elected president and became the executive head of Augustana College, founded at Paxton. Three years later he came to this city upon the removal of that institution in 1875, and has always been its President and Professor of Theology. He also gained distinction among the Swedish people as an editor. He was a strong anti-slavery worker, and took a prominent part in founding the Republican party. College exercises will be suspended the remainder of the week. The funeral will be held Monday.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

The American Agriculturist for January provided for its army of readers a review of the lessons to be learned from the present farmers' movement as observed from various points of view.

Hon. J. M. Rusk of Wisconsin, the present Secretary of Agriculture and member of the Cabinet, makes the following notable declaration concerning the tariff: "I believe that the general expectation and desire of the farmers of the country was for a revision and modification of the tariff, in line, however, with the principle of protection. They felt that in many respects the McKinley law, while affording to agricultural productions more recognition than had ever been accorded to them before, was a revision not in the sense of a modification but of an increase of protection." Secretary Rusk proceeds to discuss reciprocity, and believes that the most profitable markets for our agricultural products will be found for many years to come in European countries.

Congressman Hatch of Missouri, ex-chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, pitches into "the system of national legislation so inimical and detrimental to the farmers' best interests, which they have tolerated and even encouraged for twenty-five years." He regards the farmers' demands as "so patriotic in principle, so closely allied to the broad fundamental principles of the founders of our government, that the wonder is that they were not universally accepted and promptly complied with."

Andrew D. White, late president of Cornell University, sees in the movement something far deeper than the work of demagogues. He says that "unquestionably the deepest feeling in it is that the great rural and agricultural population has been made to bear an undue share of the burdens of society. This simple statement is true; there has never been in our country any thoroughly well-considered system of taxation; all has been haphazard." Mr. White proceeds to point out how this and other abuses can be so remedied as to turn the tide again from city to country, so as to cause a steady and rapid progress of the agricultural communities.

Lecturer Whitehead of the National Grange, the lecturer of the Northern Farmers' Alliance, Mr. Ashby of Iowa, and Dr. Macune, who is credited with being the brains of the Southern Farmers' Alliance, together with President Powell of the Farmers' Political League, interpret the lessons of the farmers' movement in a more less partisan spirit as might be expected, and their views though enthusiastic and well-informed respecting the details of the movement are not entitled to so much weight as those of gentlemen less directly interested.

Speaking from the standpoint of a financier, "a Wall street banker" sees "no cause for alarm among capitalists at the present uprising among farmers, because it necessarilly implies a large degree of education in financial affairs." He thinks the farmers' representatives will be slow to advocate government ownership of railroads when they find how such a policy must bear enormously on tax-payers.

According to Edward Bellamy, the apostle of the new socialism, the fact which "constitutes altogether the most significant aspect of the farmers' uprising is that it attacks the industrial, political, commercial and social system on lines so radical as to be revolutionary. This is the characteristic which broadly distinguishes it from any mere political overturn and compels its recognition as a part of the present world-wide movement of the masses for a radical change in the industrial system—a movement everywhere so alarming to those who do not understand it, so inspiring to those who do." He points out that it must inevitably result in the great national party of the people, "which is destined in the near future to establish a nobler and happier civilization in this land." But Mr. Bellamy's foresight has come from "Looking backward" and it is evident his sanguine temperament is stronger than his judgment.

THE FARMERS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

The farmers' movement is primarily against monopolies; and yet a secret society is an invitation to the most objectionable of monopolies. Some time since the Cynosure reviewed the work and history of the Northern and Southern Farmers' Alliances, and condemned the lodge organization adopted by the latter. If any one will read carefully the reports from Ocala, Florida, when that Alliance was holding its national meeting a while since, some reasons for our objection to a farmers' secret society will be evident.

The Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association is another secret society, formed to make "secretists" of men who should be frank and "open as the day," and to whose vocation it has always been an honor that its followers had no need of concealment, for of all kinds of business, theirs is the most conducive to open-handed honesty and integrity.

This order was formed by citizens of extreme southern Illinois, the "Egypt" district of the war time. Its first headquarters was at Marion, Williamson county. Of the five men who secured the charter from the Secretary of State, September 1, 1887, one was John P. Stelle, the editor of the Progressive Farmer, published at Mt. Vernon in Jefferson county. It has since extended into some ten States, but the main portion of the membership is still in the southern half of Illinois and Indiana. This membership has never been accurately reported, but vaguely claimed to be some hundred thousands,—a manifest exaggeration. It has been sufficiently influential to secure the election of three members of the Illinois legislature, who- in shameful obedience to their lodge obligations, have for weeks blocked all legislation and prevented the election of a Senator to Congress.

This order presents nothing new in its declaration of principles, but in its "motto" it sets up a principle in clear opposition to the Word of God, thus:

"MOTTO.—Equal and exact justice to all; special privileges and immunities to none; charity to those in poverty, affliction or distress, and especially to those of our own Order."

This is clearly setting up an organization contrary to the word respecting the "household of frith." Gal. 6: 10.

This society which is to promote the business of agriculture and help farmers make money, has a chaplain to take care of its religion; "divine services" are a part of its order of business. After the pass-word has been whispered around, there is to be a "singing service and invocation by the chaplain." And as any member of the order is eligible to the office of chaplain, a religious service is appointed, whose priest may know no god but the god of this world, that is, the devil. To whom, therefore, are the prayers of this secret order addressed?

It has also a secret ritual; different degrees; an "unwritten work;" an "obligation in the form of solemn pledge, not administered as an oath," but having, nevertheless, the force of an oath upon the conscience; and its local meetings are called "lodges." There is nothing but demoralization for farmers in such a body.

—The New England secretary announces an address in the church at 22 Emerald St., Boston, for Wednesday evening of this week. The church is probably Lutheran, but whether Swedish or German we are not informed. Rev. C. F. Johansson is the pastor.

—The Christian Statesman notices with regret that Peffer, the new Kansas Senator chosen by the Farmers' Alliance representatives to succeed Ingalls, is a Freemason. We have not at hand the proof respecting the latter, but fear his case was no better in this respect. Mr. Peffer has led a shifting life and there is nothing in his record to encourage the suggestion of his name for President. The fact that he belongs to the lodge is a certain proof of his unfitness.

—The Northwestern World, representing the non-fraternity sentiment in the University at Evanston, speaks of Knox College as "one of the fortunate colleges which are free from the baleful influence of fraternities, and, as a consequence its literary societies are of a very high standard." We regret to say that the World is mistaken about Knox College. Dr. J. E. Roy lately wrote of the disappearance of secret societies from the institution in 1846, and it is certain there were none till after 1860. It is no less certain that the institution would be fortunate if free from their baleful influence.

—The Cosmopolitan magazine which we are enabled to offer to our subscribers at very favorable rates, is widely recognized as one of the most interesting of our illustrated publications. Its publishers are anxious to secure permanent subscribers and make the Cynosure subscribers an excellent offer. It contains yearly some 1,500 pages of reading matter, a large proportion of which is finely illustrated. A profitable investment is offered in the Cynosure and Cosmopolitan for $3.00 to new subscribers to both; $3.50 to old subscribers to both; and $3.25 to all our present subscribers who do not take the magazine.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Pres. C. A Blanchard addressed the students of the Chicago Theological Seminary (Union Park) last Thursday evening. His theme was on the adaptation of pastors and all preachers of the Gospel to their work and to their time.

—Mrs. C. H. Case, one of the leading philanthropic women of Chicago, an earnest worker for temperance and every good cause for many years, has been made a committee for the National W. C. T. U. on the erection of public drinking fountains in large cities.

—Miss J. P. Moore, the devoted friend of the ex-slave, still continues to publish her little paper, Hope, at Baton Rouge, La. Our readers will remember her letter of several weeks ago telling of the breaking up of her school by mob violence. We understand that she has not ventured to reopen it. Her paper is an excellent monthly at 50 cents per year.

—The beloved Prohibition leader, Clinton B. Fisk, though dead, yet speaks to multitudes by the provisions made in his will in aid of churches and Christian education. Mrs. Fisk, who has charge of the estate, has paid all the subscriptions made by her husband to various colleges, theological seminaries and other institutions of the church, and has paid a large subscription to Drew Seminary, on which there was no legal claim, the General not having signed the book. The corporation of Fisk University has decided to erect a memorial chapel, to be named the Clinton B. Fisk Memorial Chapel, with the $25,000 bequeathed by the General to the University, and paid by the estate.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston is not only to be editor, but proprietor also, of Our Banner, which he removes from California to Philadelphia to conduct. The retiring managers speak in warm terms of their successor, which all who know him well can heartily endorse. They say: "In the days of the anti-slavery conflict he was editor of an abolition journal published at New Concord, Ohio. During his residence on the Pacific coast he has been a zealous and able advocate of temperance, of Sabbath Reform and of the wronged and hated Chinese. The columns of many journals have been open to him, and the opportunity has been improved to the great advantage of the cause of truth. He has written much also in behalf of the Christian principles of civil government and the cause of National Reform. Through his whole life Mr. Johnston has been the constant and zealous advocate of all those whose rights were denied them by their fellow men. His zeal for the cause of the slave led him to the South as a missionary to the freedmen in the early days of the war. The same spirit made him a missionary for many years to the Chinese on the Pacific slope. 'Woman's Rights' found in him one of their very earliest defenders. No genuine reform has ever failed to find in him a faithful and earnest advocate."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WAR FOLLY IN THE SENATE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 4, 1891.

It has a strange and uncouth sound which makes it difficult to believe that we are entering the twilight of the nineteenth century and that enlightened Christian public opinion has long ago declared in favor of peacefully arbitrating all international disputes and against the un-Christian brutality and inhumanity of warfare, to listen to the arguments made in the United States Senate in favor of spending millions of dollars in the erection of fortifications along our sea coasts and in our harbors. No wonder that Senator Blair suggested that it would be far better to expend the money in missionary work, and said, when a Senator spoke lightly of the suggestion, that, after all, the missionary was a greater force than the warrior, and had accomplished more good in the world.

MR. BLAIR WAS RIGHT,

as his colleagues will probably acknowledge, after the bill making the appropriation for the fortifications has passed. It is scarcely conceivable that the United States will ever become involved in a war with any foreign country, and, if it should, it would certainly be against the wishes of a large number of our most intelligent people, who have heartily endorsed the settlement of all international disputes by arbitration. The age of brute force has passed away, it is to be hoped never to return, in this country, if not in all the rest of the world.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union has just shown how much may be accomplished in the way of Congressional moral reform legislation by united, persistent, and well-directed effort. The bill, which was introduced at the request of the Union, prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form in the District of Columbia to children under the age of sixteen, now only needs the signature of the President, which it is certain to receive, to become a law, having passed both House and Senate. There is a lesson in this success of the W. C. T. U. which may be profitably studied by those who are anxious that the coming on the Sabbath day. It will, in my opinion, only be closed on that day by specific Congressional legislation, and Congressional legislation is not obtained without mighty effort, however meritorious the object to be attained thereby may be.

On Monday the mortal remains of a man who had by a long, just and upright public life earned the title of Christian statesman, was laid in its final resting place in the presence of a sorrowing multitude. William Windom began life as a farmer's boy. By his own efforts he obtained an education, and afterwards became a lawyer, a Representative in Congress, a United States Senator, and was twice Secretary of the Treasury; during all this time he was a consistent and conscientious Christian, and although his final summons came without a moment's warning, there is no doubt of his having been fully prepared to meet his Maker. His example was to follow.

At the anniversary meeting of the Society of Christian Endeavor, Representative Morse, of Massachusetts, delivered an address on a question which should be of the greatest interest to every patriotic American—"Is American politics opposed to Christian living?" He took the ground that it is not, and cited the examples of a number of our most eminent statesmen as proof positive of his position. In impressing the force of example upon his hearers, he mentioned the case of Gen. Wolfe, who, when mortally wounded at the battle of Quebec, cried out to the officers around him: "Hold me up and don't let the men see me fall." "Some of you," concluded Mr. Morse, "are charged with great responsibilities. As you love this beautiful city in which you live, as you love the commonwealth you represent, as you love your native land, I charge you not to let any man see you fall, and let all the aims thou aimest at be thy country, thy God, and truth.

THE HOME.

DO WHAT IS NEXT TO THEE.

Do what is next to thee,
Love doth not measure;
If not thy pleasure,
Still thine the peace will be.

Do it with all thy might;
Brief is the living,
Blest those in giving,
As in God's holy sight.

Do it for Jesus' sake,
Though it be trying,
Sweet thy denying,
His love can ever make.

Do it with all thy strength;
Be not delaying,
But swift obeying,
For night will come at length.

Do with all care and zest;
Patient in doing,
Watchful pursuing;
So life's long days are blessed.

Do thou with prayerful heart,
Always rejoicing;
Let thy sweet voicing
Some good to all impart.

Do what is right and meet;
Wait not the morrow.
So shall not sorrow
Burden love's willing feet.

—The Churchman.

CHEAP RELIGION.

Things that are exceedingly cheap are often a cheat. The best fabrics require skilled labor, and that which costs but little is apt to be worth but little. A character that will stand the wash and the wear of this world, and be the passport to a better world, is not to be had for nothing. The very word "free grace" may be misleading. Because our Divine Redeemer gave himself voluntarily to his great work of purchasing our ransom by his precious blood, and because he offers salvation to all "without money and without price," it does not follow that a holy character, and heaven, too, are to be had for nothing. Jesus likened the kingdom of heaven to a "treasure hid in a field," and to a "goodly pearl;" neither of them were to be got without paying a round price for them. The merchant who wanted the precious pearl went and sold all that he had, in order to secure it; in like manner those who would secure the treasures of spiritual blessings in Christ must part with everything that would shut Christ out of the heart.

It is the wretched mistake of many people that they seek for a cheap religion. I have heard well-meaning ministers declare that it is "just the easiest thing in the world to become a Christian." They talk as if a gracious God had provided a free Gospel-train, by which everybody who chose to come aboard could be transported on comfortable cushions as "dead-heads" to the Celestial City! Such cologne-water preachers utterly ignore that solemn declaration of our Lord, "Whosoever will not take up his cross and follow me, cannot be my disciple." They make no allowance either for the stubborn depravity of the human heart, or for the temptations of the devil, or the sin-poisoned atmosphere through which every Christian must fight his way to the prize of his high calling. "Strive to enter into the strait gate," is the invitation of our Master. He knows what it costs. Pungently but truly did grand old Samuel Rutherford say: "Many people only play with Christianity, and take Christ for almost nothing. I pray you to make the seeking of salvation your daily work. If ye never had a sick night and a pained soul for sin, ye have not yet lighted upon Christ. Look to the right marks; if ye love our Saviour better than the world, and would quit all the world for him, then that proveth that the work is sound."

The very first step towards a genuine, solid Christian character is repentance of sin. The key-note of Christ's ministry was "repent!" There was a logical necessity in this; for no man can cleave to his sins and lay hold of Christ with the same hand. I doubt whether any person ever makes a strong grip on the Lord Jesus until he feels the need of one who can save him from his sins. No one takes medicine until he realizes that he is sick. When David's eyes had been opened to behold the loathsome depravity of his own conduct, he is not content with any cheap compromise; he cries out with intense earnestness, "Wash me thoroughly from my iniquity." He was ready to be thrown like a filthy garment into the cleansing vat, and to be rubbed and pounded until the frightful black spots were washed out of the fabric of his heart. Thorough repentance is proved by thorough reformation of both character and conduct; the one is what we are, and the other is what we do. Cheap conversions make cheap Christians. The shallow "conversions" that are the outcome of shallow, sensational preaching commonly end in very shallow and short-lived religion. Bad habits are not pulled up. Old haunts are not forsaken. The new emotion dies out; but it does not leave a new man. The Holy Spirit has no hand in such conversions; they are a delusion and end in bitter disappointments. The plant that is set out in the church, "having no depth of root, soon withers away." We ministers cannot be too urgent in exhorting sinners to flee speedily from their sins to the Saviour; but we also cannot be too careful in admitting persons into the church. Thorough sub-soil conversions make solid Christians; cheap and easy professions end in hollowness of heart and hypocrisy of life.

I fear that there is quite too much cheap religion in our churches. It will not stand the pinch of self-denial. It is very willing to go to church when the weather is fair, when the roads are good, when the music is fine, when the preaching is attractive—and does not tread on its corns. It prates about "liberality" in doctrine and creeds; but when a contribution-box heaves in sight, it shrinks up, and buttons its purse. Mr. Gough used to tell the story of the glib exhorter who boasted in the prayer meetings that "his religion cost him only twenty-five cents a year." "The Lord have mercy on your stingy soul!" exclaimed the minister. Cheap religion is scrimping the salaries of hard-working pastors, is starving mission boards and all Christian charities, and is turning off the claims of Christ with the candle-ends and the cheese-parings. It kills the fatted calf for its own table, and offers the poor "crow-bait" for the Lord's altar. The punishment of all such petty larcenies is that their perpetrators became mere crow-baits themselves, and never taste the joy by which liberal souls are made fat.

Let us be done with cheating that munificent Saviour who poured out his life for our redemption! If our Christianity is worth anything, it is worth everything. The closer it cuts up our selfishness the better. The most precious things cost the most; and he is the rich Christian and the happy Christian and the useful Christian who is anxious to have the "pearl," even if he pays dearly for it.—Christian Intelligencer.

MUCH SHALL HAVE MORE, AND LITTLE SHALL HAVE LESS.

But, after all, though folk may have whistled and sung the same song ever since the days when anybody had something and somebody had nothing, it is not always true that the rich man is rich because he is wicked, and the poor man is poor because he is good; and maybe if they who have always piped that song had had silver money jingling in their pockets instead of copper pennies, they might have given a different turn to the music, for every man can blow as he likes on his own whistle.

Now, once upon a time, there was a king who did the best he could to rule wisely and well, and to deal justly by those under him whom he had to take care of; and as he could not trust hearsay, he used every now and then to slip away out of his palace, and go amongst the common people to hear what they had to say for themselves.

Well, one such day as this, when he was taking a walk, he strolled out of the walls of the town and into the green fields, until he came at last to a fine big house that stood by the banks of a river, wherein lived a man and his wife who were very well to do in the world. There the king stopped for a bite of bread and a drink of fresh milk.

"I should like to ask you a question," said the king to the rich man, "and the question is this, why are some folk rich and some folk poor?"

"That I cannot tell you," said the good man; "only I remember my father used to say that much shall have more, and little shall have less."

"Very well," said the king; "the saying sounds good, but let us find whether it is true. See, here is a purse with three hundred pieces of golden money in it. Take it, and give it to the poorest man you know, and let us see whether it will make him the richer."

Now in the town lived two beggars who were as poor as poverty itself, and the poorer of the pair was one who used to sit in rags and tatters on the church steps to beg charity of the good folk who came and went.

To him came the rich man, and without so much as a good morning, quoth he, "Here is something for you," and so saying, dropped the purse of gold into the beggar's hat. Then away he went not waiting for a word of thanks.

As for the beggar, he just sat there for a while goggling and staring like one moon-struck. But at last his wits came back to him, and then away he scampered home as fast as his legs could carry him. Then he spread his money out on the table and counted it—three hundred pieces of gold money! He had never seen such great riches in his life before. There he sat, feasting his eyes upon the treasure as though they would never get their fill. And now what was he to do with all of it? Should he share his fortune with his brother? Not a bit of it! To be sure, they had always shared and shared alike, but here was the first great lump of good luck that had ever fallen in his way, and he was not for spoiling it by cutting it in two to give half to a poor beggar-man—not he! He would hide it, and keep it all for his very own; that's what he would do.

Now not far from where he lived, and beside the river, stood a willow-tree with a dead branch, and thither the lucky beggar took his purse of money and stuffed it into a knot-hole in the branch, and then went his way, certain that nobody could find it in such a hiding place. Then all the rest of the day he sat thinking and thinking of the ways he would spend what was given him, to get the most good out of it. At last came evening, and his brother, who had been begging in another part of the town, came home again.

"I nearly lost my hat to-day," says the brother, as soon as he had come into the house.

"Did you?" says the beggar. "How was that?"

"Oh, the wind blew it off into the water; but I got it again."

"How did you get it?" says the beggar.

"I just broke a dead branch off the willow-tree, and drew it ashore," says the brother.

"A dead branch?"

"A dead branch."

"Off of the willow-tree?"

"Off of the willow-tree."

"And what did you afterward do with the dead branch?"

"I threw it away into the water, and it floated down the river."

The beggar ran out of the house down to the river-side, howling and thumping his head with his knuckles like one possessed; for he knew that the branch that his brother had thrown into the water was the very one in which he had hidden the bag of money.

The next morning, as the rich man took a walk down by the river, he saw a dead branch that had been washed up by the tide. "Hollo!" says he; this will do to kindle the fire with."

So he brought it to the house, and taking down his axe began to split it up for kindling. The very first blow he gave, out tumbled the bag of money.

But the beggar. Well, by-and-by his grieving got better of its first smart, and then he started off down the river to see if he could not find his money again. He hunted up and he hunted down, but never a whit of it did he see, and at last he stopped at the rich man's house, and begged for a bite to eat and lodging for the night. There he told all his story: how he had hidden the money that had been given him from his brother, how his brother had thrown it away, and how he had spent the whole day searching for it. And to all the rich man listened, and said never a word. But though he said nothing, he thought to himself, "Maybe, after all, it is not the will of heaven that this man should have the money. Nevertheless I will give him another trial." So that night while the poor man was snoring away in his bed in the garret, the rich man had his wife make two great pies, each with a fine brown crust. In the first pie he put the little bag of money; the second he filled full of rusty nails and scraps of iron.

The next morning he called the beggar to him. "My friend," said he, "I grieve sadly for the story you told me last night. But maybe, after all, your luck is not all gone, and now, if you will do as you should do, you shall not go away from here comfortless. In the pantry yonder are two great pies—one is for you and one for me. Go in, and take whichever you choose."

"A pie," thought the beggar to himself. "Does the man think that a big pie will comfort me for the loss of three hundred pieces of money?" Nevertheless, as it was the best thing to be had, in the pantry he went, and there began to feel and weigh the pies, and the one filled with the rusty nails and scraps of iron was ever so much the fatter and the heavier. "This is the one that I shall take," said he to the rich man, "and you may have the other." And tucking it under his arm, off he tramped.

Well, before he got back to the town he grew hungry, and sat down by the roadside to eat his pie, and if there was never an angry man in the world before, he was one that day. "This is the way the rich always treat the poor," says he.

So back he went in a fume. "What did you trick me with a pie full of old nails for?" said he.

"You took the pie of your own choice," said the rich man; "nevertheless I meant you no harm. Lodge with me here one night, and in the morning I will give you something worth while, maybe."

So that night the rich man had his wife bake two loaves of bread, in one of which he hid the bag with the three hundred pieces of gold money.

"Go to the pantry," said he to the beggar in the morning, "and there you will find two loaves of bread; one is for you and one for me; take whichever one you choose."

So in went the beggar, and the first loaf of bread that he laid his hand upon was the one in which the money was hidden, and off he marched with it under his arm without so much as saying thank you.

"I wonder," says he to himself, after he had jogged along awhile—"I wonder whether the rich man is up to another trick such as he played upon me yesterday?" He put the loaf of bread to his ear and shook it and shook it, and what should he hear but the chink of the money within. "Aha," said he, "he has filled it with rusty nails and bits of iron again, but I will get the better of him this time."

By-and-by he met a poor woman coming home from market. "Would you like to buy a fine, fresh loaf of bread?" says the beggar.

"Yes, I would," says the woman.

"Well, here is one you shall have for two pennies," says the beggar.

That was cheap enough, so the woman paid him his price, and off she went with the loaf of bread under her arm, and never stopped until she had gotten safe home.

Now it happened that the day before this very woman had borrowed just such a loaf of bread from the rich man's wife, and so as there was plenty in the house without it, she wrapped it up in a napkin, and sent her husband back with it to where it had started from first of all.

"Well," says the rich man, "the ways of heaven are not to be changed." And so he laid the money on the shelf, and thought no more of giving it to the beggar.

At the end of seven days the king called upon the rich man again. "Well," said he, "was the poor man able to keep his money?"

"No," said the rich man, "he was not." And then he told the story from beginning to end as I have told it.

"Your father was right," said the king, "and what he said was very true. Much shall have more, and little shall have less. Keep the bag of money for yourself, for there heaven means it to stay."—Howard Pyle in Harper's Young People.

Angola, Ind., is having a temperance revival such as it has not known for years. The meetings are being conducted by Colonel George Woodford, of Chicago. Hundreds are signing the pledge, and a society has been formed composed of men who a short time before were considered hopeless cases and outcasts from society.

TEMPERANCE.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

On the afternoon of July 7, 1887, John H. Swift, aged 23, shot and killed his wife Katie Swift, aged 24, on Trumbull street, Hartford, Conn., as she was going from work to supper. The immediate cause of the shooting was the wife's refusal to live with her husband, because he was drunken and cruelly abusive. Swift had for several days been seeking for a good opportunity to shoot her, having announced his intention in the various saloons which he was in the habit of frequenting; but nobody paid any attention to his threats. Swift was tried during the following December, before Judge Sanford and a jury, in the superior court for Hartford county. He was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged April 5th, 1889. Just before the sentence Swift made a statement, declaring that he had no recollection of the murder, and that it was all a blank to him. His counsel appealed the case to the Supreme Court of errors, but no error was found. Appeal was then taken to the present Legislature, with petition for commutation of sentence to life imprisonment, on the ground that the prisoner was crazed by long indulgence in liquor, and therefore not responsible. The matter was referred to the judiciary committee, who, after extended hearings, reported a bill for the commutation of sentence to life imprisonment, on the ground that "excessive" indulgence in alcohol for two years had rendered Swift such a mental wreck that at the time of the murder he was not capable of the conditions of murder in the first degree, namely, intelligent, deliberate, malicious, intent to kill. After a long debate, the Senate approved the bill by a vote of 14 to 8 and the House, after an exciting discussion, concurred by a close vote of 113 to 106. As the Legislature is the supreme authority in the State, Swift's sentence is commuted to imprisonment for life.

Without entering upon a full discussion of the significance of the Swift case at this time, suffice it to say that "the vigorous exercise of the law against murder" is not "the only way," nor indeed any way at all, to check the awful prevalence of crime in Connecticut. The way to stop an effect is to stop the cause. The State may hang every murderer within its borders within fifteen minutes after the crime is done, if it chooses to be thus summary, and yet the awful record will grow. Why? Because the source of by far the larger share of these dreadful crimes is in the saloon, an institution which exists in the astounding number of 2,700 legalized places in Connecticut, protected and fostered by our laws and social practices, and constantly turning loose upon the public just such vile and irresponsible "mental wrecks" as John H. Swift.

And this is not an abstract question of indefinite popular responsibility. The responsibility is fixed and plain, and the very names of the individuals can be given if necessary. Here is the specific statement, so plain that he who runs may read:

The saloon is protected by law. Our liquor laws represent a certain "policy" on the saloon question, so called. Under that policy the saloon and its fruits are growing at a far more rapid rate than our population. Yet the ruling political organizations of the State, the Republican and Democratic parties, deliberately stand by this system. Therefore, every citizen who casts his vote for either one of these parties, thus assisting and enabling them to retain joint or alternate control of the government while continuing adherence to this hellish system,—we care not whether that citizen be clergyman, deacon, church member, moralist or professed friend of law and order and opponent of the saloon,—he casts his vote and effective influence with and for the saloon, and he bears just that share of responsibility for the John H. Swifts, the Hodels, the Ruffs, and all the lesser products of this iniquitous saloon system. And the responsibility is the more striking and inevitable, when we reflect that if this class of saloon supporters would only cease their alliance with license parties and concentrate their political power where their professions point, the saloon system could not live in Connecticut one hour beyond the time it would take them to frame their convictions into law and enforce them.

Professed anti-saloonists and friends of law and order may call this fanaticism, and deny the charges, but the truth of our words yet remains and every honest heart knows it. To plead that other questions demand old-party allegiance does not avail. The saloon question, not by our assertion, but by general consent, and by the facts, is the question confronting the American people to-day and demanding settlement and first attention.

Poor, wretched Swift, vile and worthless as he may be to society, is yet far less responsible for his miserable life and murderous act than are the laws and social customs framed and sustained by "the best people of the State!" The Hartford Times and Courant, which plead so pitifully for justice to the memory of innocent Katie Swift and the scores of women similarly circumstanced or threatened, are daily exponents and defenders of that political and social saloon system which more than any other one thing is directly responsible for Katie Swift's death.—Tract.

THE STORY TOLD BY THE CENSUS.

The census office has issued census bulletin No. 22, which embodies the preliminary report on the quantity of distilled spirits consumed in the arts, manufactures and medicines in the United States during the year ended Dec 31, 1889.

The report shows that the total amount of all forms of distilled spirits consumed by wholesale druggists and manufacturers, eleemosynary institutions and retail apothecaries amounted to 10,976, 842 proof gallons.

It appears that alcohol, as such (in some cases diluted with water), is used by certain foreign elements. It is drunk to a great extent by Poles, Norwegians, Swedes, Finns, Hungarians and Russians. Large dealers in the northwest familiar with this particular trade furnish the information that fully one-half of the alcohol sold in that section is drunk as a favorite beverage by these foreigners. Competent authorities in New York city estimate that about fifteen barrels of pure alcohol are daily consumed for drinking purposes alone in that city, and a considerable amount is used for the same purposes in the coal regions of Pennsylvania and other sections, and a very considerable quantity finds its way to the low grogshops of the country, where it is compounded into low-grade whisky and retailed over the bar.

The returns sent in from all the various sources of information sought by the census office have been compiled into various tables, and show that out of the aggregate 10,976,842 gallons of distilled spirits consumed during 1889, the wholesale druggists and manufacturers used 7,966,640 gallons, the eleemosynary institutions used 102,790 gallons and the retail druggists used 2,907,412 gallons.

In all the interests and spirits combined New York led the States with 1,760,343 gallons, closely followed by Illinois, which is credited with using 1,306,322 gallons; Pennsylvania is third on the list with 1,142,941 gallons; Missouri comes fourth with 1,071,068 gallons, barely leading Massachusetts, which took care of 1,018,080 gallons, all these figures representing proof gallons.

The eleemosynary institutions of the country consumed 2,327 ordinary gallons of cologne spirits, and of this amount the District of Columbia used 1,433 gallons.

In view of the fact that the retail druggists are often accused of selling whisky, brandy, rum and gin as beverages, the table devoted to the retail apothecaries is especially interesting. New York druggists used and sold 142,180 gallons of whisky in 1889; Missouri, 95,156; Massachusetts, 93,958; Indiana, 84,364; Illinois, 51,260; Kansas, 25,517; Iowa, 17,227, and Maine, 10,047. Massachusetts' druggists used and sold 45,233 gallons of rum in 1889, which was 45 per cent of all the rum used and sold by the retail druggists of the country, and her retail apothecaries also lead in the amount of gin they consumed—27,405 gallons, as against New York's score of 19,583 gallons.

In making up this report the census office used the factors furnished by the internal-revenue department in converting ordinary to proof gallons. The average strength of alcohol and of cologne spirit was taken at 1.88, or, in other words, at 88 per cent above proof; that of high wines at 1.50, or 50 per cent above proof. Whisky, brandy, rum and gin were taken as at proofs.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Elijah's successor.—vs 12–15. For years Elijah's influence had been so potent in the national affairs of Israel that there is singular force and truth as well as beauty in Elisha's exclamation. As a rule, a great and good man is not appreciated by the generation in which he lives, but when his guiding hand on the chariot of government is taken away, as in the case of Abraham Lincoln, a whole nation mourns the loss. And Elisha's sorrow must have been shared by thousands in Israel, while at the same time his grief was as sacred and individual as if he had been the only mourner. Elijah had, without doubt, other spiritual sons, but none with whom he had been linked by ties so strong and tender as with Elisha. Well might the sorrow of the latter be so poignant as to swallow up for the moment every thought, even of the inheritance, more splendid than the crown of an empire, to which his beloved master had left him heir. But while he rends his clothes, the Hebrew expression for extremest grief, he does not forget the first duty which lies before him, which is to take up the prophet's fallen mantle and carry forward his work. That is overmuch sorrow which makes us forget the duties of life. It is then that sorrow grows selfish, and instead of having a sanctifying and ennobling power, narrows and contracts our whole being. There was no magic in Elijah's mantle. No study of the methods of noted Christian workers will ever make us efficient to win souls. They may be very useful as instruments, but the power must always be of God. Elisha, by smiting the waters of Jordan, showed his credentials. They only are the true successors of the apostles who do the works of an apostle; and if these are wanting, whole synods of bishops may lay their hands on them in vain. But too often the genuine signs of apostleship, active piety and the power to win souls, weigh for less in popular estimation than other more showy and brilliant qualities in a preacher.

2. The folly of human wisdom.—vs 16, 17. These young prophets knew that Elijah was soon to depart, and they may have witnessed something of the translation scene, as "they stood to view afar off." But they seem to have thought that when Elijah was carried up to heaven, his body must be left behind. They could not take in the idea of a change from the corruptible to the incorruptible in the twinkling of an eye without that parting between soul and body which we call death. It is also to be noted that every attempt to rationalize Scripture and explain away the miracles on a natural basis always has a "peradventure" to it. Elisha's eyes had been fixed on his master when he was carried up. There was no peradventure with him any more than with the apostles who witnessed Christ's ascension, and afterwards said to the rulers when threatened with imprisonment and death, "We can but speak the things which we have seen and heard." Faith is positive, doubt negative. In most theological disputings there is more doubt than genuine faith; for, as a rule, the faith which accepts Christ's work and words for just what they are, will not waste time and strength in controversy. One of the greatest hindrances to the work of the Holy Spirit, and that which has more often blocked the wheels of reform than anything else, is this same turning aside to vain questions and dead issues, thus diverting time and attention from the actual work that needs to be done.

3. The waters healed.—vs 19–22. Jericho was in one respect a fortunate city. The "situation was pleasant." It was like a life filled with material good, but whose springs are all in self, and which must therefore remain barren until the healing salt—the saving grace of God in Christ Jesus, has been thrown in. It also resembles, in the fact that it was a cursed city and seemed through all its history to be under a malignant star, the lives of those who, through no fault of theirs, seem born to an inheritance of vice and misery. The tragic story of Achan was connected with its fall, and a terrible curse—fulfilled to the letter, had been pronounced against him who should rebuild it. Yet as the bitter waters were healed, so the Gospel accepted will take the curse from every life, no matter how unfortunate the circumstances under which it came into existence, or how dark its environments. Let us not pay undue honor to human instruments. Thus saith the Lord, I have healed the waters; not Elisha, nor his cruse of salt. "There shall be no more death or barren land." The Blood once applied heals forever.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The union evangelistic services of the churches at Evanston and vicinity conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills have closed. Throughout the two weeks of special services the large attendance at every meeting and the great interest shown in the work throughout the community resulted in one of the most successful revivals ever known in the place. The Chicago papers report 600 persons converted during the meeting. Such evidence is not always reliable, but doubtless a great work has been done. Mr. Mills, accompanied by his assistant, Mr. Greenwood, left for Marietta, Ohio, where they began evangelistic services immediately. The churches in Evanston continued to hold services, led by the pastors, each evening for the remainder of the week.

—At Morrison, Ill., a powerful revival is proceeding in the M. E. church. Our brother Sholes regards it as the most remarkable he has ever seen in Illinois during forty years. Some 125 have experienced conversion, 65 have been received into the church, and the work goes on with deep conviction and breaking down of pride.

—In none of the remote States has Congregationalism developed more rapidly than in Texas. Its growth in Dallas has been phenomenal. There are two strong churches already, the First with a membership of 240.

—The first Armenian church in United States was dedicated in Worcester, Mass., on a recent Sabbath. Rev. H. V. Sarajian, who has charge, officiated in a black cassock, with purple sleeves lined with purple, and over it a flowing robe of rich purple damask, secured by a silver clasp. The services were conducted entirely in the Armenian language.

—The United Presbyterian of Jan. 29th, says: "The Gospel meetings conducted by Major D. W. Whittle and Prof. C. C. Case in the United Presbyterian churches of Allegheny, Pa., were continued during the past week with increasing interest. The Third church, Dr. McKitrick's, where the evening meetings were held, had an accession at their communion on Sabbath of twenty-four. The afternoon meetings at the Fourth church were attended every day by large and deeply-interested audiences. They are specially designed for the benefit of Christians. They are all devoted to the consideration of one theme, 'Looking unto' Jesus. A meeting for men only, and specially for old soldiers, was held at Carnegie Hall on Sabbath afternoon, which filled the large hall to overflowing. The address of the Major to his old companions in arms was one of the most powerful ever heard in our city, and there was evidence that many hearts were persuaded by it to turn from sin and become soldiers of the cross."

—Last year, at the Conference of Missionaries at Shanghai, there was a call made for a thousand missionaries for China. A Swedish minister, Rev. Mr. Franson, who has traveled over the world very much, was in this country at the time, and hearing this call, he determined to raise up a band from the Swedish churches in this country, and send them out to China. As the result of his labors, thirty-five Swedish young men and women, all born in Sweden, but who were residing in this country, arrived in this city last Wednesday. On Wednesday evening fifteen of them were at our Swedish church in Oakland, and twenty were at our church in this city; Rev. C. Anderson, pastor. They appeared like plain, earnest, young people, with the Word of God in their heads, and the love of God and souls in their hearts. None of them are married. On Wednesday morning there was another parting meeting in Pastor Anderson's church when refreshments were served, and then a large company marched with them to the steamer. There again services were held and, after dear old Swedish parting songs were sung, the steamer bore them away to China, to tell to those perishing millions the old, old story of Jesus and his love. A collection of over $100 was taken for them at the meeting in the church. They all went as steerage passengers. It is expected that ten or more will follow on the next steamer. They all go direct to Shanghai, thence most of them, if not all, expect to go inland and join the "Inland Mission." The Swedes already have two missions in China.—The Pacific, San Francisco, Jan. 28

—Are the various organizations which claim to be auxiliary to the church accomplishing what was expected of them? is a question that has been asked more than once of late years, when there are so many such organizations. Here is a scrap from a paper in regard to the Y. M. C. A.: "It has been discovered that 34 per cent of the membership of the New York Y. M. C. A. do not attend any church. This is discouraging; but we fear that if an inquiry could be made at home the result would be even worse. The supreme danger of Y. M. C. A. work is that the members are apt to regard the Association as, in itself, a religious sect; and it is a fact that large numbers who attend the Y. M. C. A. Bible class on Sunday afternoon and the Y. M. C. A. evangelistic meetings on Sunday evening, never think of entering a church." Undoubtedly, there is a large grain of truth in the above statement.—Christian World, Dayton, Ohio.

—Rev. A. Smith, the blind pastor at Utica, N. Y., writes to the Free Methodist of this city of a gracious work in his field. He says: "The Lord has been reviving his work here, for which we sincerely praise him. About forty-five have professed pardon or purity of late. Seventeen have joined the church either on probation or in full connection. One of the chief obstacles to the work of God here is the prevalence of fashionable religion. All about us are churches teaching in more than one way that people can be Christians and belong to the Freemasons, dance, attend theatres, play cards, etc. The standard of piety is so very low that almost everybody can profess religion without denying themselves very much. The Y. M. C. A. raised about $11,000 net in about one week here by a series of dances by children and grown people, tableaux, etc. Several of the churches which participated in this holy dancing are now holding 'revival services.' A few weeks since a D.D., after four notices in the daily inviting the Freemasons of Utica to attend, preached a Masonic sermon—topic 'The Blazing Star,' in which he lauded Freemasonry. His choir rendered a Masonic song for the benefit of his Masonic brethren of the audience. The doctor is now holding revival meetings. Pray for us that we may walk in the old paths, and not follow the multitude to do evil."

But this point has been ably discussed in your valuable paper, and there is another reason why Christians should not belong that is not given enough prominence.

The thought I desire to impress is found in Mal. 3: 8–11. The prophet says: "Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." I believe this curse spoken of in the 9th verse is resting on many parts of our land to-day. The god of this world has blinded the hearts of the followers of Christ. They feel the curse, yet fail to see the cause. Satan suggests a remedy in the lodge and beneficiary organizations of the same nature. What is the result? As we find them taking hold of these remedies their love to the Saviour grows cold, as is shown in their gifts.

I have never met a strong friend of the lodge who was willing to give the tithe to the Lord. To illustrate this, I will cite a case that I knew. The man was one of the leaders in his church; he received a pension of thirty dollars a month; he belonged to three orders. His dues to these was over fifteen dollars a year, yet his regard for the Master was so small that he could not be induced to raise his contribution to the support of the ordinances to five dollars.

In our midst I have been watching this phase of the question with interest. In a sister church, where many of her members are connected with the lodge, this difficulty is growing. How terribly cold must be the love of a disciple to the Master who is not willing to give as much to the support of the Gospel as he pays in dues to the lodge. "Lovest thou me more than these?"

Before closing I desire to express my hearty approval of "A Woman's Answer to Masonry." When we have such able defenders of the cause, does it not lead to but one conclusion, namely, we must give them the power to vote on these great questions if we expect to see them carried out in our land? Satan's kingdom will receive a terrible blow when our fair land allows God-fearing women to have a say in putting down these evils.

A FRIEND OF THE CAUSE.

—The Wesleyan Methodist publishes the able argument of Rev. George Richey of Pataskala, Ohio, before the Central Ohio Conference of the Wesleyan church. The address was in vindication of the Wesleyan discipline prohibiting membership in secret societies.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The free coinage men were defeated in their attempt in the House to incorporate a free coinage amendment in the sundry civil appropriations bill on Thursday.

The conference between Secretary Noble and the Sioux Indian delegation was begun Saturday at the Interior Department. The Secretary of War and Mrs. Proctor and Miss Proctor were present, and also the wife of Secretary Noble and Miss Halsted. Others prominent in the work for the Indians were interested spectators. Chief John Grass was the principal spokesman for the Indians and Mr. Noble talked for the government. The conference will be continued.

After the first of April the prices of sugar, both raw and refined, it is said at the Treasury Department, will drop on the average from 1½ to 2 cents a pound by virtue of the operation of the sugar feature in the McKinley tariff law and it will make a very perceptible difference in the living expenses of the people, since the estimates show that the average per-capita consumption of sugar is more than $1.

CHICAGO.

A number of constables Friday made a raid upon a Clark street gambling den. They were severely beaten by about thirty gamblers, and the game went on undisturbed.

The Hub Clothing House Company distributed 100 tons of coal to the poor families of Chicago last week.

Ten thousand dollars, half of which was in bills and half in government bonds, was found late Saturday afternoon by Henry Prentice, an employe of the Pullman company. The money was concealed beneath the cushions of a seat in the sleeping car Atlanta.

Louis Gathmann, a maker of mill machinery at 248 West Lake street, has invented a gun which, if it realizes all he expects of it, will be one of the greatest inventions in modern ordnance. By the use of liquified carbonic acid gas the gun is kept cool. It is claimed that the gun can be discharged rapidly thousands of times and will throw dynamite shells five miles.

Takes 1,000 people to buy Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, at 50 cents a bottle, to make up $500. One failure to cure would take the profit from 4,000 sales. Its makers profess to cure "cold in the head," and even chronic catarrh, and if they fail they pay $500 for their over-confidence,—

Not in newspaper words but in hard cash! Think of what confidence it takes to put that in the papers—and mean it.

Its makers believe in the remedy. Isn't it worth a trial? Isn't any trial preferable to catarrh?

After all, the mild agencies are the best. Perhaps they work more slowly, but they work surely. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are an active agency but quiet and mild. They're sugar-coated, easy to take, never shock nor derange the system, and half their power is the mild way in which their work is done. Smallest, cheapest, easiest to take. One a dose. Twenty-five cents a vial. Of all druggists.

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Hood's Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for Sarsaparilla itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad no other Peculiar preparation ever attained so rapidly nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research has To Itself in medical science developed, with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. FARM NOTES.

CO-OPERATION FOR THE FARMER.

Within the last thirty years the urban population of the United States has increased 251 per cent, or from only about 5,000,000 to nearly 13,000,000 in number, while the rural population has gained less than one-third as rapidly, or about 70 per cent. The American Agriculturist makes these figures the text for comment upon the marvelous growth of our cities as compared with that of the rural population, and "places no faith in the new doctrine that under our modern civilization an urban population can be trusted to insure the nation's permanency. The United States must never ignore the greatest and most enduring lessons of history—that nations depend upon a thrifty yeomanry."

The way out, according to the Agriculturist, lies to some extent in permanent financial co-operation conducted on a modification of the Rochdale system. It compares the enormous profits made by English workingmen under this form of co-operation with the proposed plan of relieving American agriculture that is "based on government mortgages of not only our farmers' freehold property but even the very produce of their land!"

The Agriculturist concludes: "Let unjust laws be repealed, special privileges abolished and equality insured for all. Here is the work for government. Then in the detail of our own business let us help ourselves. Co-operation furnishes a means for the sturdy American farmer to secure his best estate through self-help."

BLANKETING HORSES.

It is not necessary to have blankets for every horse or mule on the farm, but it is necessary and will pay to have a good blanket for every horse that is to be kept in use. On most farms one team is expected to do the winter work, and is kept shod and fed up for that purpose. Even where one team is given all the work to do, it will still be idle a good share of the time, during which the system will relax so that on being put to any considerable amount of exertion the horses sweat freely, and are subject to a chill as soon as they come to a stop. In all such cases it is a positive piece of cruelty not to have a blanket at hand to protect the horses.

It is not necessary to keep the horses blanketed all the time if the stable is properly built, and it may even be an injury to do so under some circumstances. But in most of our above-ground stables a blanket should be used in severe weather; and in all cases where the horses are being shaped up for market, free use of a good blanket is of great value. It saves feed, makes the coat soft, and hastens the fat-making process. This is hard coin in the horseman's pocket, for fat and hair have a good deal to do with selling even a good horse.

In buying a blanket it pays to get a good one, at least a strong one. The expensive all-wool blankets are not the best for all uses. But the cheap, shoddy blankets have practically no value, as they will not stand the rough usage a blanket will often have to meet, even with the best of care. A pair of good blankets properly taken care of will last long enough so that their use will not cost one dollar per year, an item so small that no horse-owner can afford to let his team go without a liberal and regular use of the blanket whenever its use would add to the comfort of the animal.—Western Stockman and Cultivator.

Throat Affections.

Those who overtax the voice in singing or public speaking will find "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" exceedingly useful, enabling them to endure more than ordinary exertion with comparative ease, while they render articulation clear. For Throat Diseases and Coughs they are a simple yet effective remedy. Containing nothing injurious, they may be used as often as required, and will not disorder the stomach like cough syrups and balsams. For forty years they have been recommended by physicians, and widely used, being known all over the world as one of the few staple cough remedies. Sold only in boxes.

BRONCHITIS

Is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes—the air-passages leading into the lungs. Few other complaints are so prevalent, or call for more prompt and energetic action. As neglect or delay may result seriously, effective remedies should always be at hand. Apply at once a mustard poultice to the upper part of the chest, and, for internal treatment, take frequent doses of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine, saying he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This indisputable evidence of the great merit of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has given me unbounded confidence in the preparation, and I recommend it to my customers, knowing it cannot disappoint them."

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured me of a bad cough and my partner of bronchitis. I know of numerous cases in which this preparation has proved very beneficial in families of so that the medicine is known among them as 'the consoler of the afflicted.'"—Jaime Rufus Vidal, San Cristobel, San Domingo.

"A short time ago, I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis. The remedies ordinarily used in such cases failed to give me relief. Almost in despair of ever finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was helped from the first dose. I had not finished one bottle before the disease left me, and my throat and lungs were as sound as ever."—Geo. B. Hunter, Altoona, Pa.

LODGE NOTES.

The South Dakota Knights of Labor, in session at Pierre, report an increase of 60 per cent in membership the past year.

A corporation license was issued at Springfield Monday to the Pariotic Order Daughters of America of Chicago for the cultivation of patriotism and social virtues.

Rev. Frank Gunsaulus of Chicago, lectured lately in Ann Arbor, Mich , before 2,000 students. He was tendered a banquet after the lecture by the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, of which he is a member.

Colonel Bee, the Chinese Vice Consul at San Francisco, declared before the Congressional Committee on Immigration Monday that there were 1,200 Chinese Highbinders in this country without visible means of support.

The preacher Freemason Pettitt, who was convicted of poisoning his wife and is awaiting the sentence of the court of imprisonment for life, attacked a fellow-prisoner in jail at Crawfordsville, Ind., lately, and beat him severely before he could be taken off.

The Farmers' Alliance, of LaSalle county, Ill., adopted a resolution requesting that the members of the Farmers' Alliance in the Legislature vote for no candidate for the United States Senate who is not in accord with the views of the Alliance upon public questions.

W. McZimmerman, the store-keeper and agent of the Farmers' Alliance supply store in Spartansburg, S. C., is said to be short in his accounts from $15,000 to $30,000. An investigation of the affairs of the store reveals the rankest sort of management, and startling developments are expected.

Eighteen Celestials who reside in Indianapolis, Ind., were lately instructed in the first degree of Chinese Freemasonry by Mang Du, Chief Master and Bishop, of San Francisco. Other noted Chinamen from San Francisco were present. The candidates were in several days hustled through ten degrees. It is the intention to organize other lodges in the State.

Thomas L. Evans, inside foreman of the Hammond colliery, and three of his miners, all residents of Girardville, Pa., have received anonymous lettere warning them to leave the county within fifteen days under penalty of death. The notes bear the skull and cross bones, a coffin, and blood spots, and are written in tones similar to those of the letters distributed by the "Molly Maguires" in the '70's. Great excitement prevails. A few days ago ex-Postmaster Glick, of Girardville, received a similar notice.

In Maryland and Washington, D. C., the Masonic order as a rule will not attend a funeral when any other organization is present to perform any ceremony, or allow any pall-bearers except the members of the lodge. In consequence of this nearly all of the beneficial orders refuse to allow any funeral benefits if they are deprived of performing their service. The question was taken to court and decided that the lodges had a right to make such laws. This action, we regret to say, has deprived many widows and orphans of money that would have been of great service to them in their hour of need.—Baltimore Telegram.

The builders of the new Masonic Temple, corner of State and Randolph streets, had not long since a fire relic that is by far the biggest thing yet unearthed. The site of Hall & Kimbark's big iron warehouse was at this point at the time of the great fire of 1871, and their immense stock of bar iron melted into one great lump, which sank and imbedded itself into the earth too deep for discovery in ordinary building operations. But when the foundations for this building were being prepared this mammoth bunch of melted bar iron was unearthed. The mass is estimated to weigh 28 tons, and how to move it is a problem that is puzzling the contractors. We hope other and more difficult problems will be discovered that shall put a stop to this Masonic castle.

MAULE'S SEEDS LEAD ALL.

Our Catalogue for 1891 is pronounced absolutely the best seed and plant book issued; printed in good legible type, on good paper, it excites the admiration of all. 664 varieties of Vegetables, Flowers, Flowering Plants, Small Fruits, Fruit- and Nut-bearing Trees, etc., are beautifully illustrated, as many as 38 of them being in colors. This catalogue is mailed free to all who ordered in 1890; but as the postage on the book alone is five cents, we must ask all others who are not customers, desiring a copy, to send us twenty-five cents in stamps for it; and in addition to sending our catalogue, we will also mail you, without extra charge, a packet of the wonderful BUSH LIMA BEANS, THE MOST VALUABLE VEGETABLE NOVELTY INTRODUCED IN YEARS; AND A PACKET OF THE NEW MARGUERITE CARNATION, THE FLORAL WONDER OF 1891. These two packets of seeds are worth 25 cents; so it virtually means the same thing as mailing our catalogue free to all who answer this advertisement. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

COUNTRY.

The effect of the Supreme Court decision on the prohibition law in North Dakota is being manifested. Attorney General Spencer this morning forwarded injunction blanks to every State's Attorney, with instruction to enforce the law. The Governor is pledged to enforce the law and there will be no hesitancy on his part.

The New York Sun prints a story that a colossal railway deal is in progress between Jay Gould and others for the consolidation of the Missouri Pacific, Southern Pacific and Atchison roads. If the present plans should succeed it was more than likely that the combine would go further and absorb the Texas Pacific and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas roads. This would represent over 35,000 miles of road, with an aggregate capital of nearly $500,000,000.

The Workingmen's League at Haverhill, Mass., is endeavoring to form an alliance with the farmers of the State, and to build an organization in the East similar to the farmer's confederations in the South and West.

A flood of water bursting through from old deserted mines caused two dreadful disasters in the Pennsylvania coal regions, resulting in the death of 18 men at Hazelton and 3 at Wilkesbarre.

Tuesday, by a collision on the New York Central at East Rochester, N. Y., an engineer was killed and his firemrn was mortally hurt. In a collision at Corry, Pa., an engineer and his fireman were killed and another engineer and two head brakemen were injured. A hand car was run down on a trestle near Marlin, Texas, and one section man was killed and five others badly hurt. A passenger locomotive exploded while running near Cleveland, killing the engineer and fireman.

In a collision at Beach City, Ohio, Wednesday a fireman was killed, a brakeman was mortally and two tramps very seriously hurt.

Charles H. Branscombe, who laid out the city of Lawrence, Kan., for the New England Emigrant Aid Society thirty-seven years ago, died Monday at Denver, Col.

The bolt and nut manufacturing plant of J. Henry Sternbergh & Son at Reading, Pa., the largest of its kind in America, burned Friday night, entailing a loss of $275,000; insured for two-thirds. Six hundred men are thrown out of employment.

At Palestine, Texas, Tuesday, Mayor Ward attacked Sam Jones, the evangelist, with a cane. Jones wrested the cane from the Mayor and give him a beating. Bystanders then separated the two. The Mayor was arrested and his action was denounced at a mass meeting.

At last the constitutional amendment prohibiting lotteries in North Dakota has reached the Governor for his approval. It will have to be submitted to the next Legislature and then to the people.

The worst snow storm of the season, attended by high winds and severe cold, prevailed over all the region from Minnesota to South Dakota, Nebraska and Colorado.

FOREIGN.

The terrific storm which raged over Europe lately seems to have reached China and caused terrible ravages and loss of life there. The flood and weather casualties are also accompanied by famine the province of Schuan, a hilly region, the largest of the provinces of the Chinese Empire, and contains 35,000,000 of people, who are also the most discontented and troublesome of all the Chinese. The suffering now is said to be terrible, and crowds of starving wretches with their houses leveled and bridges and temples demolished are forcing their way eastward toward Shanghai.

The Hamburg-American Steam Packet Company has issued a circular stating that it will not convey any Germans to Brazil. It is understood that this action upon the part of the steamship company is due to the recent complaints of harsh treatment made by German emigrants who have gone to Brazil.

The proof sheets of Captain Casati's new book practically confirm the charges of vacillation and lack of energy brought by Stanley against Emin, and gives the most animated account yet received of how Stanley "stormed" Emin into departing for the coast.

Advices received in London in regard to the recent uprising in Portugal are that 500 of the insurgents have been imprisoned at Oporto. The latest reports place the number of killed at 100.

Gen. Booth is in treaty for an estate in the western portion of Berkshire, England, for his scheme of relief which he foreshadowed in his book, "In Darkest England." The character of the property, which includes twelve cottages, a mill and two residences, makes it peculiarly adapted to the purposes of the General's scheme.

It is understood to-night that Sir John MacDonald, the Canadian premier, has received a severe reprimand from the British government for having made public the text of the proposal of reciprocity he has made through the British Government to the Government of the United States before it has reached the authorities at Washington.

A pastoral letter from the Catholic primate was read in the Catholic churches throughout Ireland condemning Mr. Parnell's conduct, and warning those engaged in the Boulogne negotiations to take care that the compromise reached be definite, as the country will have the last word to say on their issue.

The steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, from China, brings particulars of the burning of the steamer Shanghai December 25th. She had on board 400 Chinese passengers and one European, and carried a cargo of cotton. The cotton caught fire and the Chinese plunged overboard and were drowned or were burned to death to the number of 200 or 300.

The Dissenters of Nottingham, Eng., and neighborhood, have declared a vigorous war against the Mormons. Rev. Mr. Ward, an anti-Mormon missionary, delivered a fervid lecture upon the subject last night at South Normanton, the strongest Mormon center in England. Mr. Ward declared the Mormons were as great polygamists as ever. The matter should be submitted to the House of Commons and the Mormons compelled to abandon Mormonism or leave England.

The Pope has forbidden the Catholic paper to comment on the fall of Signor Crispi, and believes that the ex-Premier will return to power owing to the influence of the dreibund.

Negotiations are said to have been resumed between the Russian government and the Vatican. The latter has several millions of subjects in the Russian empire, to whom it has never yet been permitted to promulgate the doctrine of papal infallibilty and to whose spiritual necessities it can administer only under very oppressive restrictions. It seems that the weakening of the Czar toward the French and Mexican republics has revived papal hopes for some recognition of papal authority by the head of the great Greek church.

A dispatch from Athens, Greece, says that of a party of forty men engaged in re-opening communication with snow-blocked villages between Dimitzana and Tripoljtza, in the Morea, fifteen have been frozen to death, and a number of others have been so badly frostbitten that they are not expected to recover.

The town of Joana, Java, was wrecked by an earthquake on the 12th of last December; twelve persons were killed and seventeen wounded. Districts in the west and middle of Java suffered severely from the shock.

A white book is published in Berlin containing Emin Pasha's reports to the middle of November last. These reports form a record of Emin's extravagance and disregard of instructions. Emin ignored the order to found a station on the Victoria Nyanza. Instead he hoisted his flag at Tabora, in spite of Commissioner Schmid's efforts to dissuade him, the Commissioner objecting on the ground of the great expense. Emin spent 150,000 instead of the 60,000 marks allowed him. He repeatedly complains of the insufficiency of his supplies, owing to which, he says, his men were becoming mutinous. He, therefore, declines the responsibility for the failure for the expedition.

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

The branch of the German Baptist or Brethren church commonly known as "Dunkers," are systematically aiding their poor brethren in Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota who are sorely in need after repeated failure of crops. The work of relief is reduced to system and already some $6,000 has been distributed through the agency of these quiet Christian people. Unlike the Masonic and other secret societies, the money and supplies are freely given to all who are in need, and are not reserved for those who have learned to swap grips, signs and oaths in a secret lodge.

The benefits of secret political organizations, which General Grant declared in his biography "dangerous to any nation," are now experienced in several States. In Michigan the Patrons of Industry are preparing to nominate their "Grand President" for a judge of the Supreme Court. In Illinois and South Dakota long, expensive and exasperating contests for Senator are yet unsettled; and, by means of secret farmers' societies, an attempt is now being made to trade one man for another in both States, and thus secure representatives in our National Senate by secret trickery, who should rather be carefully and honorably chosen as legislators of the people.

The Grand Master of English Freemasonry is complicated with a gambling affair quite as surely, though not so villainously, as the Past Grand Master of Illinois Masons with the whole gambling business of Chicago. Our mayor Cregier has become so notorious that even so mild tempered a gentleman as Dr. Gilbert, of the Advance, says in a public address that he "belies and shames the great trust committed to him." The Prince of Wales on the other hand was not long since participating in a gambling scrape with some of his lordlings, and the anger of one of them over the affair brought it all out in the courts. The only connection, of course, between the lodgery of these men and their gambling is a moral one. The so-called moralty of the lodge does not interfere with such trifles as gambling and prize-fighting. That is the testimony of Sullivan, Cregier and Albert Edward.

One week ago at their usual Sunday meeting, the labor lodges of Chicago adopted a resolution threatening to cut off all their contributions to the World's Fair funds, if anything but secret society labor was engaged in building and other preparatory work. A day or two later, when some countrymen of Columbus were digging in Jackson Park,—the first work for the great exhibition—a mob of Irish and German sewer diggers, in obedience to the Sunday resolution, drove off the foreigners from Italy with such threats and force that they dared not return. If this state of things continue, and the lodge is allowed to dictate, we shall have a Donnybrook and not an American fair.

Preachers should not be lodgemen, was the decision of the Baptist theological students in Morgan Park Seminary near this city. The discussion of the secret society question last week was an interesting incident in the daily record of the institution, but it may prove to be an event in the history of some of the participants. The question discussed was: "Resolved, that ministers of the Gospel should not belong to secret societies." One of the students writes: "We had the debate, and it was good and stirred up no little excitement. The boys entered into it quite heartily. The judges decided unanimously in favor of those opposing secret societies. In the open debate, following regular debate, both sides were represented. There is a large number, perhaps a majority, here in opposition to secret societies. In fact it is difficult to find a student who is outspoken in favor of them."

The Chicago School Board which lately refused the prayer of 16,000 people to restore the Bible to the public schools of this city has just given another exhibition of the dominating influence of the Jesuits. Mr. Ford, a popular principal of one of the large schools, was accused of punishing boys by shutting them in dark dungeons under the school building, where the little fellows were liable to be mutilated by machinery or burned by steam pipes. The two members of the Board, most under the control of the priests, secured the immediate suspension of the teacher, and his case would have had short shrift had not there been a popular uprising against the Star Chamber proceedings of the Board. Parents, children and fellow-teachers joined with such unanimous voice in praising Mr. Ford that the prosecution broke down utterly and in disgrace. The incident has opened the eyes of many citizens to the intrigues of the Jesuits in the school management.

Some have objected that we assume too much in contrasting the saloon and the lodge; that there is no likeness between the two systems and the effort to make one is forced and illogical. Nevertheless men will continue to believe that the two are somewhere joined out of human sight, when they so often use the same agencies, effect the same results, and fraternize in such close relations. For instance, the dynamite plot of May, 1886, which resulted in the killing and maiming of over sixty Chicago policemen, was a secret society affair from first to last. But last week the U. S. detectives arrested one of the leaders of the whisky trust as principal in a dynamite plot, and found in his satchel as he got off the train a destructive chemical agent that burst into flame when poured on a piece of paper. It was to be used in the destruction of a Chicago distillery hostile to the trust, and in such a way that the lives of over a hundred men would have been in imminent danger. A startling chapter in the history of the liquor business is expected when this affair is unfolded by the courts.

Dr. John Hall of New York, is one of the most universally respected preachers of the Word now living. He has said very little in public about specific reforms, but the fundamental principles of righteousness which he maintains, cover all particular cases like the lodge and the saloon. In respect to the secret society question, we shall some day hear an earnest voice from him when the providence of God shall put the duty before him. Meantime the Christian World of Dayton reports to us a late address to the students of Lafayette College, in which Dr. Hall says: "Young men, attend the services of God's house and neglect not the ordinances. There is a dangerous tendency abroad nowaday toward excessive organization, toward the seemingly endless multiplication of orders and societies of all kinds everywhere. Be careful not to allow any of these to be for you a substitute for the church of Jesus Christ. That is a great and pressing danger of the times we live in. People slice off one vice from the great mass of all sin and vice, and then they start a separate organization for the uprooting of that particular form of wrong doing; and then they slice off another and start another society for that, and so on. Or, on the other hand, they slice off one special virtue from the great body of all virtue, and set afoot some new organization for the cultivation of this particular species of goodness; and then they take off another slice for another society, and so it goes. Instead of this we need to see that in the church of Jesus Christ is the remedy for all sin, and the highest possible incentive to all virtue, even 'the grace of God that bringeth salvation, teaching us that denying ungodliness and all worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world.'"

POLICY AS AN INHERITANCE.

If a minister takes for his examples the prophets and the apostles of our Lord, policy cannot be his first consideration. That they were singularly impolitic was demonstrated by their martyrdom.

But since policy and prudence are advised and attempted, it is fair to ask which way prudent policy really lies. Was it a true policy or a safe prudence on the part of that generation of ministers who preceded us, to allow the lodge to come so heavily on the hands of us who follow them? Was it good policy or safe policy for them and the churches under their lead, to fight slavery and let its great ally alone, or to fight the saloon and not its protector? Was it policy while building up the churches to allow the devil to build forts beside them?

It is hard to speak back toward grey hairs or honored head-stones, but it is certain that our churches and ourselves suffer to-day from the awful results of a most impolitic policy that has been fully tried.

For my own part I am not at all satisfied with the results of this protracted and vigorous experiment. The silence has been very loud and its echoes thunder.

But the past cannot be helped and the new present is here. May not what was timidity or temerity them, have become necessary prudence now?

Every school-boy knows what Daniel Webster made Patrick Henry say on a similar question. Surely the hope, in our case, has proved a "delusive phantom," and the very basis of our counsellor's caution is, that our enemies have already "bound us hand and foot." "When shall we be stronger?" How much strength have we accumulated thus far by our "irresolution and inaction?"

In the greatest of all his orations Demosthenes denounced his rival as a traitor and an enemy of Athens, because he counselled such a policy as is now thought not unworthy of the Christian church. He vindicated that city's declining such counsel by asking, "Was it right, that what she saw would happen if unprevented, and was for a long time, it seems, aware of, she should suffer to come to pass?"

That question, which first related to the city where it was "easier to find a god than a man," can be transferred to the Christian church without the change of a single word. And if Æschines was a traitor to Athens, and played the wolf in sheep's clothing, when he counselled waiting to see what would happen, and promised that Philip should prove not an enemy but a friend, what can be too severe to say of men who assure us that all is well, and that nothing is better for us than the policy that was rejected by Athens long ago!

This enemy of Christ and the church, like all crimes and criminals, looks for darkness and clamors for silence. Crime is never more active than in attempts to secure inaction. Its arm never strikes harder than when, because "dead men tell no tales," its heaviest investment is a bribe. Speak, and the reptile sounds its warning rattle; move, and it coils to strike.

That which is most vital to the growth and power of our enemy, is exactly what this well-tried policy of our predecessors has actually secured. Silence is what it feeds upon, and we have fed it to the full while it has grown to huge proportions.

We have stacked our arms, and sung around our camp-fires, while the enemy has foraged on our own fields. We have fairly provided the other army with ammunition and rations.

But granting we have, it may be urged that it is too late to do anything now. I answer, it is too late to do nothing. A growing danger, big enough to fear, is already too big not to fight. Both policies have been tried; and we know how they have resulted.

One rescued forty-five thousand souls and kept thousands more out of Satan's snare. The other has stood by and let the tide drift that way again.

One swept out of sight fifteen hundred synagogues of Satan, and prevented opening hundreds more. The other stands by and sees sun-worshiping temples rise to insult the sun and it Creator.

Both have been tested, and the products of both are full before our eyes. What more is to be said? Physicians promise nothing for a new remedy before experiments are tried. Mechanics believe in a machine when they see it run.

Here are two things that have long passed the experimental stage. What has spoken truth done, or what has it failed to do? What has this over-prudent, so-called policy, and long-tried discretion done that is good? What that is bad has it undone or prevented?

We are dealing with a wicked enemy. It is anti-Christian to the last degree. It is anti-American as well. It lies like its own father, and its feet are swift to shed blood. Not content with killing men, it damns their souls. With loud but hollow pretenses of care for widows and orphans, it makes them such. All truth that is true, all morality that is moral, all religion that is religious, suffers outrage. What policy shall we pursue with such a thing? The policy

THAT KILLS A RATTLESNAKE.

Let who will, run.

Why should we postpone the battle any longer? It must inevitably come, and, while we wait, the enemy is throwing up intrenchments all around. Thus far, it is fighting that has won the victory. What good is silence doing? Silence is the asylum of burglars and assassins. It is something evil that seeks silence and darkness; it is nothing good that furnishes them.

At all events, brethren in the ministry, ordained between the plow and the altar to the service of Him who spoke and died, let us know no policy that cuts across the lines of a divine plan, no prudence that does not dwell with wisdom. Freemasonry makes hollow boasts. I know it has power for mischief, but we are soldiers; Freemasonry does not own the earth. It has to hide to live. There is room for us in the sunshine. Freemasonry leaves that to us. Or, if it slinks through the shadows and plays the snake in the grass even there, then, if in that bad sense it does possess the world, there is room for us in the universe after this world is left out of our range. We are going to our Master, not in the "lodge above," but where the lodge and its real grand master can never come to do Christ's servants harm. CRUCIFER.

GOOD TEMPLARISM BEFORE THE NORWEGIAN SYNOD.

BY REV. O. JUUL, PASTOR OF OUR SAVIOUR'S CHURCH, CHICAGO.

A conference of a number of the clergy belonging to the Norwegian Lutheran Synod was lately held at Deerfield, Wisconsin. One day of its time was set aside for an open and free discussion on religious topics with the members of the Lutheran congregation at that place.

As a lodge of the Good Templar order had lately been started in the town it was very natural that the pastor of the church was anxious to get some light thrown on the workings of the secret societies—and especially on the order of Good Templars. One of the members of the church there, a very active and prominent man, had been persuaded to join that lodge, and was now one of its chief leaders. He expressed his astonishment that we were against the order of Good Templars and that we placed it on the same line with Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship; he thought that this must be because we knew too little about the order. He said that they prayed in their lodge meetings, and always in the name of Jesus.

This assertion was doubted by one of the ministers present who read a few prayers from the book, "Good Templarism Illustrated," wherein the name of the Saviour did not occur; but the man had the boldness to state to the audience: "It must be a false and spurious ritual that the pastor has got hold of."

The pastor then asked him: "Can a Unitarian become a member of the Good Templar lodge?"

He answered: "Yes, if he replies satisfactorily to the questions that are put to him."

The pastor asked again: "In regard to the confession of faith, is not this question put to the candidate, 'Do you believe in the existence of Almighty God, the Ruler and Governor of all things?'"

The Good Templar: 'Yes, that is the question."

Again he was asked: "Can a Unitarian satisfactorily answer yes to that question?"

The Good Templar thought that he could.

"Will he then be admitted as a member of the lodge?" was the next question.

The Good Templar had no doubt that he would.

The conclusion was now drawn, and it was plainly and forcibly shown him and all present, that using the name of Jesus in the lodge was nothing but sheer blasphemy; as a Unitarian, be he in other respects ever so good a man, is a confessed denier of Christ and of the Trinity. By forming a brotherhood with the deniers of Christ and having devotional exercises with them, a Lutheran or any other Christian becomes himself a denier.

The Good Templar was somewhat staggered by being driven into this corner and held fast there. And the writer of these lines is persuaded that this argument against the secret lodge system is the most telling and convincing, whether you speak with a man single-handed or defend your position before an audience.

THE LODGE AT THE DEATH-BED.

BY REV. W. J. A. WENN.

No Christian who is a close observer of lodgery, but must acknowledge, if unprejudiced, that its worship is idolatry. Satan ever seeks to emulate and outrank Christ. Is Christ King? So is this "prince of the powers of the air." Is Christ God? So is the devil, "the god of this world;" and to him the children of this world pay homage in one way or in another.

Now the lodge is the devil's church. Lodgeites are ever religious. So were the pagan Athenians. When Paul spoke to them, he told them that they were "too religious." (R. V. Marg., Acts 17: 22.) The majority of these lodge clans are not Christians, yet they bow and pray to their god. He may be called the "Supreme Chancellor of the Universe," or the "Grand Commander of the Universe," or by some such meaningless, grandiloquent and bombastic name. Yet these devotees render him worship, which is idolatry. When they approach him they are neither righteous nor reverent. The blasphemous breath will do as well as any to utter his name; their priests need not be pious at all. When they offer prayer, they go in their own name and stand on their own merits, for have they not paid their lodge dues and made brethren of all the "sons of Belial?" The lodge god is not trinity in unity. It knows not Christ, dispenses with his infinite merits and despises his atoning blood. Now, we know that God heareth not the prayers of the wicked, for he has expressly told us, that "the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord." (Prov. 15: 8.) What a reproach is this to a man who professes to have "turned from idols" "to serve the living God!" How his practice belies his profession; how can he meet the God who hates idolatry with a perfect hatred?

Two months ago a man was dying. He was without God and without hope in the world. His wife was a member of the M. E. church. Her pastor was asked to visit him. He did so and the sufferer learned of Christ and told me when I saw him a little while before his death, that his trust was in the Saviour.

In one of our town papers there are two notices of this man's decease. Both of them affirm his relation to lodgery; neither of them his connection with Christ. The obituary informs us, that the "funeral services were conducted from the M. E. church by Erie lodge, No. 109, K. of P., of which he was a consistent and zealous member." The other notice consists of a set of resolutions (so-called) which are more truly a series of affirmations describing lodge religion, the lodge faith and the lodge heaven. From these we learn that: "The Supreme Chancellor of the Universe did on Sunday morning, January 19, 1891, summons the spirit of our brother, ———, to the castle hall of the faithful and believing Knights in the realms of immortal glory. We bow in submission to the will of Him above, realizing that he has taken from our Knightly ranks, one in whom the chivalric principles of friendship, charity and benevolence were firmly installed. The bright dawn of the new day came calmly to our brother, and he met it with a moral heroism characteristic of Pythian cardinal virtues," etc., etc.

Observe how scrupulously this precious memoir avoids the contamination of anything Christian. See also that the Knights of Pythias have, or pretend to have, either bought, leased or built or borrowed "a castle hall" in the realms of immortal glory. Of the committee of three who signed this precious production, but one is a professing Christian. One other is "a Knightly scoundrel," whom I saw a week ago at one o'clock in the morning, drunk and disfigured. He boarded the same train I did, with soot on his face, a fool's hat on his head, going, as he told the people in the car, "going down the road to have a hell of a time!" I expect if he ever gets to that "castle hall," he will have a bigger time than he anticipated so gleefully.

On Saturday evening last, a Freemason, Knight of Honor, and professing Christian died. A somewhat singular thing was noticeable. He sent for two unconverted lodgemen to stay with him till he died, and they did so; he also sent word for no one else to come. What can true Christians think of this?

There is a doctor in this town who is a professed agnostic, and yet he has swallowed Odd-fellowship entirely as a "bonhomie" swallows an oyster. I took occasion to show him the curious and glaring inconsistency of his conduct. I have spoken to over a hundred Christians since coming here, on the sin of lodge idolatry. God save his sheep from this wolf in sheep's clothing.

Erie, Kansas.

If Christ were again on earth he would surely speak out against the abuse of the social principle and of the false method of raising church money resorted to in church fairs and festivals; against one rich, worldly man, practically determining who should occupy the pulpit of the church which he attended; and against men becoming ministers not for the sake of souls, but for the sake of the profession and its emoluments. —Christian Witness.

THE ST. LOUIS SERMON.

THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D.D.,

IN CENTENARY M. E. CHURCH, ST. LOUIS, JAN. 4, 1891, AGAINST SECRET SOCIETIES AND FRATERNITIES.

The explanation of this scene is in order. Why is it that there are a number of strange faces here to-day? Why is it that there are reporters from the newspapers here to-day taking down each word? It seems that two weeks ago, standing in this pulpit and preaching on the subject of kindness, and allowing myself, as I always have since a minister, to he the champion of the home, by my life and word trying to secure the happiness of the wife and child there, I pointed out the enemies of the home and drew a picture that God blessed to the melting of the entire audience, and to my own melting,—of the wife and child left alone at home; of the little hoy asking for his father, saying, "Where is papa to-night?" of his kneeling down and saying at the knees of his mother, "God hless papa;" later still asking, "Will he come home to-night?"—finally going to hed and dreaming of his ahsent father, who is gone night after night. It would be impossible for me to reproduce the scene that I drew in the glow of the occasion and the inspiration of the moment. But I noticed that God hlessed it all over this audience. Then I suddenly arraigned the saloon and the political party and the secret society as striking at the happiness of the American home.

I arraigned the secret fraternity as standing next to the saloon and being the curse of the home, the one feature in my mind heing the loneliness of the home; the one thought in my mind being, what is it that takes him away from home? It was not an analogy that was to run side hy side with the saloon. No man in sanity of mind would run the two institutions together as an analogy side by side, hut the only thought in my mind was, What it is that is emptying our homes of men; and then in that burst of feeling I arraigned secret fraternities as heing the cause of the loneliness of the home and the curse of the home next to the saloon in that category. I have more to say ahout societies to-day than I had then; but that was all that was in my mind on that day.

Let me say that I do not speak for the Methodist church here. I am not indorsed hy my official hoard at all. I have not asked their indorsement. I have never asked any man to indorse me. I stand indorsed hy God in my sermons and in my remarks. In regard to this speech of mine to-day, let any antagonism I may awaken or any opprobrium that may come from these remarks—let it come to me. You never saw a man in your life that could stand more ahuse and he happier than the man that is hefore you. [Sympathetic rustle in the audience.] These views I speak from the depths of my heart; they are the result of long ohservation of these fraternal societies, and they have heen gradually accumulating until they have formed this argument which I fling out before you this morning.

WHO SHOULD BE HURT?

1. The first point I make is, that the angry excitement of the fraternities over my remark is to be construed unfavorahly to them.

We should remember that conscious innocence is always quiet. There is nothing more tranquil under heaven than a man who is conscious that he is full of integrity and innocence to the hottom of his heart. How often is the church of Christ hlasphemed and attacked on the streets of St. Louis. You notice that we do not reply in the papers. We do not condemn the men who attack us. Do you know why? Because the church of Christ knows that it is true; that it is spotless, and that it has not a single vulnerahle spot in it as it stands related to God. Can you tell me why it is that for two weeks I have felt so quiet and peaceful in spite of the attacks made upon me? It is hecause I knew I was innocent of the things said about me.

Now, when a single sentence can stir up societies and fraternities all over the land in a spirit of anger, I cannot but argue that somehody has been certainly hurt. Now, you pass your hand over a heautiful horse. How a horse loves the stroke of his master's hand if he is well and sound! But the instant you touch an unsound spot on the back, how he flinches! If I threw a rock down the street where there were twenty or thirty gentlemen, and I saw one throw up his hands and halloo, I am just as certain that I hit him as that I live. The other gentlemen are quiet, and I say that I did not hit them. My friends, in all kindness I say to you that somebody has been hit in the last two weeks as certain as I stand here. [Sensation in the audience.] When I said these fraternities struck at the happiness of the home, that language struck somebody certain. Bear in mind that I did not mean to say that every man that belonged to a society treated his family wrong, but what I intended to convey was that the result of such a life was to strike at the happiness of the home.

One day, at the plantation of my aunt in Mississippi, there came a man along and asked for work, and we hired him and put him up in the gin raking cotton. About two weeks afterward a gentleman came along the road, and I noticed in his overcoat a pistol, and he asked me if we had hired anybody lately. I said "Yes." He said he would like to see the man. He walked up into the loft of the gin, and when his eyes fell on this man we had hired he said these remarkahle words to him, "Forty-nine, do you know me?" And you never saw a man so astounded in your life, and the surrender of the man was evident. His loins gave way and his ankle-hones failed him, and he melted in his tracks, as it were. Now, that was his numher; he was an escaped convict. If he had said, "One hundred and eighty, do you know me?" it would not have moved the man; he knew that was not his number. Do you begin to take it in? When I said the other day that the fraternities of our land were striking at the happiness of our homes, from the agitation that resulted from that remark I judge that I must have called somebody's number. [Sensation.]

I am not thinking of any one in particular now. I am just taking up the fact of secrecy. However desirable and necessary it was to have secret associations fifty years ago and a hundred years ago and in the Dark Ages, I cannot recognize the need in the light of the nineteenth century. I have helonged to secret political organizations, and therefore I speak advisedly when I say that I do not feel that the necessity exists to-day for secrecy in orders. You say your orders are benevolent. If they are benevolent, what is the use of their heing secret? What is the use of signs and grips and passwords to cover up these things and make mystery? What is the need of it? If it is something more than henevolence, then have you ulterior purposes, and you are not what you seem; therefore in the sight of God you stand as not heing true; you stand, in a measure, as being deceived and deceitful. The very fact of the secrecy of orders disposes me against them. If you recall their history you will remember that the blessing of God never was on them. I do not know that they ever succeeded in the ends they aimed at. I could call your attention to a secret organization that once flourished in London. I could tell you of the religious secret society called the Jesuits, that was expelled from one country to another. I could tell you of a secret corporation in the city of New Orleans, hut God forhid that I should compare the Louisiana State Lottery with any fraternity in my own country. We are talking about secrecy now. That was a corporation that was secret, for we never could get the names of the stockholders.

Where a hody of men are banded together for a purpose which is unknown to a great portion of the community, it creates uneasiness in the community and a feeling that the welfare of the public is in danger. The effect of these organizations is, I say, to produce a general uneasiness and unrest throughout the land. Yes, you say, but you are not conscious that you had any purposes that were like the organizations I refer to. I did not say that you had. But this I do press upon you, if you are a benevolent organization, why should it he a secret one? My friends, if we have got the truth on our side, we have got God on our side, and we need fear nothing. The very fact of going into secrecy is an acknowledgment of weakness and looks suspicious.

3. The method of initiation is wrong.

I do not mean to say that all of these fraternities have what you call but many of them do. One of the nohlest orders of our land to-day has a degree in which that is the main feature, and the result is hilarity. Many of these fraternities are now defunct, and their peculiar courses and methods are known. There has crept out a general knowledge of these things in the puhlic, so that you must not suppose that I am stating to you a single fact that I have ohtained in secrecy, as God is my judge. I now use no knowledge of my own, hut simply the general statement and general knowledge throughout the land in regard to the fact of a man being made the hutt of ridicule for half an hour hy fifty or a hundred of his fellow creatures.

I have great veneration for the human body, for it is the temple of the Holy Ghost. I venerate man because he is made in the image of God. When you strike at a man you strike at the image of God. This is the awfulness of murder. You say the Bible says that there is a time to laugh, hut the Bihle does not say there is a time to laugh at people. The spirit of the Bihle is against making man the object of ridicule, sport and butt of people. At college, in one of these secret fraternities where I helonged, a numher of which have heen suppressed since, one young man never recovered during the whole time of his collegiate course from the treatment he received; and the wonder of my heart is how a minister of the Gospel can ever consent to come into a fraternity where he is thus made ridiculous, and the wonder to me is how men who helong to these fraternities can ever venerate him the same after looking at him for half an hour thrown into the most ahsurd and ridiculous positions. He is a man of God, and as such should he considered holy and sacred. I might look for hoys to indulge in such absurdities, but for bearded men to be found thus engaged excites my unqualified wonder. Paul says, when he was a child he spake as a child and thought as a child, but when he became a man he put away childish things.

4. A forcible ohjection is the costliness of these orders.

It costs you $10 to $125 to get in. I can mention a lodge where it takes $125 to get in. O my sister, how it would make your heart sing for joy if that were laid down in your hands. [Stir among the lady members of the congregation.] Then comes the costliness of association and fellowship necessarily created hy being cast with men after that order. Then there is the costliness of attending upon the distribution of your henevolence. From the United States statistics of 1883 I get this: A fraternity of 550,000 members in it received $5,000,000; $2,000,000 of that were given to the poor and the sick, the afflicted and the trouhled, and it took over $3,000,000 to meet their regular expenses, so that it cost that fraternity $3 to give away $2. [Sensation.]

If our church did that way there would he

A LAUGH ALL OVER THE COUNTRY.

If you look at the missionary enterprises of our church, we get $100,000 given to benefit and lift up the heathen, and it costs us just exactly $5,000 to get that $100,000 in operation and apply it; that is, it costs us 5 cents to distrihute a dollar; and it costs that fraternity, according to the United States statistics, $3 to give away $2. Now, if you come to a consideration of the poor in our church, it costs not a single cent to distribute all the gratuities and contrihutions that our church makes to the poor. Just contrast the two.

I might mention the costliness of the uniforms of your order. One order costs $35, and another order $75. Just think of it! God knows I am speaking not for popularity to day, hut because I love the truth and because I love you. To think of a man walking around the streets a mass of fluttering feathers and the tinkle of glittering huttons, in all the paraphernalia of a gorgeous uniform costing $75, and his wife wearing calico of the price of $1.50 at home [A suppressed titter through the audience], and when she walks the streets in the $5 dress she has got on, she is a wonderfully favored woman. Look at the man who is now a memher of a benevolent society, walking around fluttering in feathers, with nearly $100 on him, who says, "I am in a benevolent society." I never shall forget the story that I heard of the man who sold coal for a living. One hitter, hitter cold morning in winter his clerk came into his office, and he says, "Is it very cold outside?" The clerk says, "Yes, sir; it is very cold." "Is it freezing outside?" The clerk says, "Yes." Then he says, "Is it cold enough to make a fellow's fingers ache as he walks?" "O yes, sir; colder than that, sir." "Well," he says, "John, raise the price of coal 10 cents a hushel; the Lord help the poor." My brethren, as you put on your uniforms costing $75, and after adorning your hodies, walk out into the streets, how does it appear? Just such a contradictory and inconsistent life. Here give me a fine uniform to wear—the Lord help the poor.

5. The political influence of secret fraternities.

Now this point I make, and that is the question of political and municipal influence born of these societies. I make this charge on no society here, when I tell you that I got an official envelope that long and that thick [indicating] the other day, and if I were to speak ahout the tremendous influence of the fraternities in our courts of law here you would open your eyes. In the matter of the acceptance of jurors and the rejection of jurors, and in appointments, this magical word is wonderful in its influence:

"THAT MAN BELONGS TO OUR LODGE."

"That man don't helong to our lodge." Why, that was one of the things that aroused us in Louisiana to such hurning indignation, when we found out that the lottery company was tampering with our courts; that it was exerting its influence where it ought never to have been felt.

There are two places that should be signally free from a handed outside influence; where no man should be known after the flesh, and where rich and poor, and high and low, should he dealt with exactly alike, without partiality and without favor. One of these places is the church of God, and the other the temple of justice. In the courts every man should stand on his merits; and when secret orders and fraternities hegin to encroach there, and make themselves felt, they are striking at the integrity of the home and trampling under foot the rights of the American citizen.

6. These secret fraternities are rapidly becoming clubs and convivial gatherings.

No matter what was the object for which they started, they are evidently going in this direction. Now you all know what a club is. I never heard of a man getting converted to God in a club in my life. I never heard of a man getting religion in a cluh in my life. I never heard of a man called of God to preach from a cluh in my life. A lady told me in New Orleans—and I will never forget her look—she says, "We women have heen 'clubhed' to death." Under that witticism I read the wail of a woman's hroken heart. Is it so that our fraternities and societies are drifting in that direction to hecome cluhs? I left a pile of letters at home which I received. I have made no efforts to get facts. I have not appealed to the puhlic, as some have, to get facts. But how much has voluntarily come to me! One letter that I have got, if I were to read it to you would startle you, if I could get my own consent to read it.

Did you ever hear of such a thing as banquets in connection with these fraternities and societies? What happens at a banquet? In many, many of the fraternities there is, as far as I can hear, wine and beer flowing freely. When it flows freely you know what happens. An article in the Evening Chronicle the other day said that these fraternities were to build up humanity. Now look at a man as he comes from a banquet late at night and see if he is built-up humanity.

7. Secret fraternities strike at the happiness of the home.

This is done in several ways, but I mention but one. This way is seen in the frequent and protracted absence from home; it is a devoted connection which the fraternity brings about. Night after night the father and husband is away from the family circle, and this continues for years. It was just here that I drew the picture of the little boy asking for his father that so affected the audience two weeks ago,

"WILL PAPA COME HOME TO-NIGHT?"

"Will he be back soon?" Then at his mother's knee he prayed, "God bless papa." And that night he dreamed of his father.

This picture, which I fully drew at the time, the papers have made much sport of by saying that the same thing would apply in regard to a man's absence at the frequent meetings of the church. That the child would ask just as eagerly for his father and be told that he could not see him on account of his being present at the social and religious meetings of the church. Thus I myself was guilty as this parent. All this sounded very plausible, but will not bear inspection. I call your attention to its weakness. In the first place a man can carry his wife and children to the church meetings with him, but they cannot so accompany him to the lodge. Again, a man can return from the church in the early hours of the night, but the hours of returning from this meeting of secret societies are far from early. As far as my personal case, which demands frequent and protracted absences from my family, both day and night, let me say that mine is a vocation. I am called of God for a peculiar work. My life is bound to be a sacrifice for the sake of my fellow men. I love my home; I delight in the companionship of my books; I love to be with my wife and children, but all these I have to forego at the call of duty as a minister. At any hour, at all hours, day or night, the people can claim my time, by virtue of the peculiar office I fill. This is not the case with you. You are not thus called to leave the family circle for a fraternity circle; there is no mighty necessity, no divine call thus laid upon you. It is in these absences of the father and husband from the little group, where they are so much needed, that I say the happiness and well being of the home is struck at.

I believe that I speak the sentiment of countless thousands of wives to-day when I say that they would rather far have the company of their husbands at home than the insurance policy at the end of their lives, if they have to choose between. Ask them now, ask them anywhere, which will you have, the love and presence of your husband or the policy of $2,000 or $3,000, and the answer would roll like a tidal wave from every true hearted woman: Give me my husband! Let me have his love and old-time devotion, they would say, and let the money go. Why, for a woman to feel otherwise would be to transform her

INTO A JUDAS.

Recently I had to visit my study a lady of most prepossessing appearance. Her name will remain a secret with me, but the confession of a broken-hearted woman I give you. She told me how her life had been desolated. I shall never forget the sorrow of her countenance. She said her husband was absent Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights until 12 and 1 o'clock. Then one night, she, with a burst of grief, said to him, "My husband, suppose I would stay from you this late every night; how long would you live with me?" And he folded his arms, looked into her face a second, and replied, "Just about five minutes, madam!" And yet, what he would not endure he expects a woman to stand. The idea utterly escapes the man that there is any suffering upon the female side.

I have a letter from a prominent lady in Chicago that if I were to read would make your heart ache. She attributes a broken heart and a ruined home to the influence of secret fraternities upon her husband. She says she is willing to go before any tribunal in the land and can substantiate all she says.

8. These fraternities rob Christ of his glory.

We all know that benevolence, or Christian charity, as we see it in its manifold and beautiful forms, is the result of the presence and influence of Christ in the heart and in the world. We fail to see such things in the heathen world. Charity belongs to Christianity. It is the work of Christ. Now, when a man gives and fails to acknowledge Christ in the gift, he has

of his peculiar glory.

Let me illustrate: In a certain distant city there exists a newspaper that is anti-Christ, anti-religion, anti-everything that is holy. Whenever a case of public suffering comes up his paper opens its columns for contributions, and the contributions flow in. Two-thirds of the donors are Christian men and women inspired by the love of Christ; but mark you, a Christless newspaper gets the glory, and not the Saviour.

So you can take the benevolences of all these secret fraternities and Christ is not acknowledged or thought of. One half of the members belong to the church and give because of Christ being in their hearts and lives, but Christ does not get the glory—instead, a fraternity that may be worldly in its name and spirit gets the honor and credit.

All Christian giving when not done in the name of Jesus Christ is robbing the Son of God of his glory.

9. The fraternity hurts us in the matter of church attendance.

According to my observations the more devoted a man is to his lodge or fraternity the less devoted is he to his church. The claims of a secret society are only too apt to monopolize his time and energies to the slighting and oftentimes the neglect of the house of God. I remember a time when I had great difficulty in getting some of my members to attend an important church meeting. One could not come on Monday night on account of his lodge—a second could not appear Tuesday evening because of his fraternity meeting at that hour, and so on through the week. Each one heard a higher call than that of the church, and that higher call was his lodge.

What would you call this? Is it being a rival to the church? Is God grieved at such a spectacle? At one of the churches I once served there was a steward who attended one prayer meeting only in the month; the other three Wednesday evenings he was attending the meetings of the different fraternities to which he belonged. How did God regard that, do you suppose? The Bible says he is a jealous God. Is there not much in such a life as this to awaken the divine jealousy and displeasure? By and by this kind of life affects even the Sabbath attendance. The man hardens and becomes careless and indifferent, and then we miss him Sabbath nights, and finally altogether. The influence of the associations and the effect of church depreciation becomes unmistakably manifested.

When God looks down and sees a church member, who is a fraternity man, failing to come to prayer meeting and the Sunday-night service, and yet never failing to be present at the meeting of his lodge, then is he bound to be grieved.

[Concluded next week.]

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A terrible story.—A woman on lodge titles.—Lodge legislation.—A social decision that proves the advancement of womanhood.—Salvation Army anecdotes.—A G. A. R. funeral sermon.—Ministers afraid of Sunday papers.—A Good Templar witness.

If anything is needed to convert one with ordinary humanitarian impulses to prohibition, it ought to be the awful story told by Mrs. Beckman, who in self-defense killed her drunken husband a short time since, and now lies in Portsmouth jail with her infant only nine weeks old, awaiting her trial. It is one that might well make the angels weep. What strikes me as most peculiar about the case is its exceeding rarity. It has been stated by careful count from reliable statictics that 3,004 women have been killed by their drunken husbands in the United States during the last two years, but the sensation caused by Mrs. Beckman's case shows how very unusual is any attempt at self-defense on the part of these unfortunate victims. One sickens at the dreadful list of domestic tragedies of which this is only a single instance; and even the most orthodox can hardly help agreeing with Dr. Miner, who remarked, after listening to one of Mr. Moody's Tremont Temple addresses in which he gave the liquor fraternity an unmerciful scoring, that "The only trouble with Mr. Moody is that his hell is too far off. Better a little of it for the rum-seller in this life rather than more of it after death."

A somewhat singular bill has been introduced into the New Hampshire Legislature by Prof. Angell of Derry, which gives to the State the sole right to sell liquor, and that to be used only in the arts, or for mechanical, chemical and medicinal purposes. There is some question whether the State can be trusted in this capacity, but there is no question whatever as to the foredoomed failure of the bill. License men on their side are urging a repeal of the present prohibitory law, while ex-Governor Goodell and others are bravely battling to preserve every inch of it intact.

Straws which show how the current of popular opinion is tending on the lodge question, are now quite common on the great, overflowing stream of the daily press. Witness the following from "Lancer," the Traveler correspondent. "Lancer," by the way, is a woman, but she deserves her nom de plume for she gives many a sharp thrust at popular follies:

"It is curious to note that in this great republic, where we pride ourselves on declaring all men free and equal, that there yet has to be some channel where men can work off their smothered love of self-honor and self-superiority. To those outside the mysterious pale of lodges and secret societies this desire for honor for honor's sake seems to be the aim and end of the members of such societies. It must be an immense satisfaction to be treated and addressed as worshipful master, supreme governor, great prophet, grand regent, imperial herald, etc., even if such distinction can be recognized but once a week, and then for a few hours only. And the man who gums shoes nine hours of every day in the week but Sunday, becomes during those one or two happy hours of 'lodge night' as bumptious a grand dictator as though he were born to the manor instead of the bench."

One of the pending bills in the New Hampshire Legislature, requires the benefit or endowment insurance societies to make annual returns to the insurance commissioner of the State, who if satisfied that any of them are unworthy of confidence, can apply to the Supreme Court to close up its affairs. This bill, if passed, may have the effect of driving more of these swindling societies over the line into Massachusetts, unless prompt action is taken by her present Legislature to abate the nuisance. It is doubtful, however, whether anything will be done, for while the general public are by no means awake to the moral and financial harm—and I put the moral evil first—which these orders are doing, they themselves are fully aware of the importance of maintaining their legal status, and are exerting a hidden but very powerful influence to that end.

One of the signs that woman has, as I once heard the evangelist, Mrs. H. J. Pierson, express it, "come to her majority," is the fact that it is now considered quite old-fashioned and in bad form to use the word "lady" as a prefix when speaking of any female employment, as for instance, "lady teacher." "Woman teacher" is the correct thing. So says a social authority; and even the formal, "Ladies and gentlemen" before a public address is now nearly obsolete. This is a result of the new and more equal position in which the sex stands to-day; and I attribute the change in part to the influence of the numerous organizations for religious and philanthropic work, with the prefix, "Woman's" before them. All the motherhood of humanity throbs in that word, and well may we jealously guard its royal dignity. It is certainly something to be thankful for that we are coming nearer the idea of the New Testament age when "Woman" was the most honorable name that could be bestowed on even the mother of our Lord.

That was a very apt reply made by Mrs. Major Park of the Salvation Army, to a bar-keeper who said that he thought the Herald (the Army organ published at Worcester) would do very well to wrap up whisky bottles: "Yes, brother, that is so; buy a dozen and spread salvation as well as damnation." The sainted Catherine Booth has many "doubles" among the women of the Salvation Army, who move like angels in the midst of the roughest and most degraded, fearless of harm and insult; like the one who was recently taking up a collection when a wretch with the outside form of a man held up a five dollar bill and inquired, "Where shall I meet you?" "She smilingly replied, "In heaven I hope;" and passed on, so fully panoplied in her celestial armor that the vile insinuation could not touch her sweet serenity of soul.

A letter just received from one of our leading anti-secret workers in New England, states that the New York Tribune Almanac for 1891, contains the names of 150 universities and colleges in the United States, but has no room for Wheaton College. It is lodge policy not "to damn with faint praise," but with the boycott of dead silence all persons and institutions unfavorable to them. So this is no subject for marvel, but it is a wonder that so many Christian people cannot see that the minor secret orders are infusing the virus of unbelief into our nation much faster than all the apostles of "the new departure" which is so disturbing the churches. In the same letter he states that a few days ago he attended the funeral of a friend, who, though an Anti-mason had been drawn into the G. A. R., with the honors of which order he was of course buried. The officiating clergyman in his remarks extolled the G. A. R. to the very heavens, but never once did he mention to the members that they needed Christ, or urge upon them the duty of beginning to serve him. What impression can words like these make on the mind of a young man save this: that instead of Christ being the only door by which to enter heaven, there are in fact as many doors as there are secret lodges. I wonder how many revival meetings it would take to counteract the influence of one such funeral sermon.

The Congregationalist ministers of New England are sadly afflicted with the spirit of compromise. At the Connecticut Valley Congregational Club of ministers lately held in Northampton, Rev. Dr. Taylor, Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, opened a discussion on Sabbath Observance, in which, though the current of opinion was strongly against the Sunday newspapers, it was voted unadvisable to pass any resolutions against it, but as a substitute the chief officials were requested to visit the proprietors of the Springfield Republican, and urge the discontinuance of its Sunday edition. But the Sunday Republican gets published all the same, and only a jibe in its columns on the ministers who called, and the assertion of its great moral superiority over Boston's Sunday dailies, is the somewhat barren result.

The head of the Massachusetts Good Templars has published a letter to the order in which he states that 80 per cent of their losses in membership "are men and women who leave our order, because they have no time to waste in frivolous levity, in useless bickering, and in criminal inactivity, during which our lodges violate our obligations every day." This striking testimony from authority that cannot be questioned only confirms what Dr. Chas. Jewett so well said on this point years ago.

REFORM NEWS.

MASONIC JESUITS AND PROTESTANT JESUITS.

BOSTON, Feb. 8th, 1891.

I visited and distributed at the M. E. and Baptist ministers' meeting to-day, the addresses of brethren Grant and Cunningham. They were in every instance kindly received, and in some instances parties returned for extra copies. On Saturday afternoon, by permission of Dr. Cullis, I distributed the same addresses to the Holiness Convention, held in Dr. Cullis's chapel, and received many hearty commendations. In the evening I supplied the same audience with other tracts. Over 500 addresses and half as many tracts have gone out on their mission within the three days just past. In an address before the Baptist ministers this A. M., on Romanism in Mexico, Prof. Townsend, D.D., said, "I can take you to a Masonic lodge in Mexico, where the four principal officers

ARE JESUIT PRIESTS."

Many questions were asked which the Dr. answered, but I, knowing the sensitiveness of some in the audience, decided to wait until the meeting closed to ask my questions. I said, "Dr., is it your opinion, after carefully looking over the question, that the Masonic body is imposing any obstacle in the way of Romanism and its schemes for power in this country?"

He replied promptly, "No;" and then added, "It might have done so at one time, but Masonry is not what it was. Black Jesuits are exempt from many restrictions imposed on ordinary priests, and they go into the lodges and control them; and besides, I am sorry to say, there are a great many unprincipled members in the order, who use it for unworthy purposes."

A testimony from one, so eminent among the leading scholars, divines and progressive men of the age, and one who knows both the inside and outside of the orders of which he testifies, should certainly have weight, and it will. Dea. B. F. Bradbury, who is leading the weekly lecture course in Music Hall, discussing Romanism, and who has considered Masonry as one of the strong antagonists to Romanism, has great faith in Dr. Townsend. He was present and in a subsequent conversation with him, I found that he had marked the Dr.'s words, and was pondering them with care. Dr. Watson, who was the leading speaker in the Holiness Convention, spoke decidedly against Masonry, Odd-fellowship and the G. A. R.; and when I handed him one of Bro. Cunningham's addresses, with the remark, "Dr., that is one form of anti-Christ we must meet and put out of the church," he replied, "That is so."

On Thursday last I received a call from a young man, whose case is one of the most interesting I have ever met. He joined the lodge on the advice of a D.D., in this city, whose name is not A. H. Quint, but of the same denominational faith. After prayer meeting the man and his wife asked the D.D., to advise them, the wife saying she feared the lodge was taking the place of the church. Having been assured that she was mistaken, and that great benefit would come to her husband and household, she said, "Dr., I have confidence in your word," and so withdrew her objections.

The man took the lodge degrees. Not finding what he had expected, he took the chapter degrees. Not finding what he had been promised there, he was induced to seek it in the encampment. Still unsatisfied, his attention was directed towards the "Scottish Rite." Thinking best to investigate before proceeding further, he came to our room, introduced himself and made known his mission by taking out a copy of the "National Home Guard," and asking for Scottish Masonry, and other books in the list, with which he supplied himself before leaving. He remained, and we studied the system together, using Masonic text-books, for nearly three hours. Many things were said which would interest and benefit your readers, and which I hope at some time to write, but for the present and for good reasons, I forbear.

He took the Royal Arch degree about the time Johnston was killed in Huntington, Va. The matter was freely canvassed in the lodge. While waiting in an adjacent room to take the Knight Templar degree, a Rev. (!) present, said, "There is a surprise awaiting you to-night. You will be required to take libations, and one you will have to drink from a vessel that is neither metal, earthen or wood." He found the information correct when he reached the "fifth libation."

It seems a thing incredible, and yet we are compelled to accept the fact, that men standing in the pulpits in Boston, recognized and believed in as ministers of Christ, are advising pious young men to enter these lodges and take the "cup of devils." When the "devil is transformed into an angel of light," and takes the pulpit as a "preacher of righteousness," to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, it is time for the people to fast and to pray for deliverance.

SEEDING AN OLD FALLOW.

BRADFORD, Pa., Feb. 10, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After filling my appointment to lecture at Varick, in Seneca Co., N. Y., I bade farewell to the friends there, and went to Canandaigua, and called upon John Carrington, who has long been a reader of the Cynosure.

I preached to the people that evening, by invitation, and the next day went to Houghton in Alleghany Co.

Here I met my old friend and son in the Gospel, Prof. Laughlin, who is pastor of the church and Professor of Theology in the Houghton Seminary. I preached for him twice on the Sabbath, and gave an address at an afternoon meeting held at Bro. Depew's, whose wife is a sister of the late Rev. D. S. Kinney. I also met Prof. Dodd, a graduate of Wheaton College, now principal of Houghton Seminary.

Twice I conducted the chapel exercises and addressed the students, and on Wednesday night lectured on "The Relation of Freemasonry and Kindred Orders to the Christian Religion." Encouraged by Prof. Dodd, the students turned out well to hear the lecture. I was pleased to have the privilege, while here, of renewing my acquaintance with the widow of the sainted D. B. Douglas, a noble man of God, and an able and faithful minister of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I intended to have gone into Wyoming county from here, but was persuaded by Rev. Hazlett, a former student of Wheaton, to go with him to Belmont. Here I preached at two points outside

CORRESPONDENCE.

WILL GOD DWELL IN SUCH A CHURCH?

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath I preached in the First Presbyterian church, Covington, Ky., Rev. Dr. Blackburn, pastor. This congregation has about 400 members. It is one of the oldest in the city. Dr. Walden, now of Newark, O., was the former pastor. They are a well-to-do people of the conservative type. But worldliness is creeping in upon them. It is not uncommon for the young ladies to receive their gentlemen friends on Sabbath evening. And it has occurred that the older ladies have stayed at home from church Sabbath evening and given "progressive euchre" parties. I mention this as a sample of what is invading the church to an alarming extent. Church members are becoming worldly, and as the spirit of the world comes in, the Spirit of God goes out. The two cannot and will not dwell together. Either the church must be separate from the world or she will be judicially abandoned. That is the curse of curses. The Jewish church was originally the temple of God. Then she prospered. But when they rejected the Christ, God went out and Satan went in. Then she is called "the synagogue of Satan" From the highest pinnacle of glory to the deepest depths of degradation.

The Latin church was originally the true church of Christ. Then her symbol was "a woman clothed in the sun, the moon beneath her feet, a crown of twelve stars on her brow." But she apostatized. She persecuted the saints. Then her symbol was a harlot, sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast, and a wine cup in her hand, full of fornication, with which she makes the nations drunken? From the highest pinnacle of glory to the deepest depths of degradation.

The church in America was once pure. The Pilgrim Fathers brought a pure Gospel and an upright life. But presently slave-holders were admitted into her membership. Then secret societies were accepted. Then liquor-dealers came. Then stock-holders in Sabbath-breaking corporations followed. And to-day the church is loaded down with a burden of worldliness. Dancing and theatre-going during the week, and Sunday-newspaper-reading Sabbath morning, and progressive euchre parties Sabbath evening, are becoming common-place among church members. Will God dwell in such a church? The facts answer. More than half the people in our country never darken a church door. Out of 7,000,000 young men, 5,000,000 never go to church. It is true that 75 per cent of our young men never enter a church, 95 per cent are not church members and 97 per cent do no work and carry no cross for Christ.

GOD IS JUDICIALLY ABANDONING

The church, because, she has forsaken him, and hence her cry: "Oh, my leanness!" It is time to speak.

Monday I visited Xenia, O. The First U. P. church has called Prof. J. K. McClurkin, D.D., of the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary. The present unsettled state of affairs in the Covenanter church has led to a postponement of action anent the call until after Synod. The Third Church has not called Rev. Reed, one of the suspended ministers, as reported. They are still hearing candidates. The Second Church is holding the fort, with Dr. Carson as leader.

Tuesday evening I lectured in Heidelberg University, Tiffin, O. We had a very fine audience. A number of the citizens came out, and the students and faculty altogether, gave a good hearing. The president of the theological department was formerly a pastor in Philadelphia. He knew Dr. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman, and is deeply interested in the cause of National Reform. The acting president of the literary department urged me to remain and give another lecture. They are right with us. The temperance people of Tiffin are in the midst of a fight. They have attempted to enforce Sabbath-closing and many resist them. J. M. FOSTER.

THE BIBLE IN THE POCKET.

WHEATON, Ill.

After my conversion to God four years ago, it dawned upon my mind that I was spending from one and a half to two hours each week day on the railroad, going to and coming from Chicago, and that here was time to read the Bible; get acquainted with God, and learn his holy will concerning his children upon the earth. So I began to carry the Bible in my pocket, and read it on the train, and by the grace of God, expect to do so in the future.

And now let me tell you a few of the many things that I have learned from the Bible since I began to carry it in my pocket, and read it on the train.

1. That God has called, through Jesus Christ, upon all men to be converted—to be born from above.

2. That when we are converted, born from above, we enter upon a new life, and that life can only be sustained by food that comes from the same divine source.

3. That this divine food or grace can only be obtained by being acquainted with God.

4. That by the food thus obtained, we may grow from a mere babe unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and while thus growing, we live and move, and have our being in the 8th chapter of Romans: "For we know that there is now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." "The Spirit also beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God."

5. That when we have attained unto this perfect manhood, we have also obtained another right or privilege, and that is to move from the 8th chapter of Romans over to the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians.

Though we know that we cannot speak with the tongues of men, much less with the tongues of angels, yet we may walk up and down those grand avenues, rejoicing not in iniquity, but rejoicing in the truth, "bearing all things, believing all things, hoping all things, enduring all things." For we know that there abideth in us, Faith, Hope, Charity, these three and especially the greatest of these, which is Charity.

J. L. REBER.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

ALLEGHENY, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In Jan. 29th issue of your paper, Mr. Gault reports that ex-Gov. St. John said in a speech at Blanchard, Iowa, that the "National Reform Association was doing a grand work, but they made a terrible mistake when they invited Judith Ellen Foster to speak from their platform."

I suppose the reference is to the invitation to speak at the convention held in Washington last February. It so happens that I know something about that invitation to Mrs. Foster. Dr. Stevenson wrote me that Mrs. Foster had been invited to speak, "but declined because the National Reform Association made the call for this convention the occasion for the circulation, in leaflet form, of the article in the Statesman against the non-partisan movement. Dr. S. wrote that this was a misapprehension on her part, that the National Reform Association had never taken part in the political conflict; that the Association did not control the Statesman, and the article referred to was the independent comment of its editors on a matter of public interest."

Dr. S. wished me to "disabuse Mrs. Foster's mind of this impression when I met her." Though urged to do so, she did not attend the convention.

Now I fail to see the "terrible mistake" in the National Reform Association inviting Mrs. Foster to speak at their convention. She is considered by many the best platform speaker in the land. She has the tact of being plain without being offensive. Editors of the Statesman, in the name of the Association, asked Mrs. Foster to speak. She declined. Why bring this up now?

If the National Reform Association never makes a greater mistake it will be well for them. It is composed of men of every shade of political opinion. Men and women of broad views can meet on their platform and discuss methods and questions of reform without compromising their principles.

Gentlemen, turn your guns on the enemy. Is it fair or just to hold up to public scorn a woman who has done so much to advance the cause of temperance? This "I-am-wiser-than-thou" policy of third-party people, keeps men from joining them. (Mrs.) J. S. COLLINS.

A VISIT TO WASHINGTON.

HICKMAN, Ill.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Not having written for our beloved Cynosure for some time, I improve the present occasion.

I was in the capital city of the United States recently, and while there called twice at the residence of W. B. Stoddard, in the building belonging to the N. C. A. It is a good building, and since it has been repainted and otherwise repaired, it presents a good appearance and is certainly well located, and is a good investment—worth perhaps now more than ten thousand dollars, and so bringing a fair per cent on the original investment, which was two or three thousand less than it would bring now.

For the few hours that I was in the hospitable home of Bro. Stoddard, I was pleased with the entertainment. He seems to have a pleasant lady for an helpmeet. Their home is also made happy by a beautiful little girl some two or three months old. What is more pleasant in this world than a Christian home, with husband and wife in loving accord, with some of the little folks to aid in bringing "good cheer?"

I attended five or six of the services at the Central Union Mission on Pennsylvania avenue, and was more than paid. Bro. Stoddard was with me the last evening. Bro. Bailey, well-known to the Cynosure readers, on two of those evenings conducted the services. He is a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed," presenting the truth lovingly, powerfully and eloquently. On every occasion the people were called on for testimony. Many of them gave interesting accounts of the saving grace of the Lord Jesus. Many would, in their simplicity, tell how they were saved from the saloon and the gutter, after everything in this world seemed to be dark; and now they were happy, with pleasant homes, cleanly in person and clad with good and clean raiment.

On one of these occasions it was incidently referred to that the membership of the various churches was composed of about two-thirds, and possibly three-fourths, women and children. The query was, where were the men? No one attempted to answer this all-important question. The answer I apprehend might be the saloon, the lodge and the tobacco habit has them. The saloon fills up men with the wrong kind of spirits, with which the Spirit of the Master will not mix or affiliate. The lodge furnishes a semi-religious, though false worship—no Christ—although they have altars.

The tobacco habit largely removes the victim from cleanliness (which is next to godliness) and thus keeps the victim from being pure and holy, which is essential to the perfect Christian.

When will the Christian people put aside every sin and every weight that hinders in the Christian race, so as to run the race that is set before them!

J. S. HICKMAN.

PITH AND POINT.

WON FROM LODGERY.

I notice in my last Cynosure under the heading, "A Curiosity of Masonic Literature," God is not the author of sin. "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and create evil." If there is no sin we have no work to do. Because of sin we are conquerors through faith, hope, charity, victorious in doing the good. With the Cynosure in my hands and with the help of God several have left the lodge in this place.—J. HART, Monroe, Iowa.

WILL IT KEEP HIM FROM DRINKING IF THE SALOON IS OPEN?

I think you are "O. K." on the "secret lodge system," but a "little off" on the temperance question. I think men should be put at breaking stone or other hard labor for getting drunk, no difference whether they are rich or stand high socially.—F. D. HAUPTMANN.

SO HE OUGHT.

Times are hard and money hard to get, but I think every Anti-mason ought to take the Cynosure if possible. —W. W. TEMPLETON.

A CALL FOR LECTURERS AND REBUKE OF FALSE BRETHREN.

We need so much men of experience to lecture all through this extreme Northwest Coast, men who can beard the lion in his den. All of Uncle Sam's officials carry the square and compass as a breast-pin. I am not acquainted with a singie postmaster who is not a Mason. I have suffered most intensely for my anti-secret views; but I must be true to God. The course taken by the United Brethren has caused the Masons to be more bold here. It is a burning shame the way that they have acted here. Men who I never could have believed would have gone back on their time-honored principles, have brought a perfect disgrace upon the cause. Shame! double shame!! on such pastors. May God bless you in your work.—W. H. P., Weston, Oregon.

A SUGGESTION FOR A GREAT PAPER.

Out of the fullness of my heart I wish to say that I am exceedingly glad to see the Cynosure again. I do not know how I did without it so long. I am not sure but that it is the best weekly—the nearest a model—of all that come to my home. It has the "right ring" on so many other questions besides secrecy that I hope I will not again be without it. I must have the Christian Statesman, and I must have the Union Signal, not to mention more; but how I would rejoice to see and read a great weekly paper that would be an organ for all the great reform movements, such as National Reform, the Sabbath Reform, Prohibition and Anti-secrecy: and my wife says, "And add woman suffrage." Well, we two are one. Yours for every righteous cause.—N. R. J., Oakland, Cal.

THE ANTI-CHRIST OF THE AGE.

I believe that Freemasonry is the Anti-christ of the age, being the head and shoulders of all the lodge fraternity. "Cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and putteth it in a secret place: and all the people shall answer and say Amen."—Deut. 27: 15. I believe the time is not far distant when the government will have to suppress the secret lodge system. May it soon come.—H. CURTIS, Olathe, Kan.

LITERATURE.

THE RITES AND WORSHIP OF THE JEWS. Pp. 176. Price $1.00. The London Religious Tract Society. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

The author of the valuable compendium is not given, and from the introductory notes we are at a loss whether it is Dr. E. P. Barrows or E. W. Edersheim, both of whom have written other volumes on related topics. The saying of Augustine that "The New Testament is hidden in the Old; the Old is made clear in the New," is accepted by most students of the Bible as a fundamental principle, and the modern study of the ritual of the Jewish church has been conducted from this standpoint. Many Bible students, indeed, have followed this principle to a great extreme, and have involved themselves and their disciples in many perplexities, which are an injury to true faith. This volume is of too limited a scope to entertain speculation or examine theories. It rather undertakes a careful exposition of the Levitical ordinances so as to show their harmony, and their interpretation to the pious Jew. It considers these under the heads "Holy Places and Persons," "Holy Worship" and "Holy Seasons," and very clearly explains their establishment and their formula and their sequence. The book is very valuable for this work, but we conceive that for Christians of to-day much more might have been made of the Christian significance of all these ordinances,—for Christ was the center and soul of the Mosaic system as of ours. He was the "end of the law for righteousness." This fact is not so fully developed as it should be to complete the work undertaken by the author.

ORIGINAL RECITATIONS WITH LESSON-TALKS. By Emma Dunning Banks. Cloth $1.25. Edgar S. Werner, 28 West Twenty-third St., New York.

The portrait of the author of this new elocutionary volume reveals a lady of energy and vigor, and her work is of like character with great uniformity. Indeed, the lack of variety at once appears. But the book is original in its conception and valuable as a study. One distinguishing characteristic of the pieces is that they have been written especially for recitation. Another original feature is that every poem has a lesson written upon it, full directions being given for the voice and action work. No such a book, it is claimed, has ever been published. It is, in fact, a self-instructor, while it affords teachers valuable hints for giving instruction to their pupils. Thus it gives thirty-five lessons in elocution in addition to the original recitations, and is very serviceable to those who are unable to get elocutionary instruction at home. We do not at all agree with the author's theory of breathing—"Flat abdomen, high chest." This will do for the days of tight corsets; but God made the chest of a man like a bellows, the lower ribs flexible, to be expanded with the strong muscles attached. Deep breathing is a better hobby, for it is nature.

The Bible Standard, issued by the Wesleyan Publishing House, Syracuse, New York, has a very interesting number. The notes of missionary life in West Africa, by Bro. H. W. Johnston, are of special interest. He speaks of a secret society among the natives which seems to be an offshoot of the "Parrah boys" [Purroh?] or African Freemasons. This society has become such a terror to the south of Sierre Leone that the missionaries have appealed to the British authorities, who propose to stop the work of this African lodge.

The Missionary Review of the World for February comes fresh, vigorous, and inspiring, as always, with its outlook over the whole field of missionary activity. It opens with a stirring editorial on The Regions Beyond. Rev. J. Murray Mitchell, LL.D., of Nice, France, contributes the second of a series of articles on The Mission Outlook. Rev. Dr. Blodgett gives A Condensed Sketch of the Mission of the American Board in North China. Buddhism and Christianity—a Crusade which Must be Met, is a powerful reply to the article of Baron Hardon Hickey, who attempted, in the New York Herald, to show that Christianity is a copy of Buddhism. Dr. Hulbert contributes a second article on The Historical Geography of the Early Church. The Translations, International Department, and Monthly Concert of Missions, are full of good things, too many to particularize. Every Christian minister will be the better and stronger for studying such a number. Every earnest Christian can read it not only with profit, but pleasure.

The American Agriculturist for February is full as usual of good things for all sorts of working people whether they are producers or consumers. Beginning with the appetizing maple sugar business; winter dairying; the potato-raising contest of the Agriculturist which contains some very interesting reports; Lonk sheep; poultry business as an occupation for girls; the new fiber plant, sisal hemp, which some Philadelphians hope may supersede cotton; and an endless variety of thoughts and hints for the gardener and the housekeeper—these fill up a good number.

The Evangelical Repository continues the series on the "Testimony of the Catacombs." "The Augsburg Confession," "The Song of Songs," "Latest Results of Oriental Archæology," and "The Preacher and his Work," are other titles. The venerable Dr. Logue of Monmouth writes a critical examination of Rev. 20: 4.

The Sidereal Messenger, issued from the observatory of Carleton College, is now well on in its tenth volume, which is an evidence worth recognizing of the interest taken in astronomical studies. The contributors of the current number represent institutions widely separated in this country and Europe.

The Converted Catholic for the month opens with terse comments on the developments of Romanism. Chief among the contributions are Dr. R. S. MacArthur's on the Huguenots and Rev. John Lee's examination of Cardinal Gibbon's book, "Our Christian Heritage."

Vick's Magazine takes us to California with a vengeance, and with its charming photographic illustrations of the wealth of roses and climbers in that garden State, makes everybody restless to make a bower for himself amid its sunshine.

We're not waiting for the bats and moles but for men and women who have eyes and use them, who have brains and reason! There's a new world for them—suffering and sickly as they are—a new world created from the brain of a skillful physician—a discovery—the "Golden Medical Discovery."

Years ago Dr. Pierce found out that the secret of all scrofula, bronchial, throat and lung trouble lay—in the beginning at least—in impure blood and the weak tone of the system; that the way to cure these effects was to remove the cause, that human nature being the same, the same results might be looked for in nearly all cases. So confident was he that the exceptions were uncommon that he took the risk of giving the medicine to those it didn't benefit for nothing, and the results have proved that he was right.

And "Golden Medical Discovery" is the remedy for the million! The only guaranteed liver, blood and lung remedy. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

To the question, Which is your favorite poem? there may be a great variety of answers; but when asked, Which is your favorite blood-purifier? there can be only one reply—Ayer's Sarsaparilla, because it is the purest, safest, and most economical.

FOR A

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ON THE

SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

We, the undersigned, believe that there is no good which can be accomplished, in times of peace and in a free land, by secret societies which cannot be secured more easily and perfectly by open organization.

We believe that much of the time and money so greatly needed by the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ is wasted in the large and unprofitable expenses of secret orders.

We believe that the union of Christians with men of the world in oath-bound organizations is forbidden by the Word of God and always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter such societies.

We believe that some oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country.

We therefore invite all those who sympathize with us in the views above expressed, to meet in "A Conference of Christians," to be held under the auspices of "The National Christian Association," in the city of Chicago ..... to consult and pray respecting the best method of saving men, the churches, and our land from the injurious influence of such societies.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1891.

DR. CARRADINE'S SERMON, of which we are able to print the greater part this week, is the attraction of this number. Let none fail to read it; and have all the M. E. pastors read it also. This address has been widely heralded, but has not until now appeared in print after revision by Dr. Carradine. Our readers will join us in saying that from such a fountain must flow many waters for the healing of the people and the refreshing of the church of God.

"IS CONGREGATIONALISM DECLINING?"

The Advance takes this question from the London, English, Independent, which paper answers it in the affirmative that Congregationalism is declining. And to remedy and reverse this decline the Advance advises the English religious press to cease aplogizing for rationalism and teach a sounder "orthodoxy."

The lamp of experience is said to give a safe light. Let us consult it. Just forty years ago, the writer attended commencement at Western Reserve and Oberlin colleges, then fifty miles apart, amid a population descended from New England Congregationalists. Hudson College was orthodox, founded and sustained by orthodox churches. In 1839 Oberlin was reputed heterodox by Congregational papers; and Mr. Finney for some years was regarded so unsound that Congregational pulpits were closed against him from Oberlin to Boston. That year, 1839, fifty persons, mostly ministers, walked in the college procession at Hudson, and three thousand people filled the great tent at Oberlin. Hudson College has since been removed to Cleveland; and Oberlin has some thirteen hundred students, standing where it then stood. And though Oberlin students at that time were jailed for aiding escaped slaves, the nation has since embraced the principles of Oberlin.

Two years before, i. e., 1837, four synods, representing a population of forty or fifty thousand Presbyterians, were exscinded, cut off, by the then united General Assembly. Dr. William S. Plummer, giving reasons for cutting off those synods, said they were Abolitionists and Anti-masons; "went to Presbytery with their saddle-bags stuffed with Anti-masonic almanacs." And he spoke truth. It was true that opposing secret lodge-worships did underlie Abolitionism. Gerritt Smith, Arthur and Lewis Tappan, and their co-adjutors, were all anti-Masons, disciples of those exscinded Presbyterian ministers. So, also were Seward and the host who came later. But the slave question, like Aaron's serpent, swallowed all other questions, and postponed the final extermination of the secret lodges; and under the warclouds, the organized deism of the lodge crept back into the churches, from which the great wave of revivals in which Mr. Finney was active had driven it.

The thing for Congregational churches now to do is to "Stand up, stand up for Jesus."

A few weeks since, the entire press of Chicago, noticing a birth-day of the Cynosure editor, endorsed his life-long opposition to the lodge. It thus, without a single exception, endorsed the teachings of the National Christian Association.

In the present number we give an extended presentation of a remarkable discourse given in St. Louis, by Rev. Dr. Carradine, an eloquent Methodist Episcopal clergyman, late from New Orleans, which opens a new epoch in the discussion. The Congregational churches which were non-committal on the slavery question, lost one-half of their influence with New England people. Let us not make another mistake. There is no heterodoxy in the anti-secret reform. Will not the Advance embark in this discussion? If it will publish the call for the forthcoming Christian Conference on the Secret Lodge System, and boldly advocate the reform, the largest Congregational church in Chicago will not hold the people who will attend it.

A Swedish Congregational editor said to the writer last week, that if the Conference committee will invite the Chicago Scandinavians to join them, the largest Scandinavian church in the city can be had free of charge. The audience room, by taking in chairs, will seat three thousand people. By all means ask the Swedes to unite in the Conference. And obtain this St. Louis clergyman, Rev. Mr. Carradine, to give an address in Farwell Hall. The St. Louis Globe Democrat and the New Orleans Daily Item have published his discourses, not because they are opposed to secret societies, but because of the eloquence and standing of the man. And if the Congregational churches will be true to their Puritan ancestral creed, which excluded all man-made mysteries, they will not long be troubled with the rationalism of the lodge, or be taunted with the imputation, that it is "declining." But in Europe or America, London or Boston, churches which cringe before the worships of Satan, and "brother" with Freemasons, who begin by swearing their members to conceal their doings or have their throats cut; such churches must surely "dwindle." Without Christ they can do nothing. And Jews do not worship Christ.

THE FALL OF ROMANISM HERALDED.

For the last twenty years, civil and religious Italy, or its church and state, have been in conflict. The New York Sun, Jan. 4th, contains a notice of a remarkable pamphlet in this quarrel. It is written by Giuseppe Tascanelli, who, for thirty years, has been a deputy in the Italian parliament, during the first part of which period he was a stauch advocate and defender of the Roman church. But he now, it appears, has come to regard the Pope as the enemy of Italy. These are some of his words: "The return to the temporal power has become a dominating idea there" (in the Vatican). "It has become a perfect monomania." "But the Jesuits of the Vatican refuse to acknowledge that it is so; and Leo XIIIth, while he declares abroad that he desires peace, maintains a policy in Italy which keeps up a species of civil war." "The comedy of the (pretended) papal imprisonment renders the Pontiff and the Church in his person ridiculous." "The question is daily asked but never answered, What becomes of the wealth that pours daily into the coffers of the Pope?" "The policy of the Vatican is prompted by indifference to the growing division between political and religious Italy; by an obstinate determination to use all means, no matter how evil, to prevent the Catholics from becoming faithful subjects of the king," etc., etc.

Now it is a true proverb, confirmed by the world's experience, that "a house divided against itself falleth." And it is likewise true that, since Mazzini and Garibaldi, Romanism is a house divided against itself. And while it was true, as Kossuth said forty years ago, that "bayonets are beginning think," it is now much more true and obvious that "laborers have begun to think." And the greatest danger to priestism, especially the priests of Rome, is an intelligent laity. Kings and rulers want taxes and votes. And so long as priests rule the masses, kings and presidents will obey priests. But poverty and hunger are great teachers; and the country parishes in Italy are poor and hungry; while the Pope and his abettors are bloated with wealth drawn by his priests from the superstition of foreign countries.

This cannot last. This conflict between church and state in Italy must prove catching, and we read, Rev. 17: 16, "The ten horns (kings) shall hate the whore and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and shall burn her with fire." This terrible Scripture had a striking fulfillment when Henry VIIIth of England and his parliament, to stop the swindling beggary of friars and the flow of Peter's pence out of England to the Pope, sent his minister, Cromwell, to tear down monasteries and drive out the monks. And, though the book of Revelation is full of mysteries, one thing is plain, viz., that a mammoth corrupt power called "Babylon," "beast" and "whore," is yet to fall like a millstone into the sea "and be found no more at all." And the last verse of Rev. 17 shows that Rome is that monster power, covered with names of blasphemy, just as certainly as the book of Revelation is inspired of God. And apostate Rome itself is forced to acknowledge that the book is divine.

DR. B. CARRADINE was pastor in New Orleans before coming to St. Louis. He was there well known for the earnestness of his opposition to the lottery business. The lodge sent its messages far and wide before the great sermon of Jan. 4th was delivered. Even the papers of far-away Spokane Falls, Washington, on the 30th of December published the announcement of the sermon with exaggerated comments of Dr. Carradine's sensational qualities, the number and influence of the Masons in his church, and their unbounded indignation at the promised assault on their pet system of secret religion. It was even stated that "fully one-half the members of the church are Masons." Now in the first place the rule for church membership is, about three-fourths are women and minors. It is equally notorious that Masons do not rush into the M. E. church or any other: one-tenth of the men, or one-fortieth of the whole might be possible, but hardly probable. That one-half of the members are Freemasons is a story that grew all the way from the Mississippi to the Pacific. The special and providential significance of this sermon is that it is the fire of proclaimed truth bursting out in an entirely new and unexpected quarter, against the greatest evil that our churches must withstand if they will live and flourish.

—Ex-Governor St. John is announced to speak in the College Hall at Wheaton, Ill., next Saturday evening. The popular champion for prohibition will be welcomed by a great audience.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold last reported with his floating chapel from Vanceburg, Ky. This place is near Cabin Creek, Lewis county, above Cincinnati, the point with which we have become acquainted through the labors of brethren Fee, Hinman and Browne of Berea, Ky.

—There are said to be 24,000 German Lutherans in Chicago. All their churches exclude secret societies, and keep their people instructed by constant discussion. A conference is soon to be held in some point in Michigan, and a part of the proceedings will be a thorough discussion of the so-called "minor" orders.

—Mr. Edgar Wylie, one of the students in the Congregational Theological Seminary, who has been most interested in our reform and was made a member of the committee for that denomination at last April's Conference, has been chosen to represent his institution in an address at the inter-seminary annual meeting next week.

—The Christian Conservator noticing the reports that members of Lutheran churches in Schapville in northwestern Illinois, and in Massilon, Ohio, have been publicly warned against uniting with secret societies as contrary to a Christian life, says: "These are indications of the feeling that exists. And as a better and higher state of piety comes on the churches, it will increase until the lodge will be wholly classed with the world, and the church of Christ be freed from the false worship of the lodge."

—Rev. H. W. Johnston, missionary of the Wesleyan churches to West Africa, called on the Cynosure last week on his way to College Springs, Iowa, and vicinity. Bro. Johnston has returned from Sierre Leone on account of the health of his wife, who would soon, to all appearances, have soon succumbed to the African fever. The sea voyage was of great benefit to her. She will probably remain with relatives, while Bro. Johnston will return in a few weeks. His plan is to make a journey into the unevangelized interior, found a mission station, and erect temporary buildings before the rainy season begins. He hopes that his wife can return and join in the work after her health is recovered. Others also may join this new mission. Bro. Johnston shows the effect of African climate, but says he is in fair health. He will continue, on his return to Africa, occasional letters to the Cynosure.

of Belmont, where Bro. Hazlett had appointments, and visited the pastors and others in the place, with a view to working up a lecture there. Neither the Baptist, Presbyterian nor Methodist pastors seemed favorable to lodgery. Indeed, the Presbytcrian pastor said that Belmont was "over lodged;" that many church members belonged to so many lodges that they had neither time nor spirit for church work; and that an issue would have to be made with the lodges. He was in favor of a meeting or convention to consider this question; but, as the Baptist and Methodist pastors were holding revival meetings, he thought the present not an opportune time to call such a meeting. So I was constrained to abandon my purpose of arranging for lecture work in the place. I visitcd the Methodist pastor and had an interesting conversation with him on the secret orders, and was pleased to find that he did not worship at their false altars.

I left Belmont and came to Cattaraugus Co., where I preached once, finding the brethren engaged in a revival meeting.

I reached Bradford, Pa., Saturday night, and spoke in the Salvation Army Hall and also in the W. C. T. U. Hall on the Sabbath, and we are working up a lecture for Tuesday night. This is a terribly lodge-ridden town, there being, I am told, as many as four lodges to one church in this city. I gave a lecturc on Monday in the daytime and will finish my work with the lecture Tuesday night. One lady who was present at the lecture Monday, who is the daughter of a 33-degree Mason, the wife of an Odd-fellow, and a W. C. T. U. worker, and who has been connected with several lodges, renounced them all, declaring her purpose to give up $4,000 of life insurance policies that she had in them. She expressed her gratitude to God for being permitted to hear what she had heard, and declared she would cheerfully give $100 to support the anti-secret society lecture work, if she had it, and said that she would makc a donation to the cause as soon as she could.

I visited the W. C. T. U. county organizer and found her strongly opposed to the secret orders. She said that many of the W. C. T. U. ladies of this county are so filled with lodgery that out of the abundance of their hearts they speak of the W. C. T. U. as "our lodge" or "our order." This noble Christian lady will not permit them to talk thus in her presence, but frequently calls their attention to the fact that the assemblies of the W. C. T. U. are not lodges, and that the W. C. T. U. itself is not an order.

FEBRUARY 11.—Several ministers of the Gospel were present at the Tuesday night lecture; among them a presiding elder of the radical United Brethren church. I noticed two loads from four miles in the country, though it was a cold, windy night. A gentleman came forward at the close of the lecture and said he had learned things to-night about the secret orders, that he had never heard of before.

Dr. Huntington, pastor of the M. E. church, received me very courteously, when I called on him, and consented to announce my lecture from his pulpit on the Sabbath.

To my surprise the pastor of the Baptist church refused to give notice of my lecture. In view of the fact that a plan of salvation is developed in the religious philosophy of Freemasonry, as written by the highest Masons, and endorsed by high Masonic authority, in which Masons are taught that they can climb up to heaven in some other way than by our Lord Jesus Christ, it seems wonderful that this orthodox Baptist minister, who believes that there is no other way to God and heaven but by Jesus Christ, should refuse to aid me in my defense of the Gospel. Surely this dear Baptist brother believes that salvation is by grace received through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Why would he not aid me in defending the doctrines of grace against the Masonic heresy, that men may save themselves by their own works, while utterly ignoring the divine plan of salvation by Jesus Christ? Is it not strange that this dear brother would help the wicked, and refuse to aid me in my effort to exalt Christ Jesus, as the only name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved?

Surely this dear brother does not understand the relation of Freemasonry to Christianity. He does not know that fundamental Masonry is a compound of ancient idolatry and deistical infidelity. He can not know that Satan is working more successfully through the secret lodge system, than by any other means, to supplant Christ and subvert our holy Christianity, or, as a loyal subject of Jesus Christ, he would have sympathized with my effort to expose this Satanic conspiracy against Christ and his Gospel.

But, bless God, the people are being turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan, exerted through the lodge, to Christ, and the day hastens when no loyal minister of Jesus Christ will refuse to aid in the good work.

C. F. HAWLEY.

AFTER TWENTY YEARS.

THE TERRORS OF A LODGE DEBATE.

SALTSBURG, Pa., Feb. 13, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After a brief visit with wife and baby I commended them again to God's care and came on to Indiana county, Pa. It has been some twenty years since a representative of the N. C. A. has worked in this section. Our reform has been faithfully upheld by representative pastors in the U. P. and other churches. As a result I find a field ripe for the harvest. More doors are open than I shall be able to enter at present.

I reached this place Saturday morning. Rev. Johnston, pastor of the U. P. church, on learning my mission, invited me to address his people Sabbath morning and evening. Anti-secrecy was no new theme to them, as the former pastor, Rev. Katz, a reader of the Cynosure and an earnest advocate of its principles, had not failed to let his light shine. Both Sabbath services were well attended, the evening congregation being specially large. A collection of $5.21 and several subscriptions to the Cynosure are among the evidences of approval.

It is said there is no rose without its thorn. The people of Saltsburg can not all truly be said to belong to the salt of the earth. In fact, much of the salt seems to have lost its savor.

The Lutheran pastor, Rev. Hudson, while professing sympathy, said he was not at liberty even to announce my lecture, as his congregation was small and he was desirious of building it up. As some of his most prominent members were Odd-fellows, he feared a notice of my meeting would be offensive to them. He thought if he had as many members as the Presbyterian pastor he would have more liberty in this regard.

Dr. Miller, the Presbyterian pastor, had attended a convention in Mansfield, Ohio, held by the Ohio auxiliary of the N. C. A. He there heard Dr. Fairchild, then president of Oberlin College, present an address against the Masonic lodge, which met his approval. He thought a distinction should be made between the major and minor secret societies. He was willing to ask his session to grant me his church for a lecture, but had little hope of getting it, as two at least were connected with the Masonic lodge.

This brother has had much trouble with his dancing members. A member of the Presbyterian church who joined a lodge, recently planted here, called "The Solon," gave me a copy of the "Solon's Sector," the official organ of this society, to try and convince me that it was a good thing. On page 5 I find the following:

SOLON BALL AT NORWICH, N. Y.—"Chenango Lodge, No. 62, gave their first annual ball at Burr's Opera House, it being the first public demonstration given by our lodge since the introduction of the order in Norwich."

A glowing account is then given of this dance, which it is said lasted till morning. I would respectfully call Dr. Miller's attention to the fact that this is one of those little secret societies to which some of his members belong. When twice two don't make four, then will dancing lodgers make good Christians.

I am to discuss the following questions with Rev. A. Getty, pastor of the Universalist church of this place, in the town hall this evening: "Resolved, that the principles of secret societies are injurious to pure Christianity." The wording of the question is Rev. Getty's. The editor of the town paper seems very much excited over this discussion. He has begun his editorial this week with the following expressions in large italics: "THE FUR WILL FLY." "GREAT DEBATE IN THE TOWN HALL."

As this editor is evidently not acquainted with the way Christians discuss, we will have to forgive him for this improper notice, if he will try and do better in the future. One might conclude from this notice that the editor was better acquainted with cat fights than with Christian discussions. I trust there will be no fur flying in the hall this evening, as that would be annoying, to say the least. Perhaps we should thank this young editor for giving us the best notice he knew how, and hope for his improvement in the future. Some on the other side, I am told, have talked of the egg argument, but I trust for their sakes they will use them in a more profitable way than that suggested. May God overrule all to his name's glory, is my prayer.

My future appointments are as follows: New Florence, Feb. 15th and 16th; Blairsville, Indiana Co., Feb. 17th; Shelota, Feb. 18th; West Lebanon, Feb. 19th; Clarksburg, Indiana Co., Feb. 20th; Apollo, Feb. 22d; Olivet, Feb. 23d. Should any in this section desire one or more lectures they can address me at any of these points.

On Tuesday last I was very cordially received at a called meeting of the Conemaugh presbytery of the United Presbyterians. Never have I felt more the approbation of the Master, or seen more the need of just such work as the N. C. A. is doing than to-day. With heart made glad by the consciousness of divine approval, with face turned toward the sunrise of eternal glory, what has one to fear of the powers of darkness! Let us who sometimes grow weary in the unpopular contest remember there is an eternal weight of glory just beyond.

W. B. STODDARD.

TRUE HOLINESS IS IMPARTIAL.

NICHOLASVILLE, Ky., Feb. 11, 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On account of a land-slide on the Louisville Southern R. R., I have been detained here two days. Yesterday afternoon and night I attended the holiness meetings in the M. E. church of this place, conducted by Mr. Godby of the Kentucky Holiness Association. A considerable impression has been produced, and I think much good has been accomplished. I was very glad to be able to listen to earnest, faithful preaching, directed mainly to the church. Surely they need it.

But while I rejoice in every earnest aspiration for a higher Christian life, I could but realize that even holiness people are liable to have distorted and perverted notions of moral obligations. The same moral blindness that could see no wrong in the system of slavery, is still color blind when looking at the popular iniquities of to-day.

Yesterday we had for a Bible reading on the second and third chapters of John, during which questions were invited. When John 3: 19, 20, was being considered, I asked if it did not imply a condemnation of all systems of organized secrecy. The question was not answered directly, but led to quite a discussion. Bro. Godby said that in his early life he had joined the Masons and Odd-fellows, and continued in active relation with them until he became sanctified. He then dropped out of them, and had since nothing to do with them. He had never opposed them, but thought a Christian man had all he could do without giving any time to these orders, and that true religion was worth far more "to travel by" than Masonry.

The pastor of the church was sure that there was nothing wrong about either of these orders, and this seemed to be assented to; but another pastor thought that no Christian ought to join any organization except the church of Christ. This seemed to have a general assent.

The sermon at night to a crowded house was on spiritual freedom, and was, in the main, most excellent. The preacher was very severe on dancing, and thought a dancing-school worse than a saloon; but he had not a word to say against lodgery, tobacco-using, dram-drinking, or caste, sins that are exceedingly prevalent among professed Christians of the place. Some of these earnest holiness people think that the co-education of the races, as it is carried on at Berea, is a great folly and wrong, and hold up their hands in holy horror. It would be unjust to say that such people know nothing of true Christianity, but most manifestly they have learned but its first rudiments. Perhaps the natural order for the blind, on being restored to sight, is at first, to "see men as trees walking," but surely they ought to see the way of the Lord more perfectly.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE HOME.

"HE DWELLETH WITH YOU."

John 14: 17.

The Holy Ghost is here,
Where saints in prayer agree;
As Jesus' parting gift, he's near
Each pleading company.

Not far away is he,
To be by prayer brought nigh;
But here in present majesty,
As in his courts on high.

He dwells within our soul,
An ever welcome guest;
He reigns with absolute control,
As Monarch in the breast.

Our bodies are his shrine,
And he, th' indwelling Lord;
All hail, thou Comforter Divine,
Be ever more adored!

Obedient to thy will,
We wait to feel thy power;
O Lord of life, our hopes fulfill,
And bless this hallowed hour.

—Charles H. Spurgeon.

DR. GORDON'S BIBLE READINGS.

Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston, while spending a month at Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago, consented to give an afternoon series of Bible readings at the Third Presbyterian church. They have called out a large attendance, from that and other congregations of the West side. The following is taken from the report by Emily Kellogg in the Standard:

I. The work of the Holy Spirit. Symbolism in Lev. 14: 13–18, and 8: 24–30. First the blood—Christ's work. Then the oil. The Spirit's work, Ex. 12: 6, 7. First the blood, next the laver. Christ's work for us, before Christ's work in us. His blood before our experiences. Martin Luther found no place in believing until he was told by a brother monk: "Brother Martin, look to the blood of Christ. Look to his wounds."

The relative position of things, in approaching the mercy-seat was: (1) the altar, (2) the laver, (3) the veil of the holiest. Eph. 5: 26, "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing (root word same as laver) of water by the Word." Titus 3: 5, "By the washing (laver) of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." The touching of the right ear, right hand, right foot, signifies a consecration of our bodies, throughout, making of them a living sacrifice. Rom. 12: 1. In 1 Cor. 6: 20, the revision strikes out the last clause, rendering it, "Glorify God in your body." In this age or dispensation, the body controls the spirit; in the resurrection age the spirit will control the body. The consecration of the body must be entire: not merely the upper story but the lower story; the whole man should be possessed by Christ. Let not our consecration be like that of the early Saxon king, who at baptism reserved for self the right hand with which to punish his enemies.

The symbol of water is given in Revelation 4th, where we read of the throne and one that sat on it, and the rainbow and the elders and the seven lamps (v. 6,) "And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." The laver was made of the "looking-glasses of women." Ex. 38: 8. The old nature or likeness was destroyed to make a fit place for the indwelling spirit.

At the mercy-seat the great high-priest should present the blood and the fire, Lev. 16: 13, 14. And in Ex. 25: 22, God says: "There I will meet thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat." The Shekinah or visible presence having long departed from Israel, found an abiding-place with Jesus Christ. John 1: 14, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us," i. e., tabernacled among us, or shekinahed among us. John 1: 32, "The Spirit descended from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him." V. 33, "The Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

The Levitical types pertaining to the resurrection and Pentecost are perfect. On the "morrow after the Sabbath," Lev. 23: 15, the wave-sheaf was offered. And in v. 16, "Shall ye number fifty days when the wave-loaf should be offered." A loaf is used as a type of the church. Fifty days after Christ passed into the heavens the shekinah of glory returned, Acts 2: 3. It sat, abode. Mark 16: 19, The Lord "was received up into glory and sat on the right hand of God." From that time the Holy Ghost's seat has been in the church and Christ's seat has been in heaven. When he was in the body he was limited and localized. The Holy Ghost can be everywhere in his plentitude of grace and power. John 14: 17, "He dwelleth with you and shall be in you," is the promise. The Holy Ghost at Pentecost was incarnated in the body of Christ (the church) just as the Father was incarnated in Jesus at the advent. Note the holy deference between the different persons of the God-head. At both baptism and transfiguration God commends Christ, saying: "Hear ye him." In the charge to the seven churches Christ commends the Spirit.

II. The Spirit in its work for believers. Acts 2: 38, "Repent and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This and the question in Acts 19: 2 imply a special bestowal of the Holy Ghost which was not the portion of all believers. Four forms of speech are used in regard to this gift. (1) Baptizing, (2) sealing, (3) anointing, (4) filling.

1. Baptism of the Spirit. What Christ had we may have. He depended upon this, saying (Matt. 12: 28), "I through the Spirit of God do cast out devils;" Heb. 9: 14, "Who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God." The disciples claimed this baptism, by the promise in Acts 1: 5, and received it. They were brought into the element of the Holy Ghost. We are in death, but by the baptism of the Spirit we are translated into life.

2. Sealed by the Spirit. John 6: 27, "Him hath God the Father sealed." Eph. 1: 13, "Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise. We have the same blessing with Christ and the same requirement. Eph. 4: 30, "The Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed into the day of redemption." Bickersteth says that the Apostle Paul wisely adapted his figures of speech to the people whom he addressed. The Ephesians were mercantile. Merchants from other localities came in the spring to buy lumber. When selected each one placed his seal upon his purchase, but waited till "the day of redemption" to pay the purchase money and take away the property.

At Christ's baptism the Father declares ownership "my Son," and holiness, "with whom I am well pleased;" and again in 2 Tim. 2: 19 the same claims are made, ownership, "them that are his" and holiness, "depart from iniquity." The magnet is said to draw the bits of steel to itself, by imparting to them its own magnetism; so Christ imparts to us something of his own Spirit.

3. Anointed by the Spirit. Luke 4: 18, "The Spirit of the Lord hath . . . anointed me." He was the Christ, the anointed one. Acts 10: 38, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power." 2 Cor. 1: 21, "He . . which has anointed us is God." 1 John. 2: 27, "The anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." Psa. 133, "The anointing of Aaron symbolic of the anointing of our great high priest; that sweet ointment poured upon his head runs down and blesses his whole body (the church). Brethren dwell together in unity when united with their head. Christ alone can baptize with the Holy Spirit.

4. Filling with the Spirit. Luke 4: 1, "Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost . . was led by the Spirit into the wilderness. Acts 2: 4, "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Acts 6: 3, The seven deacons were thus filled. Paul was also thus filled. Stephen, "a man full of faith of the Holy Ghost," Acts 6: 5, had a countenance like that of an angel. When any great thing is wrought in power some one has been filled with the Holy Ghost. Eph. 5: 18, "Be not drunk with wine; . . but be filled with the Spirit." Wine inspires the tongue to unseemly talk. The Spirit inspires the tongue to prayer, and hymns and spiritual songs. It burdens it with the one great theme, Jesus Christ and the salvation of the world. We can not get the Spirit to use, but to be used by. God does not let us use him. He honors us by using us. We must have a great desire for the good of others. The widow by Elisha's advice borrowed vessels, and the oil of grace flowed till they were filled and then it stopped. Go borrow your neighbor's sickness, your neighbor's need, poverty, sin; bring a great vessel for Darkest Africa, another for India, another for China and another for the Islands of the Sea.

III. The Holy Spirit; his present residence is with us; while the present residence of Jesus Christ is in heaven. Both are in communion with the Father. Christ said, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter" (John 14: 16); a Paraclete, an Advocate, the words are equivalent. "If any man sin, we have an Advocate (a Paraclete) with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."

We have in these co-equal words a hint of the co-relationship of the second and third persons of the Godhead. The Holy Spirit is a mediator between us and Christ, and Christ is mediator between us and the Father.

God is called a Sun (Psa. 84: 11); Christ the express brightness of his Father's glory (Heb. 1: 3), that is the radiance or raying forth of the Father's glory. How do we get light? By the intervention of the atmosphere. Thus does the Spirit transmit to us the divine radiance. John 16: 15, "He shall take of mine and shall shew it unto you." We depend on the Holy Spirit to receive from Christ of his nature, attributes and life. The two Paracletes are like two lawyers who are partners, one being a counselor (the Holy Spirit), the other being an advocate (Jesus Christ); the one advises, helps and suggests; the other pleads in court. A verb has been derived from the noun, paraclete. This verb is variously translated: "2 Cor. 5: 20, as though God did beseech you," i. e., paraclete you; 2 Cor. 6: 1, "We beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain," i. e., paraclete you; 1 Thess. 4: 18, "Wherefore comfort (paraclete) one another with these words." The intercession of our Paracletes is the basis of all our pleading and our comfort. Whatever Christ is, we are to be, but he does not leave us alone to gain it.

John 14:19, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Christ never forgets that he died. Rev. 1: 18, "I am he that liveth and was dead." He ever lives as though he had died, Rev. 5: 6, "a Lamb, as it had been slain." Rom. 6: 11, "Dead unto sin." How? By the Spirit's work; 8: 10, "If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin;" v. 13, "Through the Spirit mortifying the deeds of the body." The Holy Spirit is given to so fill us as to cast off the old inveterate habits, just as the spring-time sap pushes off the dead leaves. We must stop trying to get rid of our evil ways, and get the Holy Ghost in our hearts. Death cannot stand before life (Rom. 8: 2). This is the ultimate purpose of giving us the Holy Ghost.

Rev. 3: 5, "I will confess his name." "The faithful and true witness." It is the office of a Christian to also be his witness. We witness for a spotless, he for sinful, man. Should we not also be "faithful and true?" The word of judgment will be not, "Well done, good and successful servant;" but "good and faithful." The truest witnessing is inevitable and involuntary. If we cannot put away an evil we should still be faithful in witnessing against it.

THE CAPTAIN'S ADVICE.

The question of giving to the cause of Christ at times must come prominently before every Christian. There are those who feel they ought to do more, and some feel that the church wants too much. Some think they ought to give just what they please, while many feel that they ought to pay so much for a seat in church and then they are entitled to all the privileges of God's house. This question is one upon which the Bible speaks a great deal. Whether you accept the position that one must give the tenth of his income, or the position of those who say: "We are judges of what we are to give," you will all find this fact in the Bible.

We are to put our conscience into giving. "God loveth a cheerful giver," "See that ye abound in this grace (liberality) also," "Not grudgingly nor of necessity," "As God hath prospered you"—are some of the expressions of Scripture on the subject. The following incident is related by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., of Boston, Mass., in advocating "Systematic giving to God's cause."

Many years ago a lad of sixteen years left home to seek his fortune. As he trudged along, he met an old neighbor, the captain of a canal boat, and the following conversation took place, which changed the current of the boy's life:

"Well, William, where are you going?"

"I don't know," he answered; "father is too poor to keep me at home any longer and says I must now make a living for myself."

"There's no trouble about that," said the captain. "Be sure you start right, and you'll get along finely."

William told his friend that the only trade he knew anything about was candle and soap-making, at which he had helped his father at home.

"Well," said the captain, "let me pray with you once more, and give you a little advice, and then I will let you go."

They both kneeled down upon the towpath; the dear old man prayed earnestly for William, and then gave this advice: "Some one will soon be the leading soap-maker in New York. It can be you as well as any one. I hope it may. Be a good man; give your heart to Christ; give the Lord all that belongs to him of every dollar you earn; make an honest soap; give a full pound, and I am certain you will be a prosperous and rich man."

When the boy arrived in the city he found it hard to get work. Lonesome and far from home, he remembered his mother's last words and the last words of the canal-boat captain. He was then led to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and united with the church. He remembered his promise to the old captain, and the first dollar he earned brought up the question of the Lord's part. In the Bible he found that the Jews were commanded to give one-tenth. "I will give that." And so he did: and ten cents of every dollar were sacred to the Lord.

Having regular employment, he soon became a partner; and after a few years his partners died, and William became the owner of the business.

He now resolved to keep his promise to the old captain; he made an honest soap, gave a full pound, and instructed his book-keeper to open an account with the Lord, and carry one-tenth of all his income to that account. He prospered; his business grew; his family was blessed; his soap sold, and he grew rich faster than he had ever hoped. He then gave the Lord two-tenths, and prospered more than ever; then he gave three-tenths, then four-tenths, then five-tenths.

He educated his family, and settled all his income to the Lord. He prospered more than ever.

This is the story of Mr. William Colgate, who has given millions of dollars to the Lord's cause, and left a name that will never die.—Sel.

WHAT MAKES A BOY POPULAR?

What makes a boy popular? Manliness, says Hezekiah Butterworth in the Ladies' Home Journal. During the war, how schools and colleges followed popular boys! These young leaders were the many boys whose hearts could be trusted. The boy who respects his mother has leadership in him. The boy who is careful of his sister is a knight. The boy who will never violate his word, and who will pledge his honor to his own heart and change not, will have the confidence of his fellows. The boy who defends the weak will one day become a hero among the strong. The boy who will never hurt the feelings of any one will one day find himself in the atmosphere of universal sympathy. "I know not," once said the great Governor Andrew, "what record of sin may await me in another world; but this I do know: I never yet despised a man because he was poor, because he was ignorant, or because he was black."

Shall I tell you how to become a popular boy? I will. Be too manly and generous and unselfish to seek to be popular; be the soul of honor, and love others better than yourself, and people will give you their hearts and delight to make you happy. That is what makes a boy popular.

We can do nothing for our fellowmen, but still it is good to know we can be something for them—to know that no man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

Faith's eyes can see through a frown of God, and under it read God's thoughts of love and peace.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION POINTS.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Feb. 3.—Mayor Smith yesterday afternoon issued an order to the police to arrest all saloon-keepers having their places open after midnight. The ordinance had fallen into disuse for the last year, and drinks could be procured all night at almost any saloon. When the police set out last night they found plenty of people to arrest. The offenders were taken before the Municipal court this morning and fined $25 each, and informed that a repetition of the offense would subject them to a fine of $100 each and possible imprisonment for keeping disorderly houses.

FARGO, N. D., Feb. 4.—The State Supreme Court this afternoon handed down its decision in the test case of the State vs. Simon Frazer and George Benz. The lower court had ordered the dismissal of the case on the ground that the State law was not applicable where liquors were dispensed by the agent in unbroken original packages, even if drank at the premises. The court holds that such sale is in violation of the prohibition law; that such place of business is a common nuisance, whether such liquor was or was not drank at such place of business; and, further, that since the passage of the Wilson bill the sale of intoxicating liquors is in violation of the law.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, Feb. 8.—Twenty injunction suits have been filed against liquor dealers here and the evidence produced will strike a heavy blow at the liquor traffic. A temperance organization has just been formed here and the influential business men are taking hold of the matter.

KEOKUK, Iowa, Feb. 8.—Keokuk business men have entered upon the law-and-order work in earnest. A constitution has already been formulated for the organization of citizens into a league for the enforcement of the law in this city. From an advance sheet of this constitution it is ascertained that the object of the league is "to take steps for the enforcement of all criminal laws and arousing and maintaining a sound public sentiment against lawlessness." What may grow out of the movement it is, of course, too early to predict, but it will no doubt have some influence upon politics at the coming election; for, while temperance and prohibition are not mentioned in the constitution, the body will not overlook the violations of law by saloons. Many of the best citizens of Keokuk have already indorsed the movement and have become members of the league.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 9.—At 3 o'clock this morning the saloon of Fisher Coulter, in Fredericksburg, was wrecked by a dynamite explosion, one end of the building being blown out. The building was occupied by Eugene Louther, wife and three children, who lived up stairs, and Julius Schaffer and wife, who lived down stairs. None of the occupants were injured, though Schaffer's furniture was destroyed, and the bed in which he and his wife were sleeping was broken down. The force of the explosion was so great as to break windows in all parts of the town. Coulter has run the saloon in violation of the prohibition ordinance of the town, but it is thought that the explosion was the work of village toughs, who hoped to throw the blame on temperance people.

It was a sad duty last week to mention the case of Lieut. Schwatka, out on a lecture tour in the West, who through drink semed to be rushing down with toboggan-slide speed into the pit. Since then, as the papers report, he wound up with a terrible spree in Mason City, Iowa, with delirium tremens; when returing to his hotel and trying to clamber up to his room, he reeled over the banisters and fell down stairs, smashing his face, breaking his ribs, and receiving other injuries, from which it is feared he will not recover. And he has a wife who has been summoned to his care. And "how many other hearts must ache." The men who sold him the liquor—how terrible, too, the curse that rests on them. And what of the people of that city, who in a State having a most righteous law, have not had the civic conscience and moral gumption to see that the law was enforced?—Advance.

No day is well spent unless it leaves the spender in the best possible state for the following days.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—First Quarter.—March 1.

SUBJECT.—The Shunammite's Son.—2 Kings 4:25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them.—John 5:21.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The good Shunammite.—vs. 8–17. Here we have one of the few instances which the Bible gives us, of the noble and great being called. Her's was the hospitality that is ungrudging; that compels acceptance. She constrained Elisha to come into her house, as the disciples of Emmaus constrained the Lord before they knew who he was. So we are led to infer that her love and reverence for Elisha grew as she discerned more and more of his holy character. Only the pure have eyes to discern the pure. Only they who are themselves the children of God can feel the tie of spiritual relationship. So it is only by making Jesus Christ our constant guest that we learn to know him in all his perfect holiness and abounding grace. Hospitality to the saints is in itself one of the best evidences of true saintship. They who "receive a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward." How many lose that reward because they are not willing to take the self-denial or inconvenience of opening their comfortable and perhaps luxurious homes to the humble servants of God as they go from place to place on their missions of mercy. "I dwell among my own." This answer brings out another great beauty in her character. She had a contented spirit. True, she was already rich and great, but it is in this very class that we find the pettiest ambitions, the most eager and selfish grasping after more wealth or more social distinction than is already possessed. Yet at the same time she had one ungratified desire; one thing lacking to make her cup of joy run over. Who of us has not some hidden, darling wish? We may have given it up, thinking it is not for us, while all the while God is keeping it for us—if not here, farther on, where we cannot be robbed of the blessing. Let us think that every good thing we crave is waiting in his secret storehouse, and that "sometime, somewhere" we shall have it.

2. A great sorrow.—vs. 18–28. Affliction tries character. We have found much to admire and love in the good Shunammite, but it is in the furnace fires of this great and overwhelming grief that the sterling gold shines out. Her wonderful strength of mind is shown in her heroic concealment of their child's death from her husband, both to spare him needless grief if he should be restored to her again, as she hoped and believed, and also to prevent him from hindering her on what might seem to him a wild errand. It is very probable that she knew the wonderful story of the restoring of the widow's son at Zarephath. Her marvelous faith, however, was no less rare and beautiful than that of the Syrophœnician woman of whom she strongly reminds us, though the heroine of the Old Testament lived a thousand years earlier. A violet is a violet in whatever soil it grows; and faith does not change with the centuries. And as Hilderbert, Archbishop of Tours in the eleventh century, has said: "Faith is not contrary to reason but it is above reason."

3. The raising of the dead child.—vs. 29–37. Why Elisha sent Gehazi before with his staff, is not very clear; but we can see that it may have served a useful purpose (1) in rebuking any superstitious reverence for mere instruments, as if there could be any magic virtue in his staff; thus making it clear to even the most ignorant mind that his miracles were wrought entirely by the power of God, and had nothing in common with the feats of heathen necromancers. (2) To prove that the child was really dead and not in a swoon. "He shut the door on them twain." He shuts out Gehazi, who with his utter lack of sympathy and spiritual apprehension would have been a hindering presence; and even the anguished mother. He would be free from every distracting influence and alone with God,—always the most favorable atmosphere for prevailing prayer. The child was not instantaneously raised. The process was gradual; but it is very interesting to trace the successive steps, and see their close and beautiful analogy to the work of raising a dead soul. It is only through personal contact with warm, living Christian workers that the unchurched masses will ever receive spiritual life. A good Quaker lady, to the question how best to reach the full-blooded Indians, quaintly replied that "the best way to reach the full-blooded Indians was to send after them a full-blooded Christian." None who are themselves in a half-dying condition can communicate life to others. And it is only through the touch of the living Christ—He who is the Life—felt in body and soul that any are raised up from spiritual death.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 11, 1891.

The Roman Lent has come, and the mad whirl of society which is obedient to this invention of priests, is ended for forty days at least. It is at least a great relief to more fathers and mothers than will openly acknowledge it. It removes temporarily the temptation to do many things that no prudent parent wishes his or her children to do; yet for fear of being called "cranks" they do not warn their children of the danger of indulging in many dissipations that they know to be injurious to the bodies and souls of the young, and which "society" is constantly saying are harmless. Here is a specimen: At one of the largest entertainments of the season—a ball given here Monday night, in a conspicuous place, by which all of the guests were compelled to pass, was a fountain constantly flowing with—not God's pure water, but conscience-deadening, brain-dulling champagne, and near by was a bowl as big as a wash-tub filled with punch, another devil's concoction to lead young men and maidens astray. Verily, "society" is as much, if not more, in need of the services of a missionary than the slums of our great cities, or the heathen of foreign lands.

More war talk in the Senate. This time it was caused by the naval appropriation bill. It is not strange that the secular press should be constantly filled with sensational rumors of impending war between the United States and some foreign country, when a member of the United States Senate, our highest legislative body, gets up and talks as Senator Morgan did yesterday. He said that he favored an item in the appropriation bill because it would enable men to be trained to man privateers in case of a war with England or Germany. But he did not stop there. He said: "The human family is a war-like establishment anyhow. It may be said that the largest part of its progress has originated in war; the largest part of its education has been developed in battles and campaigns. Even the acquaintance of people with each other has been assisted more by the march of armies than by the circulation of newspapers."

Doesn't that read like an extract from a history of the age when might was considered right, and when every man lived in an armed camp? If the Senator be right in his deductions, which God forbid, in what are we better than were the fighting pagans of the Dark Ages? But the worst is yet to come. He closed his remarks by saying: "I believe that nothing would gratify the American people more than to have a good cause of quarrel with some great power and to go to war about it." The gentleman's means of observation must be infinitely superior to mine or that of any of the people with whom I happen to be acquainted, if he can find foundation for the belief that any considerable portion of our people are desirous of war. It is deeply to be regretted that a gentleman of Mr. Morgan's prominence should have expressed such opinions; they can only do harm.

Representative J. D. Taylor, of Ohio, has favorably reported to the House of Representatives, from the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, a bill to prohibit the importation, exportation, and inter-State transportation, in violation of local laws, of alcoholic beverages. The committee notes in its very interesting report that seven entire States, the major part of several other States, and many places in most of the remaining States have prohibited the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a beverage. "This fact," says the report, "together with the large favorable vote in constitutional amendment contests where prohibition did not carry, and other signs of the times, clearly show that commerce in alcoholic liquors as a beverage, the use of which experience has proven is so destructive of the public health, the public safety and the public morals, will not much longer be tolerated by a majority, the ruling power of this republic."

The same gentleman favorably reported from the same committee a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage in the United States and in every place subject to its jurisdiction. This report says: "This evil is a confluent eruption affecting every part of the national system, and it cannot be cured while in any part of the system the evil is humored."

The W. C. T. U. held a praise service Sunday afternoon on account of the new law prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any shape to children under sixteen years of age in this district. To the Union belongs the credit of having originated and pushed to a successful issue this law. *

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—About 4,000 of the 65,000 students in American colleges are preparing for the ministry.

—The Ohio legislature is to be asked for $80,000 to erect new buildings for the State University at Columbus.

—Boston University offers instruction in a larger number of languages than any other institution in America.

—Harvard has 16,930 graduates, of whom George Bancroft, the historian, a member of the class of 1817, was the oldest survivor at the time of his recent death.

—The number of American students reported as in attendance at the University of Berlin, for the last season, is 185, representing seventy-one of our colleges and twenty-nine of our States.

—Some institutions have too much money for their good. The University of Pennsylvania is building a $75,000 theater for the use of the students; and there is a movement on foot to establish a chair of the Irish language at the same university.

—One of the three great Italian railroad companies, the Mediterranean, has followed the German practice in establishing schools for its shop apprentices, intended to qualify them for service on the railroad. The apprentices compete for admission to the schools, and twenty are admitted to each school in each year.—N. Y. Railroad Gazette.

—In the Quaker schools, says the Baltimore American, it is very odd to hear the children call the teachers by their first names. "Mary, can I be excused from my history lesson to-day?" asks a tot with hair down her back, of her preceptress, and with the greatest sang froid Bobby, yet in knickerbockers, asks "if Louis will let him out an hour earlier?"

—The new "College Book" of Lafayette College shows a total enrollment of 3,780 names, of whom 1,737 have received degrees. The distribution by professions is 341 physicians, including 13 professors in medical colleges; 619 lawyers, including 33 judges; 152 teachers, besides 101 professors and residents of colleges; 520 clergymen, including 31 foreign missionaries and 62 doctors of divinity, and 62 editors.

—Prof. A. J. Steele, of the Le Moyne Institute at Memphis, Tenn., is now in the twenty-first year of continuous service under the A. M. A.—the last sixteen in the principalship of the Le Moyne. His institute makes a specialty of Normal and Industrial work. He also has a night school. His school in November numbered 508, and this, by the increase in the night school, reached about 550 in December. He has sixteen regular teachers. The school has become a recognized power in Memphis and in the Southwest. Best of all, it enjoys a revival about every year.

—The theological students and about fifty of those in Augustana College were during last vacation sent to fields situated in at least twelve different States to preach the Gospel. A number of the others spent the vacation in selling books. About half of the students are of Swedish birth, and a majority of the others of Swedish parentage, but in one of the regular classical courses, no Swedish is required, and in the course in which it is most prominent three-fourths of the instruction is in English. In the preparatory department the study of the government and history of the United States is a prominent subject.

—The Mississippi constitutional convention incorporates the following paragraph in regard to education in the new Constitution: "There shall be a common school fund, which shall consist of poll tax, to be retained in the counties where the same is collected, and an additional sum from the general fund in the State treasury sufficient to maintain common schools for the constitutional term of four months. Any county or separate school district may levy a further tax to maintain their schools for a longer time than the constitutional term of four months. The common school funds shall be divided among the several counties and school districts in proportion to the number of educatable children therein according to data to be furnished by the State Superintendent of Education."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The special religious services held by the College Church, Wheaton, closed Sabbath night after continuing about four weeks. There were a number of conversions, and Christians were much quickened in zeal.

—Dr. Howard Crosby reports that of the members of his church, within the past year, only eight have died, of whom not one was under 70 years of age, and only two under 80. To be exact, the two youngest were 78, while the ages of the other six were 82, 84, 86, 87, 90 and 95.

—The speaker-elect of the new House of Representatives of the Japanese Empire is an earnest Presbyterian Christian, and his wife, a widely-known writer of great ability, is also a devoted Christian. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole of the House is also a Christian.

—Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Hepburn, medical missionaries in Yokohama under the Presbyterian Board for thirty years, recently celebrated their golden wedding in that city; the Japanese presenting them with a service of plate and other gifts. Dr. Hepburn prepared the first dictionary of the language ever used in Japan.

—Mr. Wanamaker, the Philadelphia merchant, and Postmaster General, organized his famous Bethany Missionary Sunday-school a quarter of a century ago, and now he has the satisfaction of knowing that the church which grew out of it has 1,750 members. Lately 245 new members were received, mostly from the Sunday-school.

—Rev. John Elliot, rector of Randwick Episcopal Church, near Stroud, in England, a post to which he was appointed in 1819, entered upon his one hundredth year recently. Until a year ago he preached a sermon every Sunday; and he is still in possession of all his faculties except hearing.

—Major-General O. O. Howard has undertaken mission work in New York since he was stationed at Governor's Island in command of the United States troops. He and his son have been teaching Bible classes in a miserable room over a stable in Elizabeth street. He is now trying to buy a deserted church in Chrystie street for the use of the school and for services for adults.

—Mrs. Drake, the wife of a Congregational minister in Iroquois, S. D., has been ordained to preach the Gospel by the largest council of Congregational ministers ever assembled in the State. There was only one negative vote. Mrs. Drake has for six years assisted her husband, who has the oversight of five churches, preaching with as much ability and acceptance as he.

—"The mission field is sadly undermanned," said Dr. Pentecost, writing to the Christian Union from India. He further says; "Let our men of wealth double their subscriptions to the various missionary boards, and let a hundred of our very best young men, thoroughly furnished and filled with the Spirit, offer themselves for this field. It is absolutely no good to send second-class men to India. 'Pray, brethren, pray! the dead are waking.' Do not believe the reports of the unbelieving spies. God is able to give us the land."

—Corea presents a striking illustration of the irresistible advance of the kingdom of Christ. One of the most remarkable works of grace known in modern missions is that among the Coreans. Without having heard or seen a missionary, thousands of people have heard of Christ, and turned from vain things to the service of the living and true God. These converts are the fruit of the circulation of copies of the New Testament in Corea by the Rev. John Ross, late missionary of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland in Manchuria.

—A Christian Conference, at which all the evangelical denominations will be entitled to representation, is to be held in Milwaukee. The idea of holding such a convention originated with Rev. M. M. Parkhurst, D.D., pastor of Summerfield Methodist church. A committee was appointed consisting of Dr. Parkhurst, Rev. W. P. Hellings, pastor of the First Baptist church; Rev. Judson Titsworth, of Plymouth Congregational church; Rev. A. A. Kiehle, of Calvary Presbyterian church, and the Rev. M. P. Ryan, to make the necessary arrangements.

—The Shawmut Congregational Church of Boston, Mass., of which Rev. W. E. Griffis, D.D., is pastor, during the past year has supported a missionary in Turkey, Miss Emily Wheeler, at a salary of $500; an evangelist in Japan, the Rev. Keizo Koyana, at $750; a Japanese student at Edinburgh, Scotland, at $200; and contributed $500 toward completing the edifice of the native Japanese church in Japan, of which the Rev. J. T. Yokoi is pastor, in addition to their regular and miscellaneous contributions to standard and local charities and missions.

—At a late meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Union, arrangements were made for publishing a quarterly journal to be entitled the American Sabbath Union, and to bear the inscription, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day," under the editorial charge of the general secretary, the Rev. J. H. Knowles, D.D.. with the Rev. James P. Mills, district secretary of the Sixth District, as assistant editor, residing at Chicago. Provisions were also made for the employment of an attorney at law for the prosecution of violators of the Sunday laws.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Representative J. D. Taylor, of Ohio, reported Feb. 9, to the House from the committee on alcoholic liquor traffic, a bill to prohibit the importation, exportation and inter-State transportation in violation of the local laws of alcoholic beverages. Mr. Taylor also reported favorably from the same committee a joint resolution prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage in the United States and in every place subject to its jurisdiction.

Admiral David D. Porter died suddenly at Washington, D. C., Friday morning. The funeral will take place next Tuesday, and he will be buried at Arlington Cemetery with the highest military honors.

CHICAGO.

Democrats held a meeting at the Sherman house and effected a permanent anti-Cregier organization. A resolution was adopted declaring that the purpose of the organization was to secure an honest and economical city administration, and the election, as a successor to Mayor Cregier, of "some cultured, capable man, who would fitly represent the city in the reception of distinguished visitors to the World's Fair."

At a regular Sunday meeting of the Trade and Labor Assembly, a body said to represent 47,000 workmen of the city, resolutions were adopted demanding the exclusive employment of union men by the Directors of the World's Fair buildings. Following this the Italians who had begun work in Jackson Park were driven off by a "union" mob, and all work is at a standstill.

COUNTRY.

The Nebraska House passed the Australian ballot bill Tuesday without a single dissenting vote. Representative Gale, of Brown county, read a threatening letter from some of his constituents, saying that he ought to be hanged for failing to stick to the Alliance party.

James Redpath, the Irish Nationalist, journalist, and lecturer, died at New Scrofula, salt rheum, and all diseases of the blood, dyspepsia, headache, kidney and liver complaints, and catarrh, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. Try it.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

FARM NOTES.

WHAT GARDEN SEEDS WILL YOU WANT?

Now is a good time to think over and determine what garden seeds you will want for spring and summer sowing. To do this, first send for one or more catalogues of seedsmen of character, carefully look them over and see what the land you propose to cultivate or kinds you propose to grow will require, then order, thus saving money besides running less risk from poor seeds as may be found at the corner grocery store. The market gardener, or those who cultivate extensively, will hardly need these hints, as they could not well keep up with the markets or home supplies if they did, but the great mass of people who now live in suburban homes and expect to do something in the line of vegetables or flowers, or both, are very apt to put off the matter until actual sowing time, and thus run great chances of getting things of poor quality, or unfit for the purposes required. It takes but a very small patch of land, and that may be at the back of the lot, to grow a good family supply of early root crops, such as beets, turnips, radishes, onions from sets, cabbage, cauliflower, spinach; salads, as lettuce, cress and pepper grass; peas, snap-short beans, etc. While for a winter supply, or for potatoes, etc., if the land is of small extent, resort may be had to the general market. No lot of land is less than 25 feet wide, often 50x150; in such a spot, a piece used for the kitchen garden of, say, 20x40, will, if well manured, and as soon as one crop is off another put in, grow all we give above, to which tomatoes, cucumbers, and a few melon hills may be added. This leaves room for the house and a nice lawn and flower patch in the front, with a place worthy the name of a summer home. If all this is more than likely to be well attended to, then have a dozen stools of rhubarb, a bed of asparagus, with a spot, say 10x20, just to grow salads only.

If this is too much trouble even, then lay down in grass and walks (the fewer of these the better), with half a dozen clumps of fine shrubs, half a dozen trees for shade, with a few flower beds, anything to make the home lot look cheery and pleasant, and afford a pleasing occupation of an hour or two to keep all clean and tidy.

As to quantities required, the following may be of service. One ounce of beet seed will give a row of fifty feet; a pint of dwarf beans, fifty feet; one-fourth ounce of carrots, seventy-five feet; a quart of onion sets, forty feet; the same of peas, seventy-five feet; an ounce of radish, enough for four sowings of twenty-five feet each; an ounce of spinach enough for two sowings of fifty feet each; one-half ounce of turnips, three sowings of twenty-five feet each; an ounce of lettuce giving a thousand plants, enough for a dozen sowings. Twenty-five plants each of cabbage and cauliflower are enough for a single planting. A paper of cucumbers and melons is sufficient; the same is true of celery, but it will be better to get plants of these. Then among sweet herbs, a paper each of parsley, sage, thyme, and marjoram are useful things to have, with half-dozen patches of mint for the green peas.—Prairie Farmer.

WASTE LAND FOR FRUIT TREES.

Professor Maynard calls attention to the fact that apple trees, remarkable for their thrift and vigor, are often found on land so rough and stony that it cannot be cultivated. The fruit produced upon such land is noted for its high color and rich flavor, and for long-keeping qualities. There are thousands upon thousands of acres of this kind of land, and much of it is almost worthless for any other purpose than forestry and the production of the large fruits, and, if properly cared for, it would, in a few years, give a large income for the investment. In planting such land, particular care must be given to the preparation of the soil directly around the tree, and to saving the material often found growing upon it, such as sedges, brush, etc., or obtained elsewhere to be used for mulch.—Exchange.

By All Odds

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sailors, campers, and pioneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed, prove effective.

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhea. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered a medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the end of that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected."—F. C. Luce, Late Lieut. 56th Regt. Mass. Vol. Infantry.

"Ayer's Pills are

The Best

I have ever used for headaches, and they act like a charm in relieving any disagreeable sensation in the stomach after eating."—Mrs. M. J. Ferguson, Pullens, Va.

"I was a sufferer for years from dyspepsia and liver troubles, and found no permanent relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. They have effected a complete cure."—George W. Mooney, Walla Walla, W. T.

THERE ARE MANY USES FOR SAPOLIO

To clean tombstones.	To renew oil-cloth.	To renovate paint.	To brighten metals.
To polish knives.	To scrub floors.	To wash out sinks.	To scour bath-tubs.
To clean dishes.	To whiten marble.	To remove rust.	To scour kettles.

EVERYBODY USES IT.

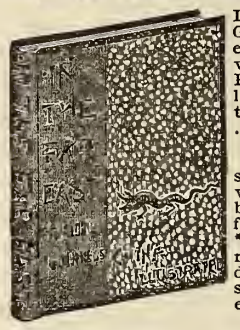
Dentists to clean false teeth.	Engineers to clean parts of machines.	Housemaids to scrub marble floors.
Surgeons to polish their instruments.	Ministers to renovate old chapels.	Chemists to remove some stains.
Confectioners to scour their pans.	Sextons to clean the tombstones.	Carvers to sharpen their knives.
Mechanics to brighten their tools.	Hostlers on brasses and white horses.	Shrewd ones to scour old straw hats
Cooks to clean the kitchen sink.	Artists to clean their palattes.	Soldiers to brighten their arms.
Painters to clean off surfaces.	Wheelman to clean bicycles.	Renovators to clean carpets.

EVERY ONE FINDS A NEW USE.

COSTLY CHANGE.

The middle-aged or older people who sell or rent their farms to spend remaining days in some village or city—do they gain by the exchange? Are anticipations realized? When the fresh farm supplies are missed, and increased expenses draw heavily on the purse, when the novelty of the new situation has passed away, when they have been the rounds and seen the sights, when leisure becomes more tiresome than labor, when sedentary life weakens appetite and digestion and develops dangerous ailments, when night doesn't bring refreshing sleep, when new associations fail to give pleasure, and the breaking up of old ones occasions regret—then is it not seen that it was a serious mistake to break up life-long connections to form new ones?

NELLIE LEWIS CARNATION.—The latest and one of the best novelties for 1891 is an elegant Carnation, growing on long stems, a free bloomer with large flowers, of an exquisite shade of pink, something entirely different from anything in Carnations. This flower is destined to become a great favorite among the florists, as the ladies prize it very highly for corsage bouquets and decorative purposes generally. The endorsement of the old firm of James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., who introduce this plant, is enough to assure the public that it is all they claim for it. The price is only 50 cents each, three for $1.25, six for $2.25, doz. $4.00; but a better way would be to send 10 cents for Vick's Floral Guide and the 10 cents can be deducted from the first order forwarded for seeds.



Be wise in time. You have too many gray hairs for one so young looking. Use Hall's Hair Renewer, the best preparation out to cure them. Try it.

IN BRIEF.

Stanley says that certain portions of Africa will always be worthless on account of the grasshoppers. In one instance he saw a column of young grasshoppers ten miles broad by thirty long marching down in a valley, and when the grass was fired against them they were thick enough to smother the flames.

Dr. Schultz, who has recently returned from the interior of Africa, reports that he discovered a tribe, the Makubas, living on the Kabengo river, who are so strongly imbued with a horror of shedding human blood, that they may be called the Quakers of the dark continent. They are splendid fishermen, taking to the water like fish themselves, and are well built, strapping fellows of the Zulu type, expert canoeists and extensive corn-growers.

A curious mistake has been made by an official at Carlsbad. An American gentleman who has been traveling in Bohemia arrived at the Spa, and entered his name as James I. King, of Buffalo. This was conveyed to the local press as "James the First, King of Buffalo," and Mr. King was besieged as "His Majesty" by such a shoal of tradesmen, beggars and tuft-hunters that he was obliged to leave Carlsbad sooner than he had intended. Some of the natives even mistook the popular tourist for "Buffalo Bill."

Statistics compiled by the Railway Age show that 6,080 miles of tracks were laid during the year 1890. This is 850 miles in excess of the previous year. The States showing the greatest extent of new mileage are as follows: Montana, 421; Georgia, 375; Washington, 341; North Carolina. 309; Texas, 253; Alabama, 253; Virginia, 228; Ohio, 223; Kentucky, 222; Nebraska, 218; Colorado, 211. The States showing the least mileage are Iowa and Nevada, each one mile; Arizona, 3; Rhode Island, 6; Vermont, 13; and Massachusetts, 16.

The work of constructing the cut-off on the Southern Pacific west of San Antonio, Tex., from Shumla to Flanders, will begin in a short time. The cut-off is to be only seven miles long, but will cost not less than $1,000,000. The bridge that is to be thrown across the Pecos river will be the highest in the United States, the center span to be 378 feet above the water. The entire length of the bridge from cliff to cliff, will be 1,200 feet. The fifteen miles to be abandoned cost $4,000,000, and the track runs along high cliffs, through two tunnels, and over twenty-five bridges.

According to representations given recently in the German Reichstag, France has a war footing of 3,300,000 men; Russia, 2,570,000 men; Germany, 2,900,000; Austro-Hungary, 1,150,000; Italy, 1,090,000; or these five powers can summon into the field, should the necessity require it, 11,019,000. Who can foretell the awful consequences should any power be so rash as to let loose the war dragon? And to prevent such a catastrophy, it is deemed necessary to keep up a peace footing for Russia of 314,000; France, 511,334; Germany, 486,983; Austro-Hungary, 325,693; Italy, 255,418; or in all, 2,393,423.

A traveler in Mexico tells of a queer kind of change: "In one of the small towns I bought some limes, and gave the girl $1 in payment. By way of change, she returned me forty-nine pieces of soap the size of a water-cracker. I looked at her in astonishment; and she returned my look with equal surprise, when a police officer, who witnessed the incident, hastened to inform me that for small sums soap was the legal tender in many portions of the country. I examined my change, and found that each cake was stamped with the name of a town and of a manufacture authorized by the government. The cakes of soap were worth one and a half cents each. Afteward, in my travel, I frequently received similar change. Many of the cakes showed signs of having been in the wash-tub; but that I discovered was not at all uncommon. Provided the stamp was not obliterated, the soap did not lose any value as currency. Occasionally a man would borrow a cake of a friend, wash his hands, and return it with thanks. I made use of my pieces more than once in my bath, and subsequently spent them."

The profits of the Paris Exposition are estimated to have been 1,750 millions of francs, or 350 millions of dollars. Americans are credited with leaving 70 million of dollars behind them in France. Some effects of the Exposition were these: The gold reserve of the Bank of France increased 272 millions of francs. The receipts of the railroad companies showed an increase of 66 millions of francs. The cab company transported 29 millions of passengers, against 12 millions in the same period of 1888. The increase in the consumption of wine was 3,162,227 gallons; of meat, 3,278,871 pounds. The receipts of the theatres increased 11 million francs. The Eiffel Tower, which cost 7,514,095 francs, took in 6,459,584 francs. No mention has yet been made of the the "increase of funds" or "benefit" to the churches. Seventy millions left behind by Americans! One tenth—God's claim upon our money—is $7,000,000. What a grand Gospel work this would do.—The Ensign.

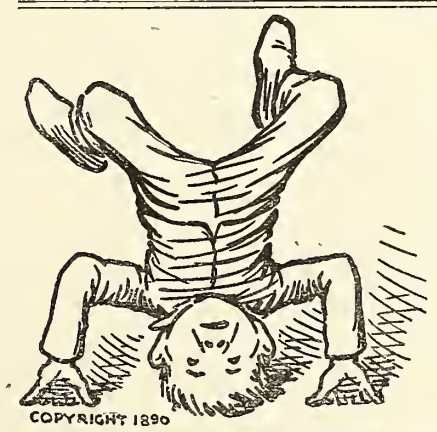
And whate'er your lot may be,
Paddle your own canoe."



"To yourself be true," "and thou cans't not then be false to any man." "Self-love is not so vile a sin as self-neglecting." Then "be wise to-day, 'tis madness to defer." Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for all affections of the lungs and throat. It is likewise a wonderful liver tonic, and invigorator.

All the year round, you may rely upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It's not like the sarsaparillas, that are said to be good for the blood in March, April and May. The "Discovery" works equally well at all times, and in all cases of blood-taints, or humors, no matter what their name or nature. It cures all Skin, Scalp and Scrofulous affections, as Eczema, Tetter, Salt-rheum, Fever-sores, White Swellings, Hip-joint disease and kindred ailments.

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, sold through druggists, because you only pay for the good you get.

Your money is returned if it doesn't benefit or cure you.

It isn't the usual way

—it's just the reverse—to pay a patient when you can't cure him. Nevertheless, that's what's done by the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They promise to pay you $500 if they can't cure your catarrh, no matter how bad the case. It isn't mere talk—it's business. You can satisfy yourself of it, if you're interested. And you ought to be, if you have catarrh. It's faith in their medicine that's behind the offer. It has cured thousands of the worst cases, where everything else failed. You can be cured, too. If you can't, you get the money. They're willing to take the risk—you ought to be glad to take the medicine.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help ife that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

York Tuesday from the effects of injuries received by being run down by a horse car last week.

Explorer Stanley denied at Akron, Ohio, Monday night, the story that he intended to present to the Salvation Army all the valuable presents, diamonds, etc., which he had received from monarchs and others.

The greatest gathering of railroad men ever assembled in Pittsburg attended the funeral of First Vice President J. N. McCullough, of the Pennsylvania Company, Wednesday.

The entire edition of the Steamboat Springs (Col.) Inter Mountain was excluded from the mails Thursday because it contained an item pertaining to an entertainment to be given by school children in which a watch was to be given to the person holding the lucky number. The objectionable item was cut out and the papers were mailed.

As the result of a death which occurred in Passavant hospital, Milwaukee, a judicial inquiry may be instituted regarding the use of Koch's lymph. The alleged victim is Mrs. Hedwig Wendland, and it is charged that her death was due to the injection of the lymph.

A party of Chicago and Pittsburg capitalists, with a number of manufacturers from Wales, located a sheet steel and tinplate mill in South Joliet, Ill. The plant will cost $500,000 when completed.

James Storey of Parsons, Kan., has just received letters patent from Washington for his invention of an artificial egg. It is said to resemble the natural product in all particulars. The inventor says that he can manufacture at least one carload a day at a cost of 3 cents a dozen, with machinery that will cost only $500.

Judge Wm. Lewis, of Pineville, Ky., who has been active in suppressing bloody feuds in that region, was shot and killed by his own son, Sidney Lewis, whom the Judge had put under bond as one of the unlawful gang.

The great strike of 16,000 coke workers began at Scottdale, Pa., Feb. 10. There is every reason to believe that the fight will be hotly contested, as the men are much excited and say they will never return to their posts of duty at a 10 per cent reduction, and intimate that nothing save an advance will satisfy them.

Specials show that a number of lives were lost in Nebraska during the late blizzard. The wife of Melton Cummings, a farmer near Rushville, who started from town for home Saturday, was found dead in her buggy to-day within forty rods of a neighbor's house. Eddie Chidester and Steven St. Peters, each aged 14 years, who had been out hunting, were found frozen to death in a corn-field. M. L. Lissent, residing three miles north of Chadron, is supposed to be buried under a big snowdrift and searching parties are looking for the body. Two boys, aged 10 and 12, sons of a German farmer named August Ford, were found dead Monday evening, two miles northwest of Utica, Minn. They got caught in the blizzard.

The coldest blizzard in two years was reported Monday in Texas. Flocks and herds were scattered. At Chattanooga, Tenn., over two inches of rain fell, and high water in the Tennessee river is expected.

Gen. W. T. Sherman died Saturday afternoon about 2 o'clock at his home in New York. His death had been expected several days, as the severity of his sickness forbade hope of recovery. His body will be buried at St. Louis next Saturday.

FOREIGN.

The London citizen memorial sent to the Czar on Jan. 24 regarding the treatment of the Jews in Russia has been returned to Lord Salisbury through the Russian ambassador without comment. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Telegraph declares that the only result of the memorial is redoubled persecution of the Jews.

Baron Hirsch of Paris has created a trust fund of $2,400,000 to aid the immigration of Jews to this country. He names a board of trustees of prominent Hebrews of this country who shall have charge of the fund.

The unemployed of Toronto, Ontario, held a parade and demonstration Feb. 11. They marched to the city hall bearing a flag with the motto, "Bread or Work." At the city hall the gathering numbered about 2,500, and delegates were sent to the Mayor asking him to say what the city could do to relieve the distressed. Vague threats of violence were made, and the demonstration will be renewed tomorrow.

The boiler in the Quebec Worsted Company's factory, near Quebec, Canada, exploded, Thursday morning, partly demolishing the works. At least twenty-two persons were killed and more than a score wounded. It is feared that many bodies will yet be found in the debris.

Near St. Albert, Russell county, Ontario, Mrs. La France and two grandchildren were burned to death in their home Wednesday night. Mr. La France will die from the effects of exposure during the night.

DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

The struggle for Senator is over in South Dakota. Last week Monday Rev. J. H. Kyle, a Congregational minister of Aberdeen, was elected. He is represented as in favor of prohibition, an independent in politics, of "broad views," and evidently in favor of the reforms directed against the grasping monopolies antagonized by the Farmers' Alliance. He is a graduate of Oberlin (1878) and of Allegheny Theological Seminary. He took no particular part in politics and it is said the choice is much against his personal inclination. In Illinois, however, the dead-lock is yet strong. The Republicans have made most desperate efforts to defeat the Democratic candidate, even voting for the president of the F. M. B. A. lodge, so as to catch the three votes cast by members of that order. The lodge-bound three did not give way, and the Republicans at last voted for Streetor, the F. M. B. A. candidate. Eight of their members, however, honestly revolt from such a performance, and the lodge still prevents the election of Senator from Illinois.

Indianapolis has been proving what Cincinnati did a year or more ago—that law can be enforced, and iniquity suppressed. The Indiana capital has been "free" to gamblers and Sunday saloons for some two years, but a new chief of police appointed a few days ago made a speech to the police notifying them that law must be enforced. In a week the gamblers were driven from the city, the saloons closed on the Sabbath day and after 11 P. M., and the Sunday theaters tight shut up. Here in Chicago we look on such an exhibition of moral courage and turn with unmixed indignation to the representative of Freemasonry who sits in the executive chair, of whom the News of Saturday says: "The Mayor has at his beck not far from two thousand policemen. He has but to say the word and every public gambling house in Chicago will be closed hard and fast within half an hour and may so be kept closed indefinitely. But Mayor Cregier cannot close the gambling houses. He is morally incompetent. He cannot drive the swarms of 'plug-gers,' 'cappers' and 'steerers' from the public streets. He is incapacitated for this service by his general impotence and irresponsibility, and the dew of death is on the brow of this shameless old man's administration."

Girardville, Pa., was in the center of the Molly Maguire region, when that body of the assassins of Masonry was flourishing years ago. The work of the Pinkerton detectives and of President F. R. Gowen, of the Reading railroad, brought some ten of these men to the gallows. The Mollies were all members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, which was all the secret society they belonged to. It is reported that the Hibernians have hatched a new brood of them at Girardville. For weeks past mine bosses and prominent citizens have received anonymous communications decorated with a coffin, crossbones and a skull, similar to those received during the former reign of the Molly Maguires. Little or no attention has been paid to these missives, but a few days since a man named Williams, who had been notified, was waylaid by several masked men. Amid a volley of bullets his horse succeeded in carrying him safely over the mountains in the darkness. Others who have received like notices are fearful of meeting a like or even worse fate.

General Sherman was buried last Saturday at St. Louis with military honors. His son, whose vow as a Jesuit, was a matter of serious comment a few years since, read the Roman Catholic burial service at the grave and at the New York home. There was no service in any church as we can learn. During the last week in the General's life, the children secured the services of a priest to administer "extreme unction." This was subject of such comment and criticism, as the General was unconscious at the time, that Senator John Sherman wrote explaining that, although his brother was not a member of the Roman church, he would have granted to his children the consolation which the ceremony would have given them, had he been in a rational condition. The priest son is reported as saying that his father was baptized and married in the Roman church and attended it until the war, when he ceased to commune. General Sherman himself wrote in the North American Review, December, 1888: "To put at rest a matter of constant inquiry, I here record that my immediate family are strongly Catholic; but I am not, and cannot be." His death removes from earth the last of the great generals of our war who may be classed in the first rank, Grant, Thomas, Sheridan, Sherman. God hasten the day when men shall cease

"Seeking the bubble Reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth."

The Jesuits have lost their case in the Calhoun school of this city, whose principal, Mr. Ford, they attempted to drive out to make room, it is reported by some, for Mrs. Mulligan. This lady, being a celebrated "war-widow," was for a time pension agent by Democratic appointment. Last year she was nominated by the same party for the responsible position of county superintendent of schools for the Chicago district. As she had no experience in school matters, the nomination was well enough understood to be a bid for Romanist votes. The popular uprising against the Nettlehorst-Brennan attack on Mr. Ford and the common schools alarmed the Romanists and warned them they were going too far. So, although the Calhoun school has its principal restored, the agitation goes on. A great mass meeting was held last Saturday evening in the First Methodist church which was addressd by eminent pastors of the city. The echoes of their eloquent protest against the anti-American management of the Chicago schools will not soon cease to reverberate.

IF I WERE A HEATHEN—

I mean that if I were deprived by circumstances beyond my control of all intelligence except that revealed by the light of nature and my own limited observation, having within me the disposition, common to all men, to worship some being or some thing as my superior and benefactor—I think I should yield my sincere devotion to Baal (or the Sun), as the brightest and best of all the visible creation.

To make this selection, however, I should need the power to reason; for unless I possessed this faculty, I should be like many other heathen, who prefer to make their deities with their own hands, or procure them, ready-made, from dealers in strange gods—too often manufactured in Christian England. As it is probable that I should not, in my darkened condition, possess a cultivated taste for art, the more hideous the image, the higher I should undoubtedly esteem it, since this seems to be a very prominent idea in the idol worship of ordinary heathens.

But sun-worship would appeal very forcibly to all my personal necessities, for from the orb of day I should derive warmth and light that would enable me to hunt and fish and enjoy myself by basking in its genial rays. I should not greatly mind its going away every evening, for I would sleep sweetly during its absence, and in the freshness of rest gladly hail its reappearance in the morning. On cloudy or stormy days, too, although I should miss its brightness and warmth, I should still be sensible of its presence in the sky; and the knowledge of its stability and regularity of movement would be one of the strongest incentives to worship it. Everything on earth—even Ashtaroth, the Moon—might change, but I should know that the sun was always constant, and therefore more worthy of my confidence and worship. Others might worship what they chose, but I think I should be a "high-toned" heathen, seeking the best deity that the world or the skies could afford.

But if at any time, through the efforts of earnest missionaries, I should be led to embrace the revealed Christian religion, I should in my new faith and increased knowledge forsake my devotion to Baal and worship the Holy Trinity of heaven—the Creator of all things, including the sun—and joyfully rest in the peace that only the service of Jesus Christ can bestow.

Should my conversion be followed by a resort to the manners and customs of civilization, with all the advantages accruing therefrom, I should probably unite with some Christian church, believing it to be my positive duty to take upon me the vows involved in my profession—a duty hallowed by my heart's devotion to my Redeemer, which would make it a pleasure to my soul.

But having joined the church and come into fellowship with all its members, and having an eye single to the glory of God, I am approached by several prominent brethren and told of a wonderful secret organization, to which most of my fellow members belong, and known as Freemasonry. In answer to inquiries, I am informed that this society offers superior inducements to all its members; that through its ceremonies and teachings new light is shed upon the soul; that it is a great promoter of charity; that it brings one and all into an advantageous brotherhood that is broader and stronger than even Christianity, and far more directly useful to the individual in his business and social relations; together with much more of commendation. So I decide to join the order.

Of course I am filled with disgust when passing through the initiation, and dismayed by the horrible oath which I am required to take. Indeed, nothing in heathenism could more deeply stir my soul. All the promised "light" that I have gained was gathered from three tall tallow candles and the gas burners overhead. I raise some weak objections to the ceremony, and am urged to progress in the order, with the promise that the "light" will surely come to me. So I am led, with increasing terror, to take additional degrees, until I sit in the Master's chair.

Have I yet found the promised "light?" I have; and I find myself occupying a position that I once formerly held in heathendom! I am again a high priest of Baal! Over my chair is a representation of the sun that I once worshiped, and all around me are symbolized the ancient sacred mysteries which I once highly prized when I was an innocent heathen, for in that condition I had known no better than I acted. How is it now? A professed follower of Christ, with the light from his Gospel flooding my soul, yet weekly walking among the three tallow dips of the Masonic lodge, perpetuating, in every initiation, the worship of Baal, misleading deceived novitiates, and intelligently presiding over a Christless series of mummeries that would disgrace a heathen festival!

Does my conscience approve of my course? Can I expect the blessing of the Lord upon my soul as long as I am in this secret work, to which I am bound by diabolical obligations that frighten me while I officially administer them to others?

No—No—NO! And, God forgiving me for relapsing into heathenism, I again flee to the arms of my Redeemer, loathing the wickedness in which I have participated, and heartily despising the vaunted but empty glory of the lodge!

What an age is this! Men worship graven images, the symbols of heathenism, gold and silver, temporal glory in high positions of every class, and everything but Christ, to whom all worship is due! The Gospel has lost its terrors as well as its charms, and without its influence longer felt and acknowledged in the affairs of life, the nation seems to be returning to hopeless heathenism. MISSOURI MOVES.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Hardly has the smoke from Rev. B. Carradine's broadside against Christless Masonry, in the Centenary M. E. Church of St. Louis, cleared away, ere the lodge gets another charge of cannister from a big political gun. But we leave the reader to a perusal of the matter as it appeared in heavy headlines in the St. Louis Evening Star-Sayings of Feb. the 9th, to-wit:

THE MAYOR IS MAD.

He receives an insulting letter from a knave and a fool.

Mayor Noonan has all kinds of letters coming to him submitting all kinds of propositions and suggestions, but it is a rare occurrence for one to voluntarily advertise his or her depravity and contemptibleness over one's own signature. This has just been done, however, by one Jas. T. Early, Esq., Secretary of the St. Louis Independent Political Society, and whose place of business is at 526 South Ewing avenue. The following correspondence explains itself:

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 9, 1891.

Hon. E. A. Noonan, Mayor City of St. Louis, City Hall, City,

HON. SIR:—I beg to inform you that we are a secret independent political society and intend to take a part in the spring election, as we did in the last, and as we have no antagonism to you or your future policy, and as three-fourths of our members are Democrats, we wish to open communication with you in regard to future action, and give you every preference over others. We ask neither "boodle nor beer," nor accept them, but our modus operandi is: Where we assist a candidate in being elected to an office having "political pap" attached, we expect our members to get a just proportion of positions in the distributions. Take this away and the issue between the great political parties is gone.

If agreeable I will call on you at your office at your pleasure and explain in full our membership, etc., and you can rely upon strict confidence, and rest assured that in taking us into your camp you are not accepting any hoodlums or parties who will ask you to "go into your pocket for money." Hoping to hear from you in a few days, we are respectfully yours to command, JAS. T. EARLY,

526 S. Ewing avenue,
Secretary St. Louis Ind. Political Society.

Meets second and fourth Fridays in each month at Euterpe Hall, Jefferson avenue and Walnut street.

The Mayor will not consult with James T. Early, Esq., and when seen this morning by a Star-Sayings reporter, said: "Come up to my office. I wish to show you a letter I received from a knave and a fool, and for whom and his society I have absolute contempt." Mayor Noonan's reply was secured and is reproduced below:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Feb. 9, 1891.

Jas. T. Early, Esq., Secretary St. Louis Independent Political Society, 526 South Ewing avenue, City,

MY DEAR SIR:—To be brief with you, it will not be agreeable to me to have you call at my office. The fact of the matter is, I am not dying to see you or any of your kind. I have an absolute contempt for political secret societies and for men who join them. I think the oath that the pirates of old took to stand by each other in the scuttling of ships, the pilfering of property and the taking of lives were highly respectable compared with the oaths taken for secret political purposes. You say that where you assist a candidate you expect your members to get some of the political pap attached thereto. I will guarantee that there will not be any member of your organization, or any similar organization, get any political pap out of this city while I am mayor. In conclusion, my dear Mr. Early, the greatest surprise of your letter is the printed heading indicating that you are in the grocery business. I had looked for the heading to be "St. Louis Jail," for I immediately determined that some confidence man expert in the art of beguiling the innocent and unwary was addressing me from that quarter. If your dealings with others are as fresh and indicating as much latent deceit as is contained in your letter, I sincerely sympathize with your customers. I rarely answer communications of your kind, as they generally come from the ignorant; but the handwriting and composition of your communication tells the story of some one having taken pains and enough interest in you to have given you a good education, something lost by the giver and something used by you for purposes despicable and detrimental to country and society. Respectfully,

EDWARD A. NOONAN, Mayor.

I tell you there is music in the air the next two years. Masonry has succeeded nicely with its Alliance cat's-paw, so why not secure the political chestnuts in the cities. M. N. BUTLER.

GERMANY AND THE JESUITS.

The rigorous measures which Prince Bismarck formerly took against the religious orders are still being enforced against the Jesuits by General Caprivi. The Pope has just received a communication from Berlin to the effect that the Bundesrath has decided to refuse permission for the Jesuits to return to Germany. There has, however, been an exception made in the case of the Redemptorist Fathers, another religious order more closely than the Jesuits corresponding in constitution and duties with the secular clergy.

The order of the Redemptorists was established under Benedict XIV., and its great object was to work among the very poor and miserable. The order exists in most countries of Europe, and the head of the order, who bears the title of Rector Major, resides in Rome and superintends the general working of the society in all parts of the world.

The Redemptorists are permitted to return by the Bundesrath or Federal Council, a body corresponding with our Senate, which, it may be mentioned, represents the individual states of Germany, while the Reichstag represents the German nation.

The order of Jesuits, since its foundation by Ignatius Loyola three centuries and a half ago, while one of the most learned in the Catholic Church, has brought itself into unfortunate conflict with the government of every country in which it has obtained a footing. It remains unchanged in its objects, and insists upon giving no allegiance to any country or any institution but the power and ascendency of the Vatican alone. Its members are those picked individuals of the priesthood whose asceticism, learning, or diplomacy have marked them out as the sturdiest and craftiest missionaries of the papacy in every country which the Pope selects as the field of their operations. In these countries they are alike independent of the civil authorities and of the Catholic hierarchy, and the conflicts between the heads of the order and the clerical authorities have made them regarded by all educated Catholics in somewhat the light of spies upon the bishops and secular clergy.

It is significant that the most determined enemies of the order of Jesuits have been those governments that have been the ablest defenders of the Catholic religion. In turn the Jesuits have been driven out of Spain, Italy and France; and Bismarck, with that strong common sense which marked his administration, foresaw danger from them at the time of the institution of the empire in 1871 and also expelled them from Germany. Their special function is to preserve what is termed "the seed of the church"—that is to say, they are to promote Catholic journals, confute or contradict published statements, so as to take the sting from history, and spur the secular clergy into increased activity as regards controlling education, etc., whenever they would be more likely to follow their natural predilections and favor the liberties of their native country in preference to the interests and perpetuation of the Pope's political power. The order is essentially a secret one, whose members are bound together individually and to the church by vows of the most rigid and iron clad obedience. They have no country and take no pride in a nationality, and wherever they are, whether in England, Belgium or Germany, their course has been marked by secret, careful and insidious efforts to make the authority of the state subordinate to that of the Catholic Church, and to direct and control the education of the people, conscious that whoever controls the schools, to him the future of the world belongs.

This was the cause of their struggle with Bismarck, and in order to resist the Jesuits and to make the new empire of Germany the sole arbiter of German destinies and citizenship, the Prussian government in 1871 decreed the abolition of the Catholic department of the ministry of education. It followed this with a law transferring to the state the right of supervision of all public and private schools. This alarmed the Jesuits, and in 1872 they prevailed upon the late Pope Pius IX. to refuse to recognize Cardinal Hohenlohe as the German ambassador at the Vatican. Prince Bismarck at once responded to this bold move by expelling the Jesuits from the country bodily, and soon after enacted that all candidates for ecclesiastical offices should receive their education in the public gymnasiums and universities of Germany. This was perhaps an extreme step in another direction. The Reichstag further passed in 1875 a law making civil marriage obligatory, the object of all of which enactments was obviously to make the power of the state not only superior to that of the church, but to make that of the church nothing in the civil economy of the Fatherland. In later years the late Chancellor somewhat relaxed, and in the last years of his administration entered into an alliance with the Pope by which the temporal power of his Holiness was to be restored in return for aid from the Vatican for Bismarck in his struggle with the socialists and to secure the Catholic vote of Germany regarding the septennate act. The decision of the Bundesrath approves of the action of Prince Bismarck in so far as the Jesuits are concerned, and they are still forbidden to interfere with the public schools or reside in any part of Germany.—Inter Ocean.

TRADE UNION TYRANNY.

The foreign nabobs who propose to rule the country, are full of curses and denunciations of the titled nobility of Europe, from whose tyrannical exactions they have fled. But as soon as they arrive here they set up a new style of nobility, and with a bit of ribbon, a linen horse-collar, a cocked hat with a feather in it, or some other sort of "regalia," or royal dress, they pose as knights, commanders, princes, and what not; and when they have thus pulled away at their bootstraps till they have elevated themselves into knights, princes and noblemen, they become as self-important, as impudent, and as tyrannical as any of the old European nobility which they so hate and denounce; and they would suffer an honest workingman to starve rather than give him a helping hand, and would if possible prevent his getting work, unless he was willing to swear allegiance to their gang, pay tribute into their order, and join hands with them in oppressing and tyrannizing over others.

An exchange gives the following which illustrates the tyranny of the present system of things, and this is one instance of thousands:

A Liverpool pavier, being thrown out of employment, and hearing that work was abundant in New York came over. He found that work was plenty, but not for him. He was not a "member of the union," and no contractor dared employ a non-union man. Six months must pass before he could join a "union," and he was without money. He tried for a time to secure bread and lodging by odd jobs, but everywhere the unions met him. At last despairing, he secured an opportunity to work his passage back to Liverpool, but weakened by long privation, he sank and died on the voyage, a victim of the brutality of the unions.

This is a specimen of the liberty enjoyed in cities like New York which are ruled by foreign priests, foreign rumsellers, and members of foreign oath-bound clans and gangs which plot mischief, plan needless strikes, and practice boycotting and assassination when needful to compass their ends. "O my soul, come not thou into their secret, into their assembly, mine honor be not thou united: for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they houghed an ox. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce, and their wrath it was cruel." Gen. 49: 6, 7. (Revised Version.) —The Safeguard.

THE ST. LOUIS SERMON.

THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY REV. B. CARRADINE, D.D.,

IN CENTENARY M. E. CHURCH, ST. LOUIS, JAN. 4, 1891, AGAINST SECRET SOCIETIES AND FRATERNITIES.

[Concluded.]

10. The fraternity hurts the church financially.

If you knew the whole of the matter you would be amazed. I know a church member who gives $30 a year to his fraternity, and nothing to his church. I know another who gives $120 annually to his societies, and one-fourth of this sum to his church. Still another has contributed lately over $500 to his fraternities, and not one-tenth of that sum to his church.

In a large Western city of our country a certain fraternity met, paraded, banqueted and celebrated for three days. In that length of time more money was thus spent in eating, drinking, marching and displaying regalia finery than all the churches of the large city had given for the support and spread of the Gospel for the previous twenty years! And yet over half of the members of that fraternity were church members!

Suppose that instead of all this Christian money being expended for feathers, brass bands and banqueting, that it had found its way in spiritual channels, in all the noble enterprises of the church, and had gone toward the erection of colleges, founding of asylums and homes for the unfortunate and for the establishment of missions in heathen lands, how much better it would have been, and what a thrill of relief would have gone through the land. Don't you begin to see what is the matter with the church to-day? Don't you understand why it is so financially cramped and embarrassed, and why it is unable to carry out its beneficent plans? It is because that

THE MONEY OF GOD'S PEOPLE IS GOING TO THE LODGE.

11. The evil of the chaplaincy.

I regard this point as one of great gravity. I know that there are many excellent men in this office, and that many fraternities try to get proper men to fill the place. But it is as well known that this often fails, and the men who should never thus officiate are in this office.

How often have I seen at funerals a minister of the Gospel, whom God had called and anointed for the sacred work of the ministry, set aside as a piece of useless lumber, while a fraternity monopolized the solemn hour, and a man from the trades came forward, and although not called of God to such work, and oftentimes not even a religious man, would conduct the religious service over the dead.

Do you mean to tell me that this is right in the sight of God?

A gentleman, who is prominent in the fraternities, told me several days since that he has frequently seen a chaplain administering the oath of the order, and while doing so was as full of beer as a vessel with water. Still another told me that during a visit to a large city in Kentucky that he attended a meeting at a certain fraternity one night and witnessed the installation of one of the members into the office of chaplain; and that as the Bible was handed him with the customary remarks, quite a titter ran around the room. On asking the cause of the amusement he was told that the man was the father of two illegitimate children.

The effect of a sacred office thus misused and abused and thus wrongly occupied is to bring the truth, the Bible, the ministry and the ordinances of God into contempt. It produces hardness of heart and is bound to beget irreverence. Let the man who handles holy things be a holy man, and a man called of God and not by man. The Almighty himself has spoken here and demands that they who bear the vessels of the Lord be clean. When a man opens or handles the Word of God for me, I would have him be a man of God and called of God.

A FEARFUL THOUGHT.

The fraternity here rushes where angels fear to tread. They, in installing a man into a chaplaincy, have usurped the solemn, sacred work of the Holy Ghost. It would be well for them to inquire into the cause of the destruction of Dathan and Abiram and their followers. The Bible tells us that God made the earth open and swallow them up, because they took upon themselves a sacred office and work to which God had not called them.

12. The fraternity have captured much of our preaching talent.

This appears in two respects.

I have been informed that nine-tenths of our preachers belong to secret societies. This means of course a muzzled pulpit in every quarter. Not that our preachers are afraid to declare the truth, for they are true men; but after joining a fraternity friendships are formed, kindly relations established, and they are slow to speak of the evils they see. God only knows the pain it has given me to speak as I have.

I begin to see why Paul said to us: "not to be entangled with the affairs of this life." I don't believe a preacher ought to be entangled with anything but the Gospel. I don't believe that we ought to be connected with political parties or with secret fraternities. As servants of Christ, as ambassadors of God, we ought to deliver our message to men separate from all entanglements and unbiased by all associations.

GOD, THE PREACHER, AND THE LODGE.

The fraternities have captured our preachers in another way. Some of our best talent is to-day in the offices of these societies as clerks and secretaries. I believe that when God calls a man to preach the Gospel he never proposed that he should be a salaried officer in an institution of man's organization. And although they may say they still preach here and there as occasion offers, yet it is not the preaching that God contemplated when he called them. God wants a man to swing loose, free from all restrictions and limitations, and give the whole life and all the energy and time to the heaven-appointed work. This was the way that Christ preached and that the disciples labored, and it is the way for the man called of God to preach to-day. I tell you if all men who have been thus called would so devote themselves ardently to the one work of saving souls, they would soon take on a new appearance, and we would take a great leap toward the millennium.

SUBSTITUTE FOR THE CHURCH.

13. The fraternity is used by many as a

How often have I heard, how many times have you heard men say about Masonry that it was as good as the church; that they wanted no other church; but you have got to remember that Jesus Christ did not found it, nor did he join it, nor did he endorse it. Christ founded the church and told us to come unto her. When men found an institution and tell us that it is as good as the church I think those men are in danger. I would not stay a moment in an institution if its teaching and spirit would produce a feeling of that kind among its members.

Nothing has so powerfully convinced me of the dangerous power of these fraternities and their actual rivalship of the church as the recently uttered threat of some church members, that they would quit the church if I said aught against the fraternity.

What a state of mind and things does this reveal. These men and women will cease to listen to a man called of God to preach, and will dissolve their connection with a Divine institution if a man should open his lips in warning and rebuke against a human institution! Certainly these societies have encroached upon the feelings and judgments of men, to thus plant them in antagonism to the servants and church of the Son of God.

I once read of a Roman emperor appealing to his general for the legions he had scattered and lost through a disastrous campaign. "Varus, Varus, where are my legions?" So I look over these fraternities and say, give back to us the men you have taken from us. Give us back the talents and genius and grand energies and devoted labors. Give them back as they once were, and we will march down upon the world's want and sin and take it speedily for our God.

THE SABBATH-BREAKING LODGE.

14. Many of these fraternities are striking at the sanctity of the Sabbath.

I do not say this of the Masonic fraternity, nor of several orders I could mention in this place. But I speak of a vast number of fraternities, benevolent and otherwise, that fill the land to-day. In some cities I could name, much of the Sabbath breaking is done by societies and fraternities—by parades, by processions, by picnics and excursions. God's holy day is made to look like a holiday. How my heart has been pained as I have seen them on the Sabbath with fluttering flags and musical instruments, accompanied by the usual street crowd of men and boys, pushing their way to the point of destination. Many a night I have been kept awake until three or four o'clock on Sunday morning, by the sounds of music and dancing that flowed from one of these fraternity halls near my home. Banquets, suppers and picnics begun on late Saturday hours and prolonged into the Sabbath, are facts well known.

Here in St. Louis, and only last summer, one fraternity picnicked by or near a large brewery on Saturday afternoon, and the last of them was taken from the garden by city officials at six o'clock Sunday morning. An officer in the fraternity told me this with his own lips. Another society the same summer went out on the Sabbath and made a contract for so many kegs of beer, the understanding being that for all kegs used over the number of twenty, a discount of one dollar per keg should be allowed. This drinking was done on the Sabbath, and done publicly in the face of a Christian community and Sabbath laws!

In another city it is a fact well known, that the City Council was resisted by one of these orders, in their effort against Sabbath desecration. The society, it will be remembered, carried the case against the council into the courts of law.

It is for you to say after this, whether these fraternities strike at the sanctity of the Lord's day or not.

15. This active membership in these fraternities will certainly harm the spirituality of a Christian.

WHOM DO YOU FIND COMPRISING THESE FRATERNITIES?

I grant you many excellent men. My best friends and yours are there. But besides these there is a host of men who are unbelievers and haters of God and the Bible.

With these men you are thrown as companions and friends. They create an atmosphere, form an influence. You breathe this atmosphere and feel the influence. The effect will be to lower the love of your religious life.

Why does the Bible say, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Why does God say: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly," and why does he say, "Come out from among them, O my people."

All this is simply the recognition of the fact that the religious life and character is affected by its associations, and that there is danger here, and great danger for the people of God.

16. In all of the fraternities and in all the degrees of Masonry under the Knights Templar, the name of Jesus Christ is omitted.

THIS TO MY MIND IS THE GRAVEST FACT OF ALL.

The Saviour's name is not known in them.

If you doubt me get hold of the rituals and read and seek in vain. Listen to the public prayers. Go to the funeral services and listen for the name of Jesus Christ. You will listen in vain.

My friends, I don't care to be connected with any order on earth that fails to directly recognize the Son of God.

Christ says: "He that is ashamed of me, of him will I be ashamed." "He that denies me before men, him will I deny." This applies to an individual and to an institution as well.

I cannot belong to a society or fraternity that is ashamed of my Lord, or that to please men will leave out his blessed name; therefore have I dissolved my connection with all fraternities forever. With nothing but the kindest personal feelings to its members, with only kindly remembrances of individuals, yet am I done with the system itself.

THERE IS A BETTER WAY.

17. There is no absolute necessity for these societies.

If you examine the social feature, history proves it is not the best. The best development of the social nature is not obtained by the separation of the sexes, but by their being drawn together. Club life is the confirmation of this statement.

As for the benevolent feature, I say that while good has been done, I verily believe that if God's people would take the contributions and turn them into the channels marked out by the Bible and church, that greater good would be done at less expense and with greater glory to Christ.

As for the insurance feature, what can I say against it? I say nothing against it. Men have a right to have such corporations; but this I can say, that you can improve on it. Instead of giving your money from month to month for the keeping up of your insurance policies, you can put your money into a building association, get shares there, and then by and by in a few years have a house over the heads of your wife and children. Don't have your wife sitting there working and waiting for you to die in order to get a house. It is a grizzly thing to look at—it is a ghostly thing to contemplate—a woman waiting and wondering when you are going to die in order to get a house. Build your house now for her and the children. If you go on in these insurance companies you are paying out month by month, and year by year, and if you fail in a payment you know you are gone, and all that you have expended is lost. You are taking a great hazard in such a case.

Put your money down in things that are material, tangible, palpable, and that will remain permanent. Invest in these shares of building associations, and you will have a house over your head to cover you.

I cannot see the absolute necessity of these orders now. We have got along without them for ages and ages, and I believe we can get along without them for ages and ages to come. Don't forget that when Christ established an institution that is to take this world, he didn't found a secret fraternity, but a church that is open as the heavens in its sacraments, ordinances, teachings and meetings.

IN CONCLUSION,

let me say that what I have spoken to-day I have spoken in love. Policy would have dictated silence, but I love Truth better than policy and your good more than my ease and reputation.

Let me exhort you to stand by your home and that little woman there whom you call your wife. You haven't got a better friend on earth than that wife of yours. She left everything to follow you in life. She gave up father and mother and a comfortable home. You have not been to her what you should have been and what you promised when she stood as a bride by your side and looked up in her helplessness to you. The light you notice is going out of her eye, the spring from her step, and she is getting prematurely old. Go back to her and spend the evenings with her as you used to do. Pay her the old-time attentions, and before a week the light will begin to come back to her eye, the color steal into her cheek, she will fasten a bit of ribbon in her hair or a knot of flowers and be like her old-time self.

The children all love you. There is no other group on earth that loves you like the family group. When sickness and trouble come, and you stagger home, you find it out. What do those men down the street with whom you talk and drink so much—what do they care for you? So look to your family. Cultivate them.

As I said to you two Sabbaths ago, when your wife is dead you will remember the loneliness of her life, produced by your attendance night after night upon these fraternities. When that little boy of yours is dead, and sleeps in his grave on the hillside, they will tell you then how much he missed you in the evenings you were gone, and how he talked about you and waited, hoping you would return before he fell asleep.

How bitterly you will feel all this when the time comes. I once saw a man whose wife had died. He did not awaken to her value until then. His heart was torn. He had not found out that he had an angel for a wife; he did not know it until he heard the rush of her wings through the blue space to the throne of God, and he then cried, "My God, she is gone!" Oh, brother, come back to her, come back and spend the evenings at home; what a time you can have for reading, what sweet music you can have, what romps with the children, what a sweet domestic scene I have before me now. And if there is any evening that the house of God calls you out, come and bring them all with you. How different this is from the fraternities. You cannot take them with you there. Go rather to the place where you can hear words of grace from the pulpit; go where the soul is fed; go and assemble with God's people and not with worldly people, and go where you will be filled for a higher, nobler and eternal life.

Stand by the church rather than any fraternity on the earth. Stand by the church, for it is of God. It cost the precious blood of your Saviour. It is the one institution that is going to survive the flames of the last day. When the fire burns around the whole world, and the flames leap from the heart of the earth to the tops of the mountains and swallow up all things in a final destruction—then I notice that every earthly institution shall sink into the common ruin with no hope of resurrection, fraternities and earthly orders shall go down forever, but the church, the church of our Lord, purified and redeemed, shall rise above the flames, and far above the stars and be landed in the presence of our God forever. Stand by the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. He gave his own heart's blood for you, now do you stand by him. You will want him to be with you in the dying hour. You will want him to be your friend when the final day of judgment comes. Make him your friend now and say from to-day, My Lord, I am for you out and out, and for all time to come, forever and forever.

LODGE AND TEMPERANCE.

Rev. George Pegler, in his autobiography, on page 402, describes the "Washingtonian Movement" and makes these remarks: "But when the good Lord stirs up the people to some effective measures to promote some efficient enterprise for his glory, the devil is sure to put his club-foot in and attempt to counteract any good that might actually accrue. It is often said in England that when a church is erected Satan always manages to influence some one to start a gin-shop near by. So it was in this case. By the time the Washingtonian Society had fairly started on its career of benevolence and usefulness, and was becoming the most popular enterprise of the day in the cause of temperance, doing more good than all others, the 'Sons of Temperance' organized as a secret benevolent society, and was soon followed by others of a similar character, who took the whole work out of the hands of many who could not conscientiously enter their secret conclave even for a good purpose. Some of us who had been accustomed to beard the lion in his den and openly avow our sentiments, and had no wish or intention to conceal the weapon of our warfare from public scrutiny, objected to the new mode of tactics and were shut out from their sympathy. It soon became evident that a man who objected to unite with a secret society was suspected as to his loyalty to the temperance cause and could not command the approval or co-operation of secret society men in his efforts to promote the cause of temperance."

General Cutcheon, in some remarks on social drinking in Washington, was led to tell the story of an army experience of his with whisky. It was in the trenches before Petersburg. As colonel of the regiment he had prohibited the sale of liquor save on a doctor's order, and in that case prohibition prohibited. The division commander, however, issued orders that a ration of whisky should be served to each man in the trenches, and the liquor for the 20th Michigan was brought in two great iron kettles. As the men clustered around with their tin cups some one cried out: "Boys, if I'm going to be shot to-day I want to die sober." The cry was taken up by the regiment. The kettles were seized by willing hands and the whisky was poured on the ground. Fifty-two out of one hundred and ten of the brave Michigan boys of the 20th were shot that day, and every one who died, died sober.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Sunday question—Rev. John Elliot—A new Maine industry—A society to investigate Spiritualism—Why revivals fail in permanent results—The lodges and the churches.

Why is it that religion is popularly supposed to monopolize all the cant there is in the world? The fact is that there is more of real, unmitigated cant employed in trying to bolster up evil than most people are aware of. Take for instance the phrase, so constantly repeated when ever any objection is made to the Sunday newspaper, that "it has come to stay;" as if this answered every argument. The same might be said of "original sin." What single evil or abuse that has cursed the world since the fall would ever have been put down had reformers proceeded on this principle? At the Sabbath Convention lately held in Park Street Church, Rev. Dr. Dunn well said that if Christian ministers and Christian people would cease to take the Sunday newspapers it might be put down in three months. There is too little agitation of the subject. Ministers seldom handle it in their sermons, and thus the Sunday newspaper has a practically uncontested field. It was the first bar to be let down in the way of introducing the Continental Sunday, and it should be the first bar put up if we want to keep that utterly un-American institution from gaining a foothold in our midst, as it already has to some extent. It is not pleasant to hear that "the foreign fashion of Sunday afternoon musicales and receptions is obtaining more and more in Boston." Self-respecting New Englanders can see no reason why Europe should set the fashion for them, but a great many reasons why they should set the fashions for themselves.

The esteem in which New England holds the name of her first home missionary, Rev. John Elliot, was evinced at an auction sale the other day, where a letter which he wrote in 1673 sold for $500. It may seem strange that at the same sale one of Rev. Jonathan Edwards should bring only $11.50; but the latter was a theologian, and as such will always be regarded in the popular mind. A translation of the Bible in a language no living man can read is the only memorial that exists to-day of John Elliot's work; yet around his life gathers all the early "romance of missions," and though not a single authentic portrait of him exists he is one of the most vivid personalities in New England's colonial history. Could there be a more eloquent commentary on Paul's sublime words, "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away."

Maine, our Prohibition State, of which we have all just reason to be proud, grows something besides pine trees—and that is wild roses. I notice that there is a Portland firm which makes a specialty of "wild rose pot-pourri," that it manufactures for the foreign trade, chiefly from the wild roses of that State. The perfume is sold not only in England but in Spain and Portugal. Doesn't it seem a little odd to think of any such dainty export from prosaic New England to "the land of the olive and vine?"

Boston would not be Boston if she was not always starting a new society. The latest is one to investigate spiritualism, led by some of her principal clergymen, such as Rev. E. E. Hale, and including Mary A. Livermore and the editor of the Arena. The prospectus asks: "Is it not time for a few truth-loving people, approaching the subject in a serious frame of mind, to investigate it by purely scientific methods? Is it not for the best interests of humanity that this matter should be settled if possible once for all?" The attempt has been made before and yet it is not settled. While a great deal that goes by this name is the rankest imposture, there still remains a class of spiritualistic phenomena that baffle all investigation. What of the noises in the Epworth parsonage? The Wesleys, who certainly were far enough from being a superstitious family, always ascribed them to the agency of evil spirits; and no better answer can be given to many unexplained mysteries of later times. Human astuteness must approach this borderland of the unseen under great disadvantage. I am reminded of a good man, long since passed to his rest, who was urged to be present at a seance. Spiritualism was comparatively a new thing then. He consented, but made such a fervent prayer at the opening that, if I remember aright, it disconcerted the "spirits," and broke up the performance. If this society will in like manner put on the armor of All-Prayer, when it goes on its investigating tours into spookdom, there is no question but that it will do the world a benefit.

Joseph Cook and Moody in Boston at the same time give one a chance to compare the two—that is if they can be compared. That surely was no hap-hazard arrangement that made these two remarkable men contemporaries at a time when materialistic views so abound on every hand. Moody's meetings have been wonderful and marked by an almost pentecostal power, but will they raise again the standard of holy living in our churches which has been so sadly lowered? This is the question. Much has been said about the lack of permanent results in the work of Mr. Moody and other evangelists; but are they to blame because they cannot do the work of evangelists and that of pastors and churches at the same time? As a Christian brother suggests on this point, they labor earnestly in a certain place. The inquiry-room is crowded every night, and many converts are made; but the task of nourishing these young converts—for young most of them are—must necessarily fall on the church, which in too many cases treats them like a nurseryman who should set out an orchard of young trees and then leave them unwatered and unpruned to live or die as the case may be. A church which does not herself practice the duty of separation from the world is a very poor foster nurse to young Christians.

In this connection a statement made in a letter just received from a W. C. T. U. president, herself a granger and evidently sincere, becomes of painful interest. She thus writes of the grange, from a little Rhode Island village where they have two church societies: "Many church members here belong to the order, and they would every one assure you that the moral tone of the grange is higher than that of the churches." Such a statement whether true or untrue ought to arouse the slumbering Christians of New England, for it is only a fair specimen of the way in which the lodge has lowered the spirituality of our country churches, and now taunts them with the cry, "Art thou also become as one of us?"

REFORM NEWS.

MISSIONARY RIDGE.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Arriving at Chattanooga on Saturday the 31st ult. a little late, I called on Rev. Mr. Baker, pastor of a Presbyterian mission church. He invited me to preach for him the next day, which I did, and assisted in the Sabbath-school.

Chattanooga is a notable city on account of its proximity to two historic places, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. The last extends over the State line some distance south into Georgia. And I remember reading in the Missionary Herald, when a boy, of the imprisonment of two ordained ministers in the Georgia penitentiary, for the crime of preaching the Gospel and opening schools among the Indians on that ridge. The State was determined to drive them out, as they wanted the land; and they accused the Indians of sheltering runaway slaves. The missionaries, they said, emboldened the Indians to contend for their rights, and to refuse to leave their homes and the graves of their fathers at the dictation of the Georgia land thieves. The U. S. Government finally interposed, and made a treaty with the Indians and removed them to what has since been called the Indian Territory. And there the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees and Creeks found a refuge from the tyranny of the Georgia slave-holders; and the missionaries were liberated at length from their unjust confinement. And this gave name to the ridge. And when the Georgia legislature refused to pay over the $8,000 to Atlanta University, on account of a mean race prejudice, I could but note how the present generation follows in the footsteps of its predecessors.

I spent a few hours on Lookout Mountain, rendered famous by Gen. Hooker's battle among the clouds, and was rather surprised to find a cyclorama of it on exhibition in the city at this time. The population of Chattanooga, however, is a good deal mixed; and they have a regular meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic every week, I believe. It was reported, also, that some capitalists had just purchased the property on the top of the mountain, to develop an immense popular resort.

While in Chatanooga I was one evening at the Congregational church, Rev. J. E. Smith, pastor, and took part in the revival services being held there. I also visited the Normal School on Gilmer street, of which Prof. Henry is president. It has seven grades and about 600 scholars. The school building is large and well furnished but there is no library. I addressed some of the higher classes and distributed a number of reform tracts. I also looked in upon a large public school on Montgomery avenue. Prof. Singleton is the principal, and he reports 600 scholars in five grades. These schools are supported by the city, and are doing a great work for the rising generation of Freedmen. There is an institution called the U. S. Grant University, sustained by the M. E. church, North. It is divided, and one part is located at Athens and the other part is here in Chattanooga. Race prejudice, it is said, was the cause of the division, and the managers here refused to make any adequate provision for the education of the colored people. I called at the university one day and looked into the library. It was furnished with plenty of boxes piled up; but no books were on the shelves. The treasurer told me that Vice-president Atkinson, who is at the head of this part of the university, was absent from home.

The "Steele Home," a private refuge for friendless orphans, is in the eastern part of the city. Mrs. A. S. Steele has about a hundred of these needy children who are clothed and fed and taught; and none are rejected on account of color. It is in reality now sustained as a faith charity. Since she and her daughter have spent all they had in building and furnishing the home, help has come from a multitude of Christian friends in distant parts of the land. I called one day and looked in upon the two schoolrooms, and said a few words of encouragement to the teachers and children. I also arranged to send Mrs. Steele two or three anti-secrecy volumes for her library.

S. F. PORTER.

SALVATION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

CUSTER CITY, Pa., Feb. 13, 1891.

On Saturday, 7th of February, Rev. C. F. Hawley, Western Agent N. C. A., after wading four miles through slush and rain, presented himself at the house of the writer. Though taken by surprise we all adapted ourselves to the circumstances. My family and I felt ourselves honored by the presence of a real, live anti-secret worker and lecturer, the first seen in these parts for nineteen years; then J. R. Baird lectured in the court house at Smethport for three nights.

Notwithstanding the suddenness of Bro. Hawley's appearance, and the necessary shortness of his stay, we were enabled by God's help to obtain a hall in the city of Bradford. On Monday afternoon and Tuesday evening Bro. H. delivered truth-telling, heart-searching, mind-convincing, Gospel lectures. On Monday a German lady, a fearless license opposer, a worker in the Bradford W. C. T. U., told the audience that she was of strong Masonic connection,—her father a 32° Mason, her brothers high (?) Masons, her sisters married into Masonic families. Through her father's influence she was furnished with Masonic recommendations to aid her in her battle of life, which papers had been of great pecuniary advantage to her; but she renounced them all and put the papers into the stove, declaring her intention to leave the lodges she belonged to, Rebeccas, etc. We also hope the A. M. E. preacher is convinced so he will not offer himself to the Odd-fellows.

The "Antis" are glad and feel thankful to God that Bro. Hawley came to McKean Co., and that a hall was obtained for him to present his lectures in, in this lodge-ridden Bradford, where the lodges number four to one church. O! for more light in this modern Sodom!

We look upon Bro. Hawley as a Christian gentleman, not only in appearance, but in his intercourse and lectures. Too many of us look on anti-lecturers as we would look upon John L. Sullivan: we expect they are unreasonable bruisers, working with grit and hate. While Bro. H. makes strong points, love and kindness mark his every utterance.

Brethren, call on Bro. Hawley; have him speak for you. You who are treasurers of the Lord's bounty, give, oh, give to the N. C. A. treasury. God says, "My people perish for want of knowledge." For Christ's sake, for soul's sake "withhold not more than is meet, for it tendeth to poverty."

J. C. YOUNG.

THEY BLESS THOSE WHOM THE LORD ABHORS.

BOSTON, Feb. 18, 1891.

The Boston Herald of January 19th reports in brief the funeral services of the late Ebenezer Hodge. He died, it appears, in the full faith of Masonry; and if the burial ritual is founded in fact, he passed to the "Grand Lodge above." Various Masonic bodies, of which the deceased was a member, were in attendance; and the mortal remains were guarded by ten valiant "Knights," six of them crossing swords above the bier. The names of Drs. Hamilton and Bates appear in the list of speakers with "Generalissimo" E. T. Pigeon and "Prelate" Rev. Geo. M. Bodge, who directed the burial services.

It seems sad indeed to see such ministers as Drs. Hamilton and Bates giving their influence in support of a system that has been proven over and over again to be pagan in its origin, pantheistic in its creed, and grossly immoral in its ceremonies. I do not know that either of these gentlemen have taken the fifth "libation of pure wine" from a human skull, but as they have been "entered, passed and raised" it would be a reflection upon their Masonic intelligence to suppose that they do not know that Christ has no place in the religious services authorized or theology taught by the lodge. The "pure theism" of Masonic worship is not the Judaism of a neglected or rejected Christ; but, as asserted by Mackey and others, it is absolutely pagan sun-worship revived, and to countenance such a system is to aid and abet" the enemy of all rightcousness" in his works of destruction.

It must have been without due reflection, and impelled by sympathy for the bereaved, rather than the leadings of the Spirit that these ministers gave their presence and voices to popularize an order, which, by denying Christ and casting him out of his own Word, is striving to close the only "Door" through which a lost soul may return to his Father's house. I hear them pleading earnestly and eloquently with lost men to accept Christ as their only and all-sufficient Saviour; why then should they lead them by example, which is often stronger than precept, to seek shelter and companionship in an order which officially rejects the name and offices of the "one Mediator between God and man."

In one instance at least both these ministers have been referred to in justification of secret orders by a man who had confessedly searched the secret vault for the "ark of the covenant" and drank the five libations of the Knight Templar. Can any minister of Christ afford to lend his influence in support of such a system? Dare he thus mingle the sacred Word and services of God with the glittering but hollow forms of paganism? And how will he justify his "God-speed" to the enemies of our Lord, when he stands face to face with them in the judgment? Or what mantle of charity will be broad enough in that day to shelter those watchmen who see the wolf coming and fail to give warning? May the blessed Holy Spirit open the eyes of our understanding, and give us a clear vision of the Word and will of God and grace to walk in it.

J. P. STODDARD.

THIRTY-TWO NAMES AND A BLESSING.

SEYBERT, Mo.

DEAR EDITOR:—A short time since, a neighbor said to me (and he is no "anti" either), that two of our townsmen, he feared, were in great danger of being caught in the meshes of Freemasonry; and gave their names. Upon hearing this, I resolved at once to baffle the lodge if possible. Accordingly I sent to you for literature; and am happy to inform you that one of these men is so far rescued that I pronounce him out of all danger, and he has subscribed for the Cynosure. As to the other, poor fellow! the lodge has him in tow, sure enough. "The good man argument" is his strong hold. He looks upon it as impossible that Freemasonry and kindred orders are in character what their opposers represent them, and yet so many good men are found within their ranks. I devoutly prayed as I left him that a merciful God would assist him on his way to the lodge and rescue him in his downward course.

Now I was in the field once more, I resolved before returning to my wonted rest that I would try and see what I could do for the circulation of the Cynosure upon the three months trial plan. The result is, I herewith transmit to you, with the pay for the same, a club of thirty new names, which added to the two recently sent you, makes thirty-two new readers of that invaluable reform paper, to say nothing of the multitude that will be indirectly reached by the means. I wish to say also that were it not for physical infirmity, I could and would do much more in the reform field of labor than I do. But since the widow's mite called forth a special blessing, I'll not despair; but from time to time try and do what little I can, hoping the good Lord will in like manner bless the humble effort. Yours for the triumph of truth and righteousness even to the end,

J. W. THOMPSON.

THAT DEBATE.

LODGE FEATHERS FLY IN SALTSBURG, PA.

CLARKSBURG, Pa., Feb. 21, 1891

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The past week has been eventful. The discussion with Rev. Getty, pastor the Universalists church, Saltsburg, awakened much inquiry. What do the secret societies teach? are their teachings in accord with Christianity? Are questions which interest thinking people. I was not surprised, therefore, to find the Town Hall crowded with those who wished to hear our discussion.

Rev. Getty, having been an Odd-fellow for twenty-three years, and thoroughly conversant with lodge teachings, proved an able advocate of that system. In fact, we had in him a practical example of what the lodge could do for a man. Educated for a Presbyterian minister, an elder in the Presbyterian church for years, he has been led by degrees into what he considers a broad view, i. e., that all the punishment to be had for sin is received here, and that all are made happy hereafter. He dwelt much on the fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man. "All men were created of one blood," etc. He spoke of these as being among the eternal principles of truth on which the lodge was founded. In the lodge worship they knew no Jew or Gentile, no Methodist or Presbyterian; they were just a great, whole-souled band of brothers, disseminating friendship, love and truth. As he waxed warmer in the discussion he commenced a tirade of flings at the church, which were much applauded by his sympathizers. The church had cared for spiritual wants but neglected temporal.

"Why," said he, "if we can make better men in secret societies than in the church what objection can you make?" In short, like a blind man clinging to a frail raft in mid-ocean with a life boat near, he was clinging to these frail delusions of the devil, only to perish on the rocks of God's eternal truth, when, had he sight, life could be secured. The absurdity of talking of a universal brotherhood of an institution which rejects at least seven-tenths of the race from membership, is so manifest that even a Universalist preacher should see. I read, from the constitution of the very lodge to which my opponent belonged, the requirement for memberspip. They only received free white males, 21 years of age, who were free from infirmity and disease, and those only under certain conditions. Talk about making a universal brotherhood out of a few strong, white males

ANOTHER RENUNCIATION.

WILBUR, Oregon.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The work represented by your paper and its friends has been much promoted here of late. One of the strongest of the secret orders has been much alarmed by the outspoken words of a Freemason who has come out from among them, and has declared in favor of the anti-secret movement to warn the young and rising generation that there is no efficiency in the ceremonies of the Freemason lodge to save the soul. This honest minister is outspoken because he has already been admonished that if he persists in his course he will be considered an outlaw and his name will go round the world as such. His answer was, Let the name go the world around, that he had denounced Freemasonry as a false religion. Thank God for outspoken men against idolatry, in which Masonry stands first, as governed by the devil. I know whereof I speak. My opposition to the lodge has cost me thousands of dollars, but by the grace of God I mean to run the whole race that is set before me in the Christian course. I have seen much and learned much of the deception of men, but never saw the equal of Freemasonry. But the day is near at hand when the serpent's coil will be broken. Many in that day will say, I never knew anything about these oaths that bound men hand and foot. Mr. Ronayne is right in his view about exposing the horrible butchering oaths taken by intelligent men. Let us take courage and press these idolatries to their hiding places and throw a torch-light into these dens, and many will flee from them like rats from a sinking ship. F. R. HILL.

A GOOD WORK BEGUN IN ARIZONA.

PHŒNIX, Arizona.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A short time since the Good Templars established the first reading-room in the Territory. I, of course, supposed it would be a place impartially conducted, and took in some choice Christian papers, but in a few hours they were not to be found. I also left the Cynosure, which was treated in like manner. I then and there said, God being my helper, I would establish a reading-room where truth should have an equal chance with error.

Our efforts here are being wonderfully blessed of God. Secret societies here are just beginning to thrive, and now is our time to supersede them, which we hope to do by God's truth and grace. Oh, who will help us by sending the Anti-masonic Library at once, with good tracts and papers. Many persons have just the books that are needed, stored away in their libraries, virtually of no use to God or humanity. As to my own library, the books have always been going on their mission nearly as soon as obtained. I will pledge myself to see that all such presents be cared for in such a way as to be of perpetual benefit. This being the capital of the Territory, and surrounded with large mining districts, eternity alone will reveal what has been the benefit of such a work. Who will help us to garner in the sheaves of good from the fields of sin? We wish to open the work immediately.

Will not every one who reads this notice and request, ask themselves and God, what they can and should do for this cause? Do not say I can spare such a book, but some one else will send it. I will make good use of it to establish more such enterprises, for they are needed in this country. Sincerely yours, H. W. FOWLER.

HOW CAN I HOLD MY PEACE?

CRANDON, Wis.

BRO. REFORMERS:—On reading the last Cynosure I find myself filled with an inspiration to mention to God's true workers a few of the many thoughts which give my soul peace, yes, great peace!

1. I never can hear Bro. Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, sing, speak, or read his articles, as in the last Cynosure, without feeling full and ready for business. I pray Almighty God he may be spared to stand at the head of "Gideon's Band" at the World's Fair in 1893, both to sing and blow the trumpet. Amen!

2. I now have hopes that the great Columbian Exposition will be closed on God's holy day. Bro. W. F. Crafts has named in this same paper the way for us to obtain this victory over the devil, rum and the powers of hell in general. It is a plain, direct route to complete victory. Let us pour at least 1,000 personal letters upon our Senators per month, if not per day, for the next two years; red-hot letters dictated by God himself. Let each letter be personal, as short as possible with all needed truth inclosed, and the thing is done. My letter will reach Washington next week.

3. A word of advice to the builders of the new political party. My dear friends: I infer from the nature and appearance of your ship, as far as you have gone, that you expect to leave out three planks, and still complete the vessel. I now notify you as one having authority so to do, that you can complete your ship and move off to sea, and for a time you may seem to be safe and feel secure; but if you fail to put in these important planks, I now will make known to you, you are bound to go under,—no escape! She will spring a leak, founder on the rocks, or sink into some whirlpool; for go down she must, without these God-ordained planks to the ship of state. First plank will be to look to the God of this nation for help in all things; Second, National prohibition of the infernal strong drink business; Third, Prohibition of the secret combinations of America.

If we are to build a ship to ride the stormy seas of America, let us build with that material the living God has given us orders to use. Then like Noah's ship of state, we will be taken safely through all the storms and floods, thank God!

Yours for the safety of the nation,
RUFUS SMITH.

FAMISHING IDOLS.

IRON HILLS, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The struggle devoted Christians have undertaken in this day in many branches of reform, in battling against secret societies, laboring for the protection of the Bible and its use in public schools, issuing tracts against the tyranny of papal power, sending also forth thousands of missionaries into all heathen lands, is graphically portrayed in one verse of the prophecy of Zephaniah 2: 14, in the new version, to-wit: "And herds shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the pelican and the porcupine shall lodge in the chapiters thereof: their voice shall sing in the windows: desolation shall be in the thresholds: for he hath laid low the cedar work."

Some faithful, earnest workers in God's vineyard may be found in almost every clime or nation on the globe at the present time, or, as the prophet said, "And herds," or companies shall find lodgements, in the midst of the heathen cities or nations. All manner of nature's representatives, the pelican as well as the porcupine visit the shrines and chapels of worship; their songs shall resound in its windows or entrances leading into the same.

Those symbolical names appear to be given as the most appropriate illumination of the prophet's language. Christian missionaries are going forth like the pelican, fully supplied with the Gospel message to proclaim, teach and to supply humanity with the water of life with its spiritual power.

Their visits into the strongholds of Satan and darkness lays bare the cedar work of idolatry; expose its vanities and worthless worship; but the enemy acts on the principle of the porcupine: they roll themselves into a ball for self-defense when attacked, and present their thorns for revenge and resentment. The Gospel message makes a commotion, agitation and a commingling sound of truth and error wherever its agents meet face to face. Zephaniah gave the battle in as forcible language as could be uttered in 2: 11 as follows: "The Lord will be terrible unto them: for he will famish all the gods of the earth; and man shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the nations."

These words reach beyond the enemies which surrounded the Jews in the prophet's day. The judgments spoken of in the second chapter against the Philistines, west of Jerusalem, Moab and Ammon east and southeast, and Assyria north and northeast of the city, appear as figurative language of the last days and the final judgment itself. Heavenly messengers are gone forth to gather in the sheaves; are gone out to give warning of God's wrath against the ungodly, saying what the prophet said they do in the first three verses of the second chapter, to-wit: "Gather yourselves together, yea, gather together O nation that hath no shame, before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you. Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment. Seek righteousness, seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." B. EISENTRAUT.

PITH AND POINT.

WOULD NOT TOLERATE THEM.

My opinion in regard to oath-bound secret societies, is this: I believe the oaths and obligations of the secret orders, from Masonry down to the "little sparking party" called the I. O. G. T., are un-American, un-Christian, and should not be tolerated by the government nor permitted in any Christian church. I believe it is as possible for a person to live in a deep well filled with foul air, as for a Christian to live in the dark caverns of oath-bound secret societies.—S. C. KRETSINGER, Leaf River, Ill.

THE COLORED PASTORS HAVE A FRIEND.

I tell people the Cynosure is one of the best of papers. I do wish every family would take it,—there is so much they need to know that no one else prints. I have had about $3.50 I've been saving this long time, trying to add more to it so as to have a hit at that "bird," but suppose I have lost my chance now. But soon as I can I will send it for the "colored ministers'" fund, so you can send to two of them at least. I have not lost my interest in cause of the N. C. A. It is constantly on my mind how I can advance the cause of truth and right.—MRS. P. B. SHAW, Sandstone, Mich.

THE LECTURE WORK NEEDS REVIVING.

By all means we ought to have a good lecturer here in Sioux Falls, but I cannot see how we can come to it as the ministers seem not to care much. The devil has a stronghold here through the lodges upon the church.—L. H. NOREM, Sioux Falls, S. D.

IT IS THE MOST GRIEVOUS.

In thinking over the multitude of evils that this earth is cursed with, it seems to me that the oath-bound secret societies are the worst that we have to contend with, especially when we see professed Christian ministers degrading themselves and their profession by submitting to heathenish and unholy obligations and penalties which an Indian would blush to go through with. Isaiah 52: 11, says: "Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence; touch no unclean thing: go ye out of the midst of her: be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." In 2 Chronicles 20: it says: "Jehoshaphat returned to his house in peace, and Jehu, the seer, went out to meet him and said to him, 'Shouldst thou help the ungodly and love them that hate the Lord, therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.'" Jehoshaphat had been helping the wicked Ahab, king of Israel.—A. G. MANSFIELD, Albion, Neb.

20,000 MISSIONARIES WANTED.

As regards the Christian Conference, I consider it all right, and I would like to attend, but my health forbids. My opinion is, the sooner we call a convention and unfurl the American flag the better. If we fail to do this, we, as a nation, will be tied up hand and foot by the secret fraternities. Every reader of the Cynosure should become a missionary and canvass for the paper. We want men that have a back-bone in this cause. I believe if we undertake this cause as we should, trusting in God, one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight.—JOHN LEEPER, Seneeaville, O.

LITERATURE.

MARION GRAHAM, or Higher than Happiness. By Meta Lander, author of the Broken Bud, Light on the Dark River, The Tobacco Problem, etc.

This book well illustrates the complexity of 19th century American life, literature and society. Fact and fiction, romance and religion, poetry and theology, German skepticism and Andover "new departure" speculations, as contrasted with the earlier hyper-Calvinism of New England preachers, are in this volume woven into a continuous story, the professed object of all which is to show that blessedness is superior to happiness.

Natural gifts of a high order, superior opportunities for wide observation and careful culture, together with some soul-piercing sorrows, have been copiously drawn upon in the production of these four hundred and eighty pages. Were such books profitable reading, one might rejoice in their publication. But no one, who did not prize blessedness above happiness before seeing this work, would be likely to attain that wisdom by reading it through.

Perhaps nothing would seem to justify a Christian in reading, criticising, or publishing a review of such literature, but the hope that some may be saved from squandering precious time upon the reading and writing of fiction. Truth is alone worth our attention and study, and truth is worthy of all our energies. WM. F. DAVIS.
Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

The Missionary Review for March is earliest on our table, and with the most important of news. Since the death of Dr. Sherwood, Rev. Drs. A. J. Gordon of Boston and J. T. Gracey of Buffalo, have been secured as associate editors. This fact is assurance of the success of the magazine so far as editors can make it. The leading editorial on "The Regions Beyond" by Dr. Pierson, is a fervent and eloquent address on the necessity of a forward movement of the church of Christ, not alone in foreign mission work, but also in holy living, personal sacrifice, and trust in the promises. The "regions beyond" of prayer, and of giving and of daily living for God,—these are fundamental, and no true missionary work can be done without entering them. Other articles are "The Mission Outlook" by Rev. J. M. Mitchell; "Justification by Faith as developed by Buddhism in Japan;" "Missionary Geography" by Dr. Shedd of Oroomiah, Persia; "Faith Hall of the Mexican Border Mission;" "The Waldensian Church," etc. The editorial notes on current topics and department of General Missionary Intelligence, are full and valuable.

A decided acquisition to the staff of the Cosmopolitan Magazine is Mr. Brander Mathews, President of the Nineteenth Century Club, the well-known litterateur, who takes charge of the department of book reviews. The keen, critical taste of Mr. Mathews, and his fine judgment in literary matters, will make his opinion valued in every household. Mr. Mathews' name, added to that of Edward Everett Hale, in charge of "Social Problems;" Murat Halstead reviewing "Current Events," and Miss Bisland with her European articles, gives the Cosmopolitan a departmental staff of exceptional brilliancy.

In the March Century is seen the work of thirteen artists and twenty-four engravers. Among the latter are several "honor men" of the Paris Exposition. Among the artists, Remington, who illustrates the paper on Indian Fighting, has just returned from following Gen. Miles's troops on the plains. Harry Fenn, who contributes most of the landscapes in the California articles, was sent over the route; W. H. Shelton, who pictures the war-prisoner scenes, has been himself a lieutenant of artillery and a prisoner of war.

The American Garden gives us an excellent February number. An ex-chief of the government seed-distributing agency writes on "Government Seeds," giving some idea of the national seed distribution, which work was begun in the administration of John Quincy Adams. Another article finely illustrated is given to the stone fruits in Japan. This is the month to prepare for the orchids, and several articles illustrate and explain the culture of these favorites. Notes on fruit culture are full and practical.

POTATO, VICK'S PERFECTION.—This variety has been grown and thoroughly tested, and the report comes from every quarter that it is one of the finest potatoes for general purposes. Its wonderful productiveness, fine appearance and good cooking qualities have made it a great favorite where known. The tubers grow compact in the hill, and are large and uniform in size, oblong inclining to oval, but generally flattened. Color white, with tinge of pink around the eyes, similar to the Hebron. The vine is of strong, vigorous growth, yet stocky and short jointed, maturing almost the same time as White Star. The introducer of this potato, James Vick, seedsman, Rochester, N. Y., says it will prove of great value for field culture and become very popular.

We advise our friends to send for Vick's Floral Guide, price only 10 cents, which amount may be deducted from the first order.

"It is like being rescued from a burning building!" says a man who was cured of a severe case of salt rheum by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give this peculiar medicine a trial. Sold by all druggists.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

CALL

FOR A

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ON THE

SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

We, the undersigned, believe that there is no good which can be accomplished, in times of peace and in a free land, by secret societies which cannot be secured more easily and perfectly by open organization.

We believe that much of the time and money so greatly needed by the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ is wasted in the large and unprofitable expenses of secret orders.

We believe that the union of Christians with men of the world in oath-bound organizations is forbidden by the Word of God and always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter such societies.

We believe that some oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country.

We therefore invite all those who sympathize with us in the views above expressed, to meet in "A Conference of Christians," to be held under the auspices of "The National Christian Association," in the city of Chicago ..... to consult and pray respecting the best method of saving men, the churches, and our land from the injurious influence of such societies.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1891.

THE CONCLUSION of the great sermon which a St. Louis Methodist pulpit has given the world against the lodge, is before our readers. It is a great beacon fire flashing back from our generation in answer to Peter Cartwright's terse "Masonry originated with the devil, and will end with the devil;" and John Wesley's memorable, "What an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry!" The Cynosure deems itself fortunate in being able to present this sermon entire to its readers. Attention should be called also to the strong words from another prominent man in St. Louis. Let his abhorrence of the secret lodges in politics be shared by every American citizen. St. Louis after all is outgrowing Chicago. We should as soon expect lightning from a clear sky as such a denunciation from a Chicago mayor. An old Chicago editor writes of lodge paganism with such clearness and logical force that we especially commend the article "If I were a Heathen." Next week we shall give some attention to the Italian secret societies which have began their murder work in New Orleans, and whose trial is now proceeding.

OUR SAVIOUR promises, John 14: 21, to "manifest" himself to those who keep his commandments. The word manifest (in Greek, emphaino) means to show distinctly, as an image in clear, still water. He manifests himself according to our wants: to Moses as "the Existing One;" to Joshua as "Captain of the Lord's host;" to Chaldean Magi, or astronomers, as a "Star;" to Cornelius as an angel; and to John as "the Son of Man," etc. We, too, should ask for his manifestations.

DR. GRAY, of the Interior, in his very brilliant notice of the Cynosure editor's birthday, says, "He has made enemies by the score, in and out of the churches:" and he hints, by way of apology, that the prophets sometimes deserved stoning. And doubtless they did; and the Cynosure editor may have at times unnecessarily "made enemies." Certainly he has sometimes mocked the priests of Baal as Elijah did. But Hannah More said, "St. Paul was a perfect gentleman," and he was stoned badly; and Christ was spotless and faultless, yet they took up stones to stone him, John 10: 31. It is just possible that the "enemies" made by the editor of the Cynosure were made by his virtues and not by his faults.

"LODGE OR CHRIST!" We met last week an Evangelical Lutheran clergyman in his confirmation room, where he was instructing a beautiful flock of 150 or 200 children in the catechism and Bible. He said he had been pastor there eighteen years; and that they had expelled only three in all that time for joining the Masons. "But," said I, "do you expel all that join them?" "Yes, SIR," said he; "with us it is Christ or lodge. One or the other must be given up." Would God this were the case with all churches. Mere testimony against lodges in words will never remove them or purify the churches. The Lutheran church above spoken of is in Chicago, yet its congregation include six hundred families. Yet it is surrounded by Congregationalist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches, which receive Masons without question. This is all the devil asks. Take his worshipers to fellowship in Christ's churches, and you endorse him as on a level with Christ. "If thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth."

—Rev. Dr. T. P. Stevenson, of the First Reformed Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, has since its foundation twenty-four years ago, been editor of the Christian Statesman. He has lately accepted the appointment of the National Reform Association as its secretary and manager, and has resigned his pastorate.

A FRAIL "WITNESS."

J. W. Margrave, of Hiawatha, Kansas, sends us a clipping from the N. Y. Weekly Witness which justly depicts the fallen Ingalls, but does gross injustice to exSenator Pomeroy. Mr. Margrave requests us to answer the Witness.

Senator S. C. Pomeroy was in Chicago in 1849, and spoke at our N. C. A. meeting against the secret lodges. Immediately the Leavenworth Herald said "the Kansas Senator has made an ass of himself. By his Chicago Anti-masonic speech he has signed his political death warrant." And so it proved. Ingalls, who is the wretch the Witness makes him, wanted the Senatorship and got it by aid of the lodge, as the Leavenworth paper threatened. Pomeroy was aiding the establishment of a bank at Independence, Kansas, and a Freemason and infamous creature named York came to him and got $7,000 to take to the officers of the bank. During the ballot for Senator, York arose in the Legislature, went to the clerk's desk and laid the $7,000 thereon, and said Pomeroy had given, and he had accepted, the money as a bribe to secure his vote and influence to re-elect him as Senator. York thus confessed, if he had spoken truth, that he had got the money from Pomeroy, and accepted it as a bribe, and was now violating his scoundrel promise. And this, while pretending patriotism and abhorrence of bribery!

But there was the money and the House was dumbfounded; and even St. John, who was in the Senate at the time, voted against Pomeroy. Ingalls and the lodge succeeded, and the Leavenworth lodge prophecy was fulfilled.

St. John has since been politically guillotined by the same secret lodge. He was persuaded by Ingalls & Co., against his declared wish and purpose, to run for Governor a third term. The Republican leaders who had nominated St. John and adopted the prohibition plank, then accused him of ambition; being attorney for railroads, etc., etc., and sank him many thousand votes. The Milwaukee Brewery Association, whose president was a high Mason, and the Peoria distillery voted $10,000 each to defeat St. John and prohibition in Kansas. That money was used by secret lodge agents through the 100 counties in Kansas. And Negroes, whom St. John had received and sheltered in their exodus into Kansas, were hired to vote against him at a quarter of a dollar each!

The extent of Pomeroy's wrong, if there was any, was in trusting his bank funds to a scoundrel. He was defeated by the lodge; and Glick, an open professed Democrat, secessionist and rebel, was elected by Ingalls & Co., against St. John. If the good father Dougall, founder of the Witness, were alive, its columns would not have been used, in the words of Mr. Margrave, to "allow an innocent and righteous man to be maligned."

BOYCOTTING GENERAL.

"And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast," Rev. 13: 17.

The name of the secret orders is legion, for they are many. In Wheaton, Ill., there has long been a feeble Masonic lodge. There are now five secret orders there. The one main defence or justification of those who belong to them now is, "I get cheap insurance in them."

The great southwestern strike and boycott began by a railroad refusing to reinstate a secretist who had been discharged from its service. His secret society said, "Unless you put this member back, and pay him such wages as we direct, we will destroy your road." In Chicago, when two regiments were called by the Governor to quell the disturbance, the trouble originated in the refusal of Mr. McCormick to turn off five of his faithful workmen who would not join a secret lodge. And Martin Irons boasted, in the public prints, that unless the roads recognize the Knights of Labor by treating with them, they had the power, and would soon prevent any freight train moving between the two oceans!

Irons was afterwards taken up by the police in Kansas City for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and the great strike whose head was at St. Louis, was declared off by Powderly. But Powderly afterward attacked the New York Central as Irons had the southwestern roads; but he was defeated. The lodges in the United States outnumber the churches more than three to one: and the underlying principle of all of them is partiality to their members and proscription to outsiders. They are a literal, veritable fulfilment of the prophecy of the angel who gave the revelation to John; that is, universal boycotting; and the only virtue required by the secret orders to escape this horrible proscription, is to join some lodge, give its passwords and practice its grips. He may be a stranger, and of course a knave, for the lodge-boast is, "join us and you will have friends among strangers wherever you go!"

But what is the talismanic power of a secret grip, sign, or token of a secret lodge, that it should work such wonders? The answer is, it is a "mark of the beast." It is a confession that the man belongs to a religion without Christ. In Job's day, kissing the hand to the moon was idolatry, Job 31: 27, "an iniquity to be punished by the Judge." And unless the friends of Christ are awakened, the people of the United States must soon worship Satan or want bread.

THE FARMERS AND SECRETISM.

The Farmers' Alliance, which began as an open organization wholly, and a refuge for farmers who wished to organize but objected to the lodge, is in danger of being swamped by the very evil which was being avoided. We speak not of the "National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union," the reasons for whose existence are negrophobia and secretism; but of the organization affected in this city in 1870,—the original Farmers' Alliance.

At the late general meeting of the society in Omaha, it was proposed to adopt "the Nebraska secret work" in order to hold the members more surely together in politics. In its present condition it is not a good machine for manipulation by demagogues; but, bound with the hoops of lodgery, its independent, American spirit would be choked, and ambitious men could climb over it into office, wealth and power. The proposition was resisted; but carried in so far as to recommend the "secret work" to such local branches of the Alliance as should desire to adopt lodge methods.

The result of this grave innovation will be disastrous, we have great reason to fear. In such a race the advantage is all with the devil's side. The "secret work" lodges will necessarily be separated in sympathy from the honest farmers who will not take up their grips, signs, pass-words, obligations of screcy, etc., which are the tools of blacklegs and horsethieves, and not of farmers. They will also be able to form combinations within the Alliance, to either overthrow or control it. The two, the open and the secret methods, cannot exist together in the same organization any more than our nation could be part free and part slave.

The movement for a national party five or six parts secret and two parts open will also foster the lodge principle. A national convention is planned for next year on the planks: 1. Free coinage of silver (not American silver, but silver); 2. Abolition of national banks and increase of currency to $50 a head, and it will not stop there; 3. Government ownership (not control) of railroads, telegraphs, etc.; 4. No alien land owners or stock gambling; 5. Direct vote for President; 6. The Australian ballot.

Some of these measures we want, but we do not trust a secret political society to get them for us. But the Southern Alliance, the F. M. B. A., the Knights of Labor, Patrons of Industry, the grange and the labor unions expect to unite with the open Alliance and the Farmers' League on this platform, and are already securing an individual vote of their members.

So soon as men are nominated for office, the temptations of popularity and power will gradually overcome the scruples which should keep all farmers free from the lodge. The anticipation is not an agreeable one, but we believe in the American farmer, and are confident that after this epidemic has had its run they will shake off the secret society as a burden too great for honest men to bear.

—John P. St. John, the eloquent Prohibition leader, spoke to a great audience in Wheaton Saturday evening on the leading political questions and their relation to the saloon. It was the ablest and most convincing speech we have heard from him. He stands by his renunciation of the lodge which he gave permission to the Cynosure to publish several years ago.

—Over three hundred signatures have been received to the Call for our next Conference. Correct the number on 7th page.

—The editor of the Cynosure announced on the Sabbath that he would preach a sermon in the court house at Wheaton on Monday evening on the farmers' movement.

—If any reader of the Cynosure has, or can get, an old New England school book called "The Columbian Orator" and will send it to the Cynosure, we will remit to the sender the postage and a reasonable price for the old book.

—The Christian Conservator of Dayton adds to the accumulating testimony of our Methodist brethren against the lodge, thus: "A wide-awake Methodist Episcopal preacher said to us some months ago: 'Two-thirds of the Masonic Methodist preachers have left the lodge.' He said they do not talk to an opposer as they do among themselves, they feel that the lodge is no place for them. A Methodist presiding elder said to us recently: 'It is my conviction that churches should exclude the secret orders.'" Let the good work go on.

—The Cosmopolitan magazine which we are enabled to offer to our subscribers at very favorable rates, is widely recognized as one of the most interesting of our illustrated publications. Its publishers are anxious to secure permanent subscribers and make the Cynosure subscribers an excellent offer. It contains yearly some 1,500 pages of reading matter, a large proportion of which is finely illustrated. A profitable investment is offered in the Cynosure and Cosmopolitan for $3.00 to new subscribers to both; $3.50 to old subscribers to both; and $3.25 to all our present subscribers who do not take the magazine.

—The farmers in the vicinity of the county seat of Dupage county, Ill., have been lately discussing the measures that are agitating their colaborers in other States, and an effort was made by outside parties to organize them into a lodge of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association. The Wheaton Flail reports the very satisfactory result as follows:

"The farmers' meeting at the court house last Saturday evening was in the hands of the F. M. B. A. officials. Hon. W. L. Stilwell, president of the order, and Mr. Haaf, national organizer, made very able and excellent addresses in behalf of the farmers and their order. On account of the 'secret working' and general 'lodge' character of the F. M. B. A. order, those present decided not to organize in this order, but to meet at Hiatt's law office next Friday evening, for the purpose of organizing under the Illinois Farmers' Alliance, which is not a secret order, having no pass-words, grips, chaplains or other objectionable features of a secret character.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley returned from the East in time to spend the Sabbath with his family in Wheaton on Sabbath, the 15th.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, of the Am. Miss. Association, is visiting eastern Kansas with his pictures and lantern. Leavenworth, Lawrence, Topeka, Emporia and other points are reached. He lectured in twenty-five churches in less than thirty days.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul has been a week or so in this city. He still continues his work in a quiet way against the lodge, and it is hoped may lecture in a number of places in Minnesota. He also desires to secure a State Convention during the spring at some point in Minnesota.

—Rev. Dr. H. H. George has apparently given up the plan of beginning a work for National Reform in connection with a Covenanter mission in this city, since he has been called by the Reformed Presbyterian church of New Alexandria, Pa., to become their pastor. He has been addressing large audiences of late in western Pennsylvania on the subject of Sabbath observance with great power and earnestness.

—Joseph Cook, who is one of the few Americans too great for a title, is attracting great audiences to Tremont Temple every Monday. In the last number of Our Day he writes of the secret murder organizations now prominently again before the country in the trial of the Mafia murderers of New Orleans. He assures Bro. Stoddard, the New England agent, that it is his purpose to print his Chicago address in his magaazine, and he would be glad to have that speech distributed to his Monday lecture audience. Bro. Stoddard is arranging to put some thousand or two copies in the hands of the most intelligent citizens of Boston.

—We have heard no word directly from our missionary brother W. J. Gladwin to know whether he ever arrived in Bombay. But the India Watchman for January comes to us from that city containing a letter written by him Dec. 3, at the southern end of the Red Sea, and notice is given that his address will be "Taredo, Bombay." Bro. C. B. Ward's address is no longer Secunderabad, but "Care of Station Master, Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, India."

—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts is conducting a campaign for Sabbath reform in western Pennsylvania which will close the first week in March, after which he will go north and west. He gave three addresses on "The Sabbath from a Patriotic and Humanitarian Standpoint," in Pittsburgh last Sabbath. At Carnegie Hall in the afternoon he especially considered the local and State aspects of the question, church trains, Sunday excursions, Sunday newspapers, and the Sabbath closing of postoffices by local option.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston who has given up a pleasant home amid the roses and vineyards and orchards of California for a new work in connection with Our Banner, in Philadelphia, has reached the latter city and announces his postoffice address as 4,225 Penngrove street, West Philadelphia. His departure from Oakland, Cal., was an occasion of regretful interest in the Chinese mission to which so many years of his life had been given. A farewell meeting was held Jan. 23. Several of the Christian Chinamen spoke of his departure from them from the fullness of their hearts. Others spoke in appreciation of Mr. Johnston's labors, among them Rev. Mr. Masters of the M. E. Chinese mission in San Francisco. The bitter days of persecution and Sand-lotism have nearly passed and these missions may do their gracious work in quiet. Mrs. Johnston's departure from the Pacific coast will also be a great loss to the reform work among women there. As teacher in the public schools and later as president of the W. C. T. U. for the State and editor of their paper, the Pacific Ensign, she also was filling her measure of usefulness in the vineyard of the Master.

21 years of age! You might as well talk of making the universe out of a town pump!

The thing which the lodge desires is just what the devil has always desired. How do I know? Did he (Satan) not make the first proposition of a universal brotherhood? When Christ accompanied him unto a high mountain and he showed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, what did he propose? To make a universal religion. If Christ would bow down and worship him he was to be at the head. In short, the devil was the first Universalist preacher of whom I have any knowledge. The lodge is helping keep up the apostolic succession in his line.

I do not believe that friend Getty's Methodist and Presbyterian lodge brethren were proud of the showing he gave them. In fact, I have evidence that they were not.

I lectured again in the same place Monday evening. Friend Getty and lodge brethren were conspicuous for their absence. In battle, the one who retains his position in the field, I believe is considered the victor. Fourteen Cynosures will be read in Saltsburg each week hereafter.

I have enjoyed a very pleasant time with Dr. Telford, pastor of the United Presbyterian church near West Lebanon. I addressed his people Sabbath day, and at 1:30 P. M., yesterday. While it has rained much of the time here of late, both these appointments have been propitious. The weather was pleasant for each, good congregations gathered and a good collection was given our cause.

I have addressed audiences in Shelota, Parkwood and in this place during the week. About 100 were present at each gathering. Tracts were freely distributed, and I feel Christ's cause has been honored. I go to Apollo to day. I am to supply Rev. Jamison's pulpit to-morrow, while he preaches the Word to those he may reach at Altona.

For Christ and reform,

W. B. Stoddard.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 18, 1891.

Senator Plumb this week presented a memorial to the Senate that every friend of peace will cordially wish to see enacted into a law. It was from the Universal Peace Union, asking the establishment of a commission with authority from the United States to visit all of the civilized governments of the world for the purpose of trying to induce them to unite in the organization of an international tribunal of arbitration, to which shall be given authority to hear and determine such vexed questions as nations may fail to determine among themselves, and which would otherwise result in a declaration of war.

Is it possible to conceive of a grander mission than that which would be entrusted to this commission should Congress be wise enough to enact the law requested, which unfortunately is not at this time very probable, owing to the short time remaining of the present session. I would rather be instrumental in forming such an international tribunal than to command the most victorious army the world has ever seen; and I haven't a doubt of the formation of such a tribunal in the future. The number of citizens that are demanding this method of settling international disputes is constantly growing larger in every Christian country, and it is only a question of time when the demand is bound to be heeded in the legislative halls of those countries, and God grant that the time be short.

I have seldom listened to anything more solemn than the singing by a choir of young voices of "Hark, Hark my Soul, Angelic Voices Calling," yesterday afternoon as the remains of Admiral Porter were borne from his late residence on the way to their final resting place in Arlington cemetery. What a beautiful bit of imagery is brought to one's mind by the words of the hymn!

"O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt." These helpful words of the Master are inscribed upon a large white banner which hangs above the desk in the church in which the White Ribboners are holding their convocations here this week, under the auspices of the National Christian Temperance Union. The meetings, which have been held twice daily since Sabbath day, are largely attended, and the greatest interest has been manifested in the exercises, which have been very interesting. Many distinguished visitors are in attendance. Miss Frances E. Willard was the principal speaker at one of the meetings which I attended, and I quote her explanation of what the white ribbon means: "The consecration of the white ribbon is consecration of the body to our God. The consecration of the mind, it seems to me, is another radiant ray of light that converges to make the pure white of our emblem. I rejoice for the consecration of the white ribbon in that it tells a woman that she is a drone and a sluggard unless she stirs around and makes the best of her powers. . . . .The consecration of the white ribbon means not only the consecration to the Lord of the body and of the mind, the two halves of the great whole, but it also means the consecration to the home. I use the motto of Froebel, 'Come, let us live for our children,' and I have heard another wise kindergartner say, 'Let us rather live with the children.' When I see a white ribbon I know that that woman has a mother's heart if she be a true white ribboner, whether or no she has children of her own to prattle around her knee and to call for her care and affection. The white ribbon means that we are consecrated to the extermination of the legalized saloon." After Miss Willard's remarks the immense audience joined in singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

Both branches of Congress are working industriously upon the regular appropriation bills in order to prevent the necessity of holding an extra session in the spring, and it is not thought that any other important legislation can be passed in the few days remaining of the session.

Superintendent S. H. Hadley, of the McAuley Mission in New York, who is in himself a living argument to prove that drunkards can be reformed, is doing good work here for the Union Mission and the cause of temperance generally. He is a powerful and magnetic speaker, and never fails to arouse the enthusiasm of his hearers, and he seems incapable of fatigue when engaged in temperance and religious work. *

THE HOME.

THE SOURCE OF STRENGTH.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour,
Spent in thy presence will avail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower.
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all the distant and the near,
Stand forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong
Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or helpless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

—Dean Trench.

HOW THE HOLY SPIRIT MANIFESTS HIMSELF.

For many years I have cultivated the habit of reading the Bible as a fresh book every day, and I venture to believe that I have succeeded to some considerable extent. My rule is to study it to find something new. Imagination reads it. Memory is sure to read it. And it has long seemed to me that if I come to it in this mood, the Spirit comes to me. Very many avenues he has; and they must be kept open and clear; and our different faculties, each one functionally a mind, and, therefore, each one an organ of the Spirit's activity with its own specific impressibility, should be on the alert to receive what the Spirit may say to it. For he has "many voices," and you may rest assured that "none of them is without signification." At times I can read David only; at other times Paul only; then Mark only; and again, John, in his Gospel of the intuitions. I respect these moods. Moods multiply one man into many men, or what is equivalent, into manifoldness of receptivity. Is there not something in this we frequently overlook? The natural must be honored. The natural is dear to the Spirit. The natural and supernatural are distinctions, but ought not to be separations; soul and body are distinct, yet not separate during life.

But I do not look for the Spirit only in his Word. I expect to meet him in his works as well; for certainly he is here no less than there, and in the one he educates us to detect him in the other. The dispensation of the Holy Ghost is world wide, embraces all things, sanctifies all things, brings out all faded beauty, and hence should never be limited in our expectations, to the church and the Gospel. Church and Gospel work outside of church and Gospel, just as the violets in my yard (lowly things in the grass) fill the air in my house with their fragrance. Religious instruments and agencies—why bound and hedge them by our formal restraints? There is a Peter in us that needs a Joppa vision; and we all are Jews in some kind of traditionalism. Most heartily do I accept dogmas, creed and authority in their places; but give me the blessed Jesus in the open air—the sermon on the Mount, the sermons in the Parables, from the fishing boat, at the bridal feast. Wherever he has gone, there let me follow.

Let me say further, that certain natural agencies are specially used by the Holy Spirit. Take, for instance, the memory. What a favorite organ it is for the Spirit. What stress Christ laid on it. "He shall bring all things to your remembrance." What, could not the memory of the apostles be trusted? No! they must have an inspired memory. So, too, the Spirit does a vast work in our memories and through them. Many a man is converted, humanely speaking, by a means of his memory. Think of the Lord's Supper —"In remembrance of me—" the grandest institution ever established; an appeal, divinely made, divinely applied, to the memory. I have been trying, since my conversion in early youth, to educate my memory to the divine agency of the Spirit. So of our sympathies. People are means of grace to our souls. Hundreds of times the Spirit has entered my heart from the eyes, the voice and the manners of others, and very pleasant are such visitations. Think also of providences. I look for them every day. The mail, with its letters and papers and books, is to me in my sick room, where I have spent most of four years, and much of the time in bed, an instrument of the Spirit. To-day the first bird of the season came to a tree near my house and sung so as to move my heart.

But I wait for all these. To try and force yourself into sympathy with them is absurd. Spontaneousness is the great agency of the Spirit. After all, how little we can consciously do to realize the Spirit. The most of his divine influence is in the unconscious man. The unconscious man is the Spirit's man. Thank God for that. I have a profound reverence for those secret and subtle activities. For my part I am a vast debtor to the grace of the Holy Spirit coming to me while asleep. Night has been a wonderful power in my Christian experience, and my soul claims kinship to the patriarch and his ladder.—The Independent.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE HOLY SPIRIT.

When the apostles went everywhere and "preached the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," sinners were converted and much people were added to the Lord. But when worldly ministers settle down, and preach sectarianism to empty benches, and write essays on how to reach the masses, they sometimes have to use other means, and substitute other instrumentalities in the place of the Holy Spirit of God.

Here is a church which has got too proud for its humble old meeting-house, and has buried itself in debt to build a large, roomy and imposing structure, reminding one of Wm. Taylor's snail, which got a new alabaster shell, and found it so cold that he froze to death the first night.

Of course with a new meeting-house and a heavy debt a revival is needed; and how to bring it about is a matter of serious consideration. Finally a program is arranged, a choir is gathered, an orchestra of fifteen or twenty instruments is hired at a modest price; revival meetings are held for a week with tremendous efforts, dwindling congregations, and little or no success or satisfaction.

This is a modern method. Bands of music, harps, sackbuts, psalteries; sounding brass, and clanging cymbals enough to dedicate a golden image for Nebudchadnezzar; little Bible, little Gospel, little spiritual discernment, little of the Holy Ghost—no wonder that men fail to see good results from such efforts.

These things are poor substitutes for a converted church; a minister called and anointed and sent forth by the Lord, with a well-used Bible,—the Sword of the Spirit in the grasp of a good soldier of Jesus Christ; singing with the spirit and the understanding; praying always in the Holy Ghost; walking in the Spirit; and preaching the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. When these are present there will be little need of hiring brass bands, and other substitutes which worldly men devise to supply the lack of the word of truth, and the power of the Holy Ghost.—H. L. Hastings in the Armory.

ATTENTION, BOYS!

Here are some good words from Harper's Young People for you. We are sure that every true boy will regard them:

Suppose a headache is going on in the next room, might one not remember that heavy boots squeak and clatter, and that a loud voice makes pain unbearable? When there is illness in the house, "the word for your guidance is mum, mum, mum."

There are boys whose lot is cast in a boarding-house, one of the drawbacks to which is that courtesy makes it but fair to other boarders that each person should go through the halls and down stairs less like a whirlwind than some of us would like.

And how about the conduct during school hours? Probably the head master will take care of himself and of you when in the school-room. But how about the class-room where a young woman teaches? Very often she is new at the business. Possibly she does not know everything about boys. You may have seen such a teacher.

Now any one with half a brain—even an idiot—has wit enough to see how he may disturb that new teacher. It is absurdly easy to scrape one's feet on the floor. It takes but little skill to cluck in one's throat so deftly that it is hard to tell where the noise comes from. To talk half aloud to the next boy is neither witty nor wise. If you were to meet your teacher on the street, you would take off your hat in a twinkling. You would step out into the mud if the sidewalk were too narrow for two. Why should you lay aside your chivalrous courtesy because she happens to teach you geometry or Latin? You would deal sharply with any lad who undertook to annoy your mother or your sister. How, then, does it happen that you yourself worry a lady with unseemly noise, as if you were a boor and not a gentleman?

What of noise in a public assembly? Can anything be more ill-bred than to giggle and whisper when the business of the evening is to hear music or a lecture? And if it is rude to thoughtlessly make a noise in a public hall, how much worse is it when the building is a church? And yet there are young folks who, coming into a pew, a party of them together, behave so irreverently that one almost thinks them a parcel of—no, we don't insult the heathen, who, at least, bow before their idols' shrines, awe-stricken.

One wonders what sort of parents permit their children to stray from one church to another with no older person as a guardian. But since there are boys and girls who have this undesirable liberty, might they not do well to remember the words, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him?"

SCHOOL-GIRL ENGLISH.

We find a sample of it in the Well-Spring, and pass it over to our readers for possible recognition:

"Oh, auntie, you ought to know Bertha Elliott! She is the funniest girl!"

"Do you mean witty?" inquired Aunt Fannie with an air of interest.

"Oh, pity sakes! no. She's as destitute of humor as a basket of chips."

"Then she does comical things," said Aunt Fannie patiently; "things that make you laugh."

"Dear me! no. She's as proper as proper can be, but I never know how to take her."

"You mean, then, I suppose, that she is peculiar—eccentric, do you not, Nellie?"

"Yes, that is it. She has an odd streak, and she wears such funny clothes and does up her hair in such a funny way! Altogether, she is very funny, auntie."

"Does she use the word 'funny'?" asked Aunt Fanny, smiling as she spoke.

"Now, auntie, you are laughing at me!" cried Nellie.

"I would laugh in good earnest," said Aunt Fannie, "if I could make you drop the use of that much-abused word."

Nellie had a great fondness for adjectives and adverbs, and she used them with reckless freedom, and with an utter disregard of their correct meaning.

"Nellie, will you have some of the oyster stew?" asked her mother at tea-time.

"No, thank you," Nellie replied; "I hate stewed oysters; I do wish you would have them scolloped or fried; scolloped oysters are splendid, and they are just lovely fried."

Aunt Fanny could scarcely forbear making a wry face at this abuse of language; but when Nellie declared a few minutes later that she loved pickled limes dearly, Aunt Fanny laughingly remarked, "I shall know how to value that same expression when applied to me."

"Well, truly, Aunt Fan," said the incorrigible Nellie, "pickled limes are awfully nice—just elegant."

Thus it is, day in and day out.

Nellie is a pupil in the high school, but her remarks are interlarded by all sorts of meaningless expressions, which make up in seeming force what they lack in grace or accuracy.

"I'd rather die than write an essay!" she declared vehemently. But the dreadful essay is written, and she survives to make many similar attempts. The word "very" has quite vanished from her vocabulary, and "real" serves as a substitute when "awfully" and "perfectly" are not on duty. Yet Nellie can be critical, and frequently remarks upon the mistakes of her associates. She disapproves, in a general way, of slang, and considers herself an advocate of good English. Do you belong to the great army of Nellies?

ATTENTION AND READING.

An active-minded boy or girl can find out a great deal about the world we live in by the habit of attention, by looking round; and he or she can get much inspiration from the example of good men and women. But this knowledge can be added to indefinitely by reading, and people will read if they have a genuine desire to know things, and are not, as we say, "too lazy to live." When I hear a boy say that he does not know what to read, I wonder if he has no curiosity. Is there nothing that he wants to know about? Most children ask questions. It often happens that the persons they ask cannot answer the questions. Now, it is the purpose of books to do just this thing which the particular person asked cannot do. And that is about all there is in reading. Of course it must be borne in mind that curiosity is of many kinds: curiosity about facts, about emotions, about what happened long ago, about what is taking place now, about the people who lived ages ago, and the people who live now, about others, and about one's self. So it happens that one wants to read science, and poetry, and history, and biography, and romances, and the daily news.

It is quite impossible to lay down rules for reading that will suit all children, and generally difficult to map out a "course" to be inflexibly pursued by any one. But nearly every mind is or can be interested in something, and a very good plan is to encourage reading concerning the subject the child shows some curiosity about. One thing will certainly lead to another, for nothing is isolated in this world. Try to find out all you can about one thing, one fact in history, one person, the habits of one animal, the truth about one historical character; pursue this, and before you know it you will be a scholar in many things. Do not forget that reading is a means to an end. The indulgence of it is good or bad according to the end in view. The mind is benefited by pursuing some definite subject until it is understood, but it is apt to be impaired by idly nibbling now and then, tasting a thousand things, and swallowing none, in short, by dissultory reading.—January St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

RUM'S MURDER RECORD.

The number of murders and homicides reported in the newspapers in the United States, in the year 1889, as compiled by the Chicago Tribune, was 3,567. And the number of executions for all this crime were 98.

The murders committed by the makers and sellers of beer, wine and whisky, directly and indirectly, supposed to be 100,000 a year, are not included in the above, of course, being legalized by the law of the land, and fully endorsed by the votes and acts of the great mass of the churches, bishops, preachers and people of the republic.

Purely as a consequence of this poison drink, it is not complimentary to this nation, which claims the first place among Christian and civilized peoples, that it stands No. 3 in the list of the most murderous nations of the world.

Italy so far leads the list with an annual crop of 2,470 murders, or 29.4 per 10,000 people.

Spain is next with 1,200 or 23.8 per 10,000, and the United States is third with 21.5 per 10,000. Austria has 8.8, France 8, and England 7.1 per 10,000.—Ex.

THE RIGHT PLACE FOR A SALOON.

Where is the right place for a saloon? Where is the saloon wanted? If not the fashionable mercantile establishment, what other kinds of business are likely to be helped by the proximity of gin mills? Let some one name them. Is it the baker, the tailor, the shoemaker, the butcher, the milliner, the bookseller? Do any of these find it of any particular advantage to their trade to have a grog-seller come and open up a shop beside them? What surroundings are necessary in order to justify the opening of resorts for loafers, of drunkard mills, of dens for the propagation of vice and crime? What neighborhoods shall be selected for the establishment of places for the debauchment of men, for the destruction of families, for the making of paupers and felons? Which is the worst, to open a saloon within two hundred feet of a church or school, or to open one next door to a house, in front of a house, over a house, or under a house? What is there that should make a grog-shop a stench in the nostrils of the public on one street and a sweet smelling savor on another? What should make it an ugly blot on the landscape in one locality and a thing of beauty in another? Is a saloon on Fifth avenue calculated to do greater harm than a beer-dive on Mulberry street? If the wealthy and powerful cannot endure the presence of the grog-shop, why will they thrust them on the poor and weak? Are the tenement districts—the homes of those already deep down in poverty, squalor and misery—are these the proper places to set the saloons? Are they needed here to help men to live purer lives, to make happier homes, to strengthen the weak, to cheer the downcast, to guide the erring? Who shall take upon himself the responsibility of declaring where the people shall be cursed with the presence of grog-shops, and where thy shall not be cursed? These, it seems to us, are the practical questions, and we should have them answered.—New York Observer.

PROHIBITORY LEAGUE IN WISCONSIN.

A Milwaukee dispatch to the Chicago News, dated Feb. 16, says that war has been declared against the saloons of the city and the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, pastor of the Summerfield Methodist church, is at the head of the movement. He will organize the "Union Prohibitory League of Wisconsin" at once, and has already secured the signatures of a hundred members, although he began only last night. All members must be voters, but an auxiliary body is to be organized which will be made up of women.

The reverend gentleman preached at the Summerfield church last evening on "The American Saloon as an Institution," and spoke so well that he was greeted by prolonged cheers several times. He figured that at least $22,500 is spent each day in Milwaukee's 1,500 saloons and the business is growing rapidly. He called attention to the fact that all the best corners were now occupied by saloons and that the pick of the rest soon would be. The remedy, he said, lay in the use of the ballot.

"State prohibitory leagues are to be formed and will be composed of the Christian business men of the country. All preachers in the country," said the doctor, "would either aid in the work or refuse to do so, and if the voters in their congregation did not join these leagues they would have to refuse." Dr. Parkhurst said he was going to start the "Union Prohibitory League of Wisconsin" right away, and he gave its objects and declarations of principles as follows:

"Object—The suppression of the saloon. This by: 1. The strict enforcement of the suppressive measures of existing laws. 2. The early enactment of more stringent and prohibitory statutes. 3. The final adoption of constitutional prohibition for State and nation.

"Declaration—1. Primary allegiance to God and humanity, to country and commonwealth. All party affiliations subordinate to these higher claims. 2. Liberty to choose political associations, but freedom from the dominion of the liquor power, through whatever political party. Here we stand and seek alliance, offensive and defensive, with all who will stand with us."

A mass-meeting will be held in the Academy of Music within a few weeks, and active steps taken to begin the war.

According to the official report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the total production of distilled spirits for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890, was 109,275,928 gallons; the total production for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, was 89,358,510 gallons, making an increase of 19,917,418 gallons.

The number of barrels of beer produced during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890, was 27,551,944. The number of barrels produced during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, was 25,119,853, making an increased production of 2,442,091 barrels.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890, 6,211 distilleries of all kinds were in operation, while for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, 4,349 distilleries of all kinds were operated, making an increase in the number of distilleries operated of 1,862.

These figures showing a steady increase in the production of intoxicating liquors, both distilled and fermented, should suffice to awaken renewed and increased efforts in the direction of total abstinence propagandism on the part of the friends of temperance throughout the country.

RAILROAD TEMPERANCE WORK.

It is gratifying to learn that 377 companies prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors on the roads under their control. The remainder either have rules on this subject, preferring to pass upon each case as it might occur, or they have modified restrictions, such as not allowing men to drink to excess, or requiring men to be temperate in their habits, or discharging men for habitual intemperance or drunkenness. It is only a few years since any road placed restrictions upon the men employed with reference to intoxicants; and now, as stated, 377 roads practically prohibit their use, and these roads are the most influential ones, employing a very large proportion of all the railroad employes in the country.—"Report on Railroad Labor," by Carroll D. Wright, U. S. Commissioner of Labor.

Among the bills pending in Congress is one to prohibit the liquor traffic for beverage purposes in the District of Columbia. This bill is quite in line with the late important decision of the United States Supreme Court in the California appealed case, as given by Mr. Justice Field, to the effect that such prohibition is wholly in accord with the Constitution of the United States, and that the liquor traffic is largely detrimental to the public welfare. The nation's capital ought to have no saloon. It should in this respect be made an object lesson for the whole country. The Senators and Representatives from the prohibitory States ought at once to unite in a common effort to secure the prompt passage of the District prohibitory bill before the expiration next month of the Fifty-first Congress.

"The five old Prohibition States, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, show a decreased production during 1887 and 1888, of 78,589 barrels of beer, while the high license States of Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska and Michigan show an increased production of 253,114 barrels."—Brewers' Journal.

If it be true that Prohibition "means free rum" and high license is a "means of restriction," how can the above figures be explained?—New York Witness.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Two contrasted lots.—vs. 1–5. In Naaman we see an instance of great worldly prosperity, but also of great unhappiness. He was a leper, suffering under a disease that was loathsome, incurable, and could only grow worse and worse till ended by death. He was a famous general, popular with the people and beloved of the king; and yet so unfortunate was his lot in one respect that he stirred the pity even of a little captive maid. If we knew all the hidden skeletons in the lives of the rich and great there would be less envy and more content with the way in which the favors of Providence are distributed. Nothing is told us directly about Naaman's character, but we have reason to conclude that though a heathen he had many virtuous and noble qualities, and was kind to those below him. Kindness to servants and employes, which means more than simple justice, is among the most important of Christian duties; yet how many who bear that holy name are neither just nor kind to their servants, and miss many a rich blessing to themselves in consequence! We also see in this little captive maid a fine example of the good results of pious training in early years. She became a missionary in a heathen household, and was the instrument of converting to the true God the man who stood next in power and dignity to the king himself. How much farther her influence may have extended only eternity will reveal.

2. Naaman sent to the wrong one for help.—vs.

6–8. The king of Syria supposed Elisha was like the heathen physicians and necromancers—attached to the court of the sovereign, and always at the royal command; so it was not strange that he should send Naaman to the king of Israel to be cured without mentioning the prophet. The strange thing was that the king of Israel himself should know so little about the greatest man in his realm. He could have no excuse for his ignorance. Wilful unbelief in Christian lands is far less pardonable than the darkest superstitions of men who have never heard of the Gospel. But just as Naaman was sent to one utterly impotent to cure him, so the sinner is often sent for salvation to that which cannot save,—to the works of the law, which without faith are dead and cannot possibly have any healing power: or he is told to apply at the gate of some lodge-room,—while all the while there is a prophet in Israel, a Great Physician who would cure his sin-sick soul at once.

3. The healing of Naaman.—vs. 9–14, 19. No such splendid retinue had ever before halted at at his door, or that of any other prophet of his native land, yet Elisha had no thought of the fame and eclat that the visit of so great a man was going to bring him. Like the God he served he was no respecter of persons. Had he been like some modern pastors and church committees who angle for rich or distinguished hearers, he would have come out to Naaman with the most obsequious marks of respect. But he only sends out a messenger, telling him to go and wash in Jordan seven times. It is hardly a wonder that Naaman, ignorant as he was of the true God and his methods, and filled with the thought of his own dignity and importance, was angry. He was expecting that the prophet would come out, and personally work his cure by using some charm or incantation. But instead, he finds that he must in a sense work out his own salvation. Naaman's case throughout is a striking object lesson of the sinner seeking to be healed of the leprosy of sin. (1) A messenger is sent out to him—the Holy Spirit. Or we may take it of some faithful preacher, or other human influence which the Spirit uses. (2) He is given something to do. He is not suffered to be the passive, inactive recipient of his cure, as if he had no will or volition of his own. He must wash in the fountain opened for sin. In other words, he must by faith and obedience, accept Christ's sacrifice and the work is done. (3) He is not allowed to choose his methods of cure, or to say that another way is better than the one laid down. (4) The Gospel is divinely simple. It requires no hard thing, only to submit our wills to God. He does not have one way of salvation for his prophets and ministers, and another for the rank and file. All must become as little children before they can enter the kingdom. The servants of Naaman were much wiser than their master, though he showed his good sense by listening to what they said. We often learn more practical Christian wisdom from a humble, illiterate man whom God himself has taught than from the theologians. If Naaman had not acted in the spirit of the apostolic command, "Condescend to men of low estate," he would have gone home a leper and been poorer to all eternity.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—After two weeks of special meetings with the United Presbyterian church in Colorado Springs, communion was held Feb. 1. Thirty new names were added to the roll of membership. In all 27 made a confession of Christ. Some went to other churches. More will yet unite with the congregation, of which Rev. H. H. Bell is pastor.

—The meetings conducted by Major Whittle in the United Presbyterian churches of Allegheny, are reported in the United Presbyterian. The last week was a very successful one. Two hundred and eighteen professed conversion during the week. These represented almost every denomination in the city, so that many churches will share in the blessing. Owing to the interest manifest, it was felt that the work should not be stopped, and the meetings in the Sixth U. P. church are to be continued; the Sixth and Seventh churches uniting, and their pastors being assisted by Prof. O. J. Thatcher. These meetings are proving successful, and new members are being added to the churches daily. It is felt that the blessing to the Allegheny churches has only begun. The members are revived, and the spirit of work is upon them. Arrangements have been made for a series of meetings in Carnegie Hall, to be conducted by Major Whittle, to continue for one week. These meetings are under the auspices of the United Presbyterian churches of Allegheny. Under God's blessing a harvest of souls will be gathered.

—The Day of Prayer for Colleges was followed up in Kidder Institute, Missouri, by services every evening, and at the meeting Feb. 6, twenty young men professed conversion. The meetings will probably be continued either there or at the Congregational church.

—Fifteen Swedish missionaries, in addition to the number lately reported, stopped in San Francisco on their way to join their companions in Shanghai. Welcome meetings were held in the Congregational Swedish church, the house being crowded.

—Union revival services at Cheboygan, Wis., have been held continuously for the last five weeks under the lead of the pastors of the Methodist and Congregational churches. More than eighty persons have expressed a desire to live a Christian life.

—On the last Sabbath in March Rev. Isaac Hyatt, having resigned, will close a six years' pastorate with the Gilford Village church, N. H. During that time the parsonage property has been improved, important repairs have been made on the church edifice, and thirty-nine persons have been added to the church. Bro. Hyatt is a good preacher, a faithful pastor, and an efficient worker on all lines of general Christian endeavor. He desires to locate near some institution where his sons can be educated.

—The committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States on the revision of the confession of faith after a very harmonious session lasting eleven days, completed its work and adjourned at Washington Feb. 16. The changes made have generally met with unanimous approval. Its work will be reported to the assembly in Detroit next May and by it referred to the Presbyterians for their adoption or rejection. The changes made in the statements of the confession have been of great importance but have in no way impaired the integrity of the system or doctrine so long held by the church.

—East Liverpool, Ohio, has been having a revival for the past four weeks and committees of men and women are visiting the saloons insisting on the keepers closing up and embarking in more honorable business.

—Preparations to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the death of John Wesley on the evening of March 19 are being made by the Chicago Methodist Social Union. The exercise will be held at the Auditorium and addresses will be made by Bishop Warren, Rev. J. M. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate, and President Rogers of the Northwestern University. A chorus of 300 voices under the direction of William L. Tomlins, will render oratorio and choral voluntaries.

—The women of the Presbyterian churches are organizing themselves into church temperance societies to cooperate with the General Assembly's permanent temperance committee for the promotion of temperance in the homes, churches, and Sabbath-schools. There are to be women's temperance societies, just as there are women's missionary societies, in all the churches of this denomination. This movement is in the nature of a protest against the political drift of a large part of the organized temperance work of women, and promises largely in an awakening of the church to the need of temperance work, as a part and parcel of its efforts for building up Christ's kingdom.

—Some totals of the statistics of the Protestant churches of the United States have just been put forth by Dr. H. K. Carroll, the statistician in charge, which give a general idea of the numerical strength of the different religious denominations in the United States. According to the statement put forth, the number of titles of distinct religious bodies in the United States, nearly all of which should be classed as Protestants, is 131. Fourteen of the leading groups are subdivided as follows:

	Sects.	Members.
Adventists	7	119,212
Baptists	15	3,974,589
Congregationalists	1	475,608
Episcopalians	2	459,642
Lutherans	1	1,056,000
Methodists	18	4,747,130
Mennonites	4	100,000
Moravians	1	11,219
Presbyterians	13	1,259,234
Quakers	3	83,930
Reformed	3	277,732
Unionistic	2	270,000
Unitarians	7	206,500
Universalists	1	38,780

—The Illinois conference of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church of Augustana Synod met in its twenty-second annual convention Tuesday evening last, in Gethsemane church, corner of Huron and May streets, Rev. M. C. Ranseen, pastor. The conference was opened by the usual annual sermon, preached by Rev. C. A. Evald, Vice-president. The conference numbers eighty pastors and about 100 delegates. The report of the retiring President, Rev. M. C. Ranseen, showed a marked and encouraging progress, both temporally and spiritually. The conference numbers 137 congregations, with a communicant membership of 25,256, and an estimated value of church property of $825,575. Five congregations and ten pastors have been received by the conference during the past year. Six pastors have removed from its bounds. Two of the oldest members of the conference have died during the year.

—The Christian Stewards' League, which is prosecuting the tithing movement vigorously, has secured the co-operation of important periodicals representing the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the Methodists, and the Congregationalists. The object of the society is to engage Christians to pledge themselves to give at least one-tenth of their incomes to the support of religious institutions. The league meets the first Monday evening of each week. The special effort of the league is directed to Christianizing the money power.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Seven thousand dollars are annually distributed by Vassar in aid of poor students.

—In Hungary the study of Greek has been abolished, while in Italy it is treated as an optional aid to philology.

—Alexander Montgomery, of San Francisco, has given $250,000 to the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of California.

—The University of Oxford has appliances for printing the Bible in one hundred and fifty different languages and dialects.

—One hundred and seventy-five out of the three hundred and sixty-five colleges in the United States publish newspapers.

—In six years, 389 students of the Prussian public schools have committed suicide through fear of "flunking" on examinations.

—The Crouse Memorial Hall, at Syracuse University, is the finest college building in America. Its original cost was $700,000.

—Statistics show that the 94 universities of Europe have 1,723 more professors, and 41,814 more students than the 360 colleges of the United States.

—The trustees of Columbia College have received and accepted the resignation of the venerable Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, LL.D., of the law school, and placed his name on the emeritus list, which gives a half salary for life. Prof. Dwight has been identified with Columbia since its organization in 1858. He is now 69 years of age.

—One of the three daughters of Mr. Rockefeller, the Baptist philanthropist, and head of the Standard Oil Company, while a student at Vassar, had a handsome allowance in the way of money from home. Instead of spending this on rich gowns and apartments she paid for two years the tuition of a girl from the country who was not able to pay them herself.

—Howard University, Washington, D. C., has 444 students in attendance, an increase of eighty-one since last year. These students are distributed in the following manner: medical, 125; law, 63; theological, 36; college, 21; preparatory, 40; normal and industrial, 158. Five hundred volumes have been added to the library, 300 from provision made by Congress, during the last session.

—Prof. S. G. Barnes, Ph. D., resigns his professorship in Iowa College to enter the ministry. He has held the professorship of Rhetoric, English Literature and Anglo-Saxon seventeen years, entering upon it immediately after graduating at Lafayette College. He has also instructed in Christian Evidences, Esthetics and Art, and since Dr. Magoun ceased to teach, in Logic and Moral Philosophy. Lafayette bestowed upon him the degree of Doctor in Literature last summer.

—Five of the most profitable industries of the Normal school at Tuskegee, Ala., viz., blacksmithing, wheelwrighting, tinsmithing, harness making and shoemaking have so far outgrown their quarters as to be carried on at great disadvantage. With $1,000 the students can saw the lumber, burn the bricks and put up a brick building 40x120, two stories, by which the capacity of these industries will be more than doubled and the ability of the school to aid needy students equally increased.

—In Cornell University there is an organization of students known as the "Mock Congress." It has a speaker and committees like the House of Representatives. Its members represent the States and the opposing political parties. Bills are introduced and acted upon. It elects a functionary known as "President of the United States," who appoints his Cabinet and is empowered to send in messages. The "Mock Congress" affords an excellent political training to its members, and it is probable that an organization of the kind will be started in New York.

—The Day of Prayer for Colleges was observed at Tabor College, Iowa. All recitations were omitted, and students and faculty met at 9 o'clock for prayer and consecration meeting. In the afternoon students met in different bands for prayer, and in the evening another general meeting for the whole community was held at the church. Meetings afterward continued with increasing interest. Fifteen united with the church Feb. 1. All the students in the college department and about two-thirds of those in the preparatory department are professing Christians.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Harrison and family, as also Secretaries Proctor and Tracy, are expected to visit California, Oregon, and Washington in May. Senator Stanford will provide the transportation.

The anti-tobacco law for the District of Columbia, for which the Washington W. C. T. U. have been working so faithfully, has passed both houses of Congress. The free coinage of silver is defeated for the present Congress.

The president sent to the Senate on Saturday the name of ex-Gov. Charles Foster of Ohio to succeed the late William Windom as secretary of the treasury. Mr. Foster was born in Ohio in 1828. He has been elected governor of Ohio three times and was four times representative in Congress. On the tariff question Mr. Foster is more liberal than Mr. McKinley; on silver and other financial questions he is not an extremist.

CHICAGO.

The contract for the work at Jackson Park for the World's Fair was signed by President Gage. It forbids the employment of alien labor.

President Nettlehorst, of the Board of Education, ordered Principal Charles H.

You've tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription have you and you're disappointed. The results are not immediate.

And did you expect the disease of years to disappear in a week? Put a pinch of time in every dose. You would not call the milk poor because the cream doesn't rise in an hour? If there's no water in it the cream is sure to rise. If there's a possible cure, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is sure to effect it, if given a fair trial. You get the one dollar it costs back again if it don't benefit or cure you. We wish we could give you the makers' confidence. They show it by giving the money back again, in all cases not benefited, and it'd surprise you to know how few dollars are needed to keep up the refund.

Mild, gentle, soothing and healing is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Cures the worst cases permanently. No experimenting. It's "Old Reliable." Twenty-five years of success.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOT WATER.

Two-thirds of the human body is warm water. Any lack of this element must therefore powerfully affect a person. It is evident also that the human body must have a strong affinity for water. Man can live without food much longer than without water; and the pangs of thirst are more severe than the pangs of hunger.

Hot water is one of the best of medicines. Most remedies are administered in hot water, and it is possible that the hot water often does as much good as the medicine, and perhaps even more.

In Hall's Journal of Health are some suggestions concerning the use of hot water in sickness:

"A strip of flannel or a napkin folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

"A towel folded several times and dipped in hot water, and quickly wrung and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works almost like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat or rheumatism as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly.

"Pieces of cotton dipped in hot water and kept applied to old sores or new cuts, bruises or sprains, is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals. I have seen a sprained ankle cured in an hour by showering it with hot water from a height of three feet.

"Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bed-time is the best of cathartics in the case of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to diet, will cure any case of dyspepsia.

"Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck."

To this we add that almost any pain will be relieved by laying a wet compress on the affected part. Boils will be less painful if thus treated, and will heal more quickly. A wet towel laid on the chest will frequently cure pain or congestion of the lungs. A linen cap wet and placed upon the head, will relieve congestion and nervousness, and induce sleep. And an injection of tepid water left in the bowels every night on retiring, will sometimes relieve piles, and promote general health of the system.

Water is a wonderful medicine;—cheap, convenient, abundant. Use it in health, and use it in sickness; and for your soul's health use from that "well of water" which "springeth up unto everlasting life."—The Common People.

"HOW DO WOMEN KILL TIME?"

The guileless man who asked this foolish question got this answer in the Washington Star, from a woman, who, with her husband, two children, and two servants, lived in a house with nine rooms. Having kept a statistical account for one year, she gave the result as follows:

"Number of lunches put up, 1,157; meals ordered, 963; desserts made, 172; lamps filled, 328; rooms dusted, 2,259; times dressed children, 786; visits received, 897; visits paid, 167; books read, 88; papers read, 553; stories read aloud, 234; games played, 329: church services attended, 125; articles mended, 1,236; articles of clothing made, 120; fancy articles made, 56; letters written, 426; hours in music, 20½; hours in Sunday-school work, 208; hours in gardening, 49; sick days, 44; amusements attended, 10. Besides the above, I nursed two children through measles, twice cleaned every nook and corner of my house, put up 75 jars of pickles and preserves, made 7 trips to the dentists's, dyed Easter eggs, polished silver, and spent seven days in helping nurse a sick friend who was ill, besides the thousand and one duties too small to be mentioned, yet taking time to perform."

Now we hope that man is satisfied; if not he can try it himself.

Women who suffer from nervous and physical debility find great help in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It produces the rapid effect of a stimulant, without reaction—the result being a permanent increase of strength and vigor, both of mind and body.

Man is often deceived in the age of a woman by her gray hair. Ladies, you can appear young and prevent this grayness by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

A Good Reputation.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" have been before the public for many years, and are everywhere acknowledged to be the best remedy for all throat troubles. They quickly relieve Coughs, Sore Throat, and Bronchial Affections. Price, 25 cents. For sale everywhere, and only in boxes.

We should esteem it a special favor if our readers would kindly name the Cynosure when answering any advertisement in our columns.

WHAT YOUR GREAT GRANDMOTHER DID.

She hetcheled the flax and carded the wool, and wove the linen, and spun the tow, and made the clothes for her husband and ten children. She made butter and cheese, she dipped tallow candles, to light the house at night, and she cooked all the food for her household by an open fireplace and a brick oven. Yes; and when she was forty years of age, she was already an old lady whose best days were over. Her shoulders were bent and her joints enlarged by hard work, and she wore spectacles and a cap.

Her great grand-daughter, with all the modern conveniences for comfort, refinement and luxury, may be as charming and attractive at forty-five as at twenty. Especially is this true if she preserves her health and beauty by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which wards off all female ailments and irregularities, cures them if they already exist, keeps the life current healthful and vigorous, and enables the woman of middle age to retain the freshness of girlhood upon brow and cheek, the light of youth in her eyes, and its elasticity in her step.

Go to your drug store, pay a dollar, get a bottle and try it—try a second, a third if necessary. Before the third one's been taken you'll know that there's a remedy to help you. Then you'll keep on and a cure'll come.

But if you shouldn't feel the help, should be disappointed in the results—you'll find a guarantee printed on the bottle-wrapper that'll get your money back for you.

How many women are there who'd rather have the money than health? And "Favorite Prescription" produces health. Wonder is that there's a woman willing to suffer when there's a guaranteed remedy to be had in the nearest drug store.

LODGE NOTES.

The corner-stone of the Henry W. Grady Hospital at Atlanta, Ga., was laid by the Grand Lodge of Masons on the anniversary of Mr. Grady's death.

At the fourth and last day's session of the Federation of Labor in Michigan, boycotts were ordered on the products of Peacock Company, of Rochester, N. Y.; the Gaaff, Fleischmann & Co. yeast, the Anheuser Bush Beer Co., and the Rochester Co-operative Company stoves.

The Masonic Home, for aged and infirm Masons, their widows and orphans, at Grand Rapids, Mich., was dedicated Tuesday with appropriate ceremonies by the Grand Lodge of Michigan. Hugh McCurdy, Deputy Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the United States, delivered the address.

The Italian murder in St. Paul, Minn., is now rumored to have been the work of the Mafia. It is believed by some that Radino was sent to St. Paul to organize a branch of the hated order. Radino came to St. Paul from Virginia about two weeks ago. He speaks very little English, and has been in this country but a very short time.

The report of the National Grange, held recently at Atlanta, Ga., shows that the past year has been a successful one to the organization. During the year 377 new granges have been formed and many dormant granges revived, the revenue being increased forty per cent. The women members have borne no small part in the success of the order.

The first annual convention of the United Mine-Workers of America opened in Columbus, O., Feb. 10, with fully 300 delegates present, representing fifteen States of the Union. The special object of the convention is to make definite arrangements for the inauguration of the eight-hour day May 1. The beginning of this movement has been delegated to this order by the other labor organizations.

Seventy of the seventy-six lodges, of Iowa, of the Ancient Order of United Workmen were represented at the session of the State Grand Lodge in Boone. The officers report a total membership in the State of 5,300. The death roll last year was twenty-six, a payment of $2,000 being made the heirs in each case. This was raised in twelve assessments. The gain in membership last year was 959. The officers collected $68,922.38 during the year.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians of the anthracite coal regions met at Pottsville, Pa., Feb. 11, in special session to take action on the contemplated effort to connect the order with the Molly Maguires of old, through the death notices which were recently received by prominent citizens of Girardville. Resolutions were adopted disclaiming all knowledge of such circulars; strongly condemning the perpetrators; calling upon Postmaster General Wanamaker to lend his assistance to ferret out the criminals of the sensational correspondence, and offering a reward of $500 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the guilty party.

From Shenandoah, Pa., comes the news that William and George Butairage, Matt Moldazes and John Lalurnikus, four Poles, have been committed to the county jail in default of $2,500 bail each for murderously clubbing and stabbing five of their fellow-countrymen who were instrumental in having a friend of one of the accused sent to jail for assault and highway robbery. The men named are ringleaders of a society which has for its main object the avenging of wrongs done its members and the payment of all expenses of members who get into trouble before the courts. Of late it has been almost impossible for the commonwealth to convict Poles of crime on account of the vast amount of testimony put up in favor of the accused. This kind of testimony is now believed to have been supplied by professional witnesses.

Permanent Results,

And not a mere temporary exhilaration, are produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine, being an alterative, and working constitutionally, through the blood, its effects may not be immediately apparent in all cases, but the gain in health and strength, through its persistent use, is real and lasting. It reaches every drop of blood in the body.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla —FOR— Debility.

"I have none but good words to speak regarding Ayer's Sarsaparilla. All during the winter I was languid, tired, and without any appetite, until I commenced the use of this remedy. I took three bottles. Its effects have been revivifying, and I feel as if I had entered a new life. I did not think it was in the power of medicine to produce such a wonderful change, as has Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my case."—Mrs. C. Johnson, 310 Hicks st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and also other preparations of a like nature, for the purposes of a blood-purifier, and, while receiving no good, but often positive harm, from others, I have always derived benefit from Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and have no hesitation in recommending it to any one in want of a reliable blood-purifier."—Mrs. M. C. Hopkinson, 110 Merrimack Corporation, Lowell, Mass.

☞ The safest and most reliable tonic, alterative, and diuretic is

"I was a great sufferer from a low condition of the blood and general debility, becoming, finally, so reduced that I was unfit for work. Nothing that I did for the complaint helped me so much as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a few bottles of which restored me to health and strength. I take every opportunity to recommend this medicine in similar cases."—C. Evick, 14 E. Main st., Chillicothe, Ohio.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is one of the very few proprietary medicines that I can honestly recommend. I have seen it used in this place, in a number of cases, with very satisfactory results, and I have used it in my own family, for salt-rheum, with abundant success. I consider it to be the leading blood-purifier of the day."—Charles C. Davis, Nashua, N. H.

"I suffered from general debility for fifteen years. A few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla completely cured me, and I now enjoy good health."—Mrs. J. F. McElhinney, Truro, N. S.

This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies." communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837. at their special request. NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

Ford of the Calhoun school to report at his post for duty Tuesday, Feb. 24, upon authority conferred upon him by the report of the committee on school management adopted at last night's meeting of the board of education.

COUNTRY.

Another sensation was caused Tuesday in N. Dakota by the action of the Senate on resubmission and capital removal. The Missouri slope members joined forces with the prohibitionists to save the capital for Bismarck and defeat resubmission. Resubmission was defeated by a vote of 18 to 12 and the removal of the capital by 24 to 5, and both questions are settled for two years.

Professor Alexander Winchell, of the University of Michigan, died Thursday morning.

The S. Dakota house has adopted a fence law to the effect that stock may range in all unorganized counties, no counties to be organized in the future until the majority of the voters thereof shall consent. The bill was finally passed. This will bring many cattlemen from Montana.

The Kansas house defeated the bill granting the women the right of suffrage and holding office. The bill had been recommended by the committee of the whole and was only defeated during the absence of its friends.

The lower house of the Montana Legislature defeated the bill fixing eight hours for a day's work in the mines. The miners almost unanimously favored the bill, but the mine-owners secured its defeat.

The firm refusal of the Pennsylvania railroad to consider the proposals of their men for an advance, has created a stir in railroad circles. General Manager Wood of the company says no proposition for an increase of wages at least will be accepted, and the men say it either means this, or a tie-up from Jersey City to Chicago, with all branches.

There seems to be a pretty strong sentiment among railroad managers just now in favor of a rate of 2 cents a mile for passenger traffic. A number of Eastern lines have practically come to an agreement to adopt that rate, and a few of the western roads are ready to put it into effect.

The new police administration of Indianapolis has announced that it will strictly enforce the laws. Sunday theatricals were stopped yesterday and the saloon men have been given notice that they must close at 11 o'clock during the week and remain closed on Sunday.

The case of the State vs. nineteen Italians for the murder of Chief of Police D. C. Hennessy of New Orleans was called Wednesday. The trial promises to be long, three hundred witnesses having been summoned.

Argument in the lottery case before the Supreme Court of Louisiana was closed Feb 18. It will be three weeks or more before a decision in the case is rendered.

The Meyer mine, near Scottdale, Pa., was set on fire yesterday morning by an explosion. Four pumpers are known to have been killed and six or seven men are reported missing. Fifty were at work when the explosion occurred.

The steamer Sherlock struck a Kentucky pier of the Chesapeake and Ohio bridge at Cincinnati while going down the river. She had on board thirty passengers and a crew of fifty or sixty. The boat went to pieces and floated down to Fifth street, where she sunk. She had on board 400 tons of freight. The cabin floated down the river, and at Riverside some of the crew got ashore in a skiff. Some were rescued at Fifth street. It is not known how many are lost. A harbor steamer went down the river in search of the missing people.

An immense rock, weighing at least two hundred pounds, fell from Duquesne heights, opposite Pittsburg, and crashed into the passenger coach of the Washington express on the Pan-Handle road, instantly killing one passenger and seriously injuring three others.

Ten persons were killed in a rear end collision in the Fourth avenue tunnel at New York Friday and seven were injured. Nine bodies were burned so as to be unrecognizable.

William Tecumseh Sherman, the last general of the United States army, was buried with military honors at St. Louis on Saturday. The funeral train from New York reached St. Louis at 9 o'clock A. M. The interment was at Calvary cemetery and Father Sherman, the dead general's son, recited the words of the Catholic burial service.

A fatal tenement-house fire in Brooklyn, the second within a week, caused the loss of six lives Saturday evening.

FOREIGN.

A terrific storm passed over Presburg, Hungary, Thursday, unroofing houses, tearing up trees by the roots, and doing an immense amount of other damage. The storm was followed by an earthquake which caused two large fires. One of the buildings which took fire was a girl's college.

In the British House of Commons the resolution in favor of disestablishment of the church in Wales was rejected Friday by a vote of 235 to 203.

The reserve forces of the civic guard were called out in the Charleroi district of Belgium Thursday in view of the threatening state of affairs caused by the workmen's demand for the passage of a universal suffrage law. The workmen's general committee regard this action upon the part of the authorities as a menace and as an indication of the refusal of the government to revise the electoral laws or to grant universal suffrage.

Herr Luerssen, the sculptor who modeled the bust of President Garfield, died suddenly Thursday from apoplexy in his studio. When the news of the death of Luerssen was communicated to his wife, she was so overcome with grief that she was seized with convulsions and shortly afterward died in a fit in spite of the efforts made to save her life.

There is great excitement among Canadian politicians, Sir John Macdonald having in his first speech since the dissolution of the Dominion Parliament, declared that he had evidence that the liberal party intended to betray Canada into the hands of the United States. He produced a printed document which he said had been seized by the police in a Toronto printing office, and which was intended to give the American Senators pointers on how to force Canada into annexation.

Transito Auraute, widow of Gen. Barrundia, who was killed by the Guatemalan officers on board the American steamer Acapulco and whose death resulted in the recall of Minister Mizner, has officially announced her intention of asking the United States government for $1,000,000 indemnity for the killing of her husband.

A dispatch from Afafite in Egypt, via Suakin, says a severe engagement was fought at Tokar Feb. 19 between the Egyptian troops who recently left El Teb and Osman Digma's forces. Nearly one thousand lives were lost. Osman Digma fled.

An explosion took place in the Spring Hill coal mines near Halifax, N. S., Saturday afternoon. A late dispatch says that miners who have come up say that the levels are blocked in the locality of the explosion with large piles of debris. The loss of life caused by the explosion is appalling. It is now feared that seventy men and boys are dead. Twenty-nine bodies have been recovered.

DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

The Rev. A. Antoine of Refugio, Tex., writes: As far as I am able to judge, I think Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic is a perfect success, for any one who suffered from a most painful nervousness as I did. I feel now like myself again after taking the Tonic.

Cured Entirely.

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 1888.

I, the undersigned, hereby state that my son had epileptic fits over two years but was cured by Pastor Koenig's remedy—entirely. I make this statement out of gratitude.

522 Race Street. JOHN NUENLIZT.

The undersigned knowing the above named J. Nuenlizt's family, is fully convinced of the truth of above statement.

P. M. SCHAEFER, Pastor of St. Franciscus Church.

Our Pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for the past ten years, and is now prepared under his direction by the

While the base ball business has quite generally sunk into a Sabbath-breaking affair, there has always been a gleam of hope in the fact that the National League has forbidden Sunday games. President Spalding of the Chicago club has given his ultimatum that there shall be no Sunday games or beer-selling on the grounds controlled by his organization, no matter what club is playing.

Governor Pattison of Pennsylvania has set an example for all our State executives, and given joy to all Christian people. He lately presided at a mass meeting, held to protest against opening the World's Fair on the Sabbath days. He also publicly declared himself as earnestly in favor of maintaining the sanctity of the day and discountenanced all secular pursuits and other methods of desecration. As one of the bulwarks of American civilization he holds that the Sabbath day should be preserved holy.

We feared the Michigan Prohibitionists might be tricked into nominating a prominent member of the lodge known as the Patrons of Industry for Judge of the Supreme Court, of their State. The lodge was ready to nominate him and a coalition was quite possible. The selection of J. R. Lang of Flint was made, we trust, to avoid the serious objection which would surely be raised if the candidate for so important an office had already once perjured himself by assuming secret oaths, incompatible with his vows as a citizen, and possibly those of the family and the church also. The State Convention adopted an able platform, acknowledging first of all "Almighty God" as the source of all moral power in the government. Its declarations were a much safer basis of political action than that proposed by the farmers' movement, while it would attain practically the same ends, and overthrow the saloon besides, which the secret part of labor politics dares not touch.

The Christian Conservator asks for a convention of "anti-secrecy churches," in which only denominations which rule out the lodge shall take part. We doubt the wisdom of such a classification, as tending to sectarianize the reform. The churches which maintain the truth respecting Baal worship at their communion tables, will not bring other Christian people to their platform except by joining with them in discussing the principles that justify and the Scriptures that command the separation. Within their own ranks they convert nobody. They may gain victories only without. Since the central attack of the lodge is upon our Lord Jesus Christ, all who truly love that most precious name should be invited and expected to join in repelling that enemy.

The wholesale merchants of New York, representing the dry goods, bagging and leather trades, have sent a testimonial to Mr. Blaine, thanking him for the reciprocity treaty with Brazil. There are 110 firms, representing $240,000,000 capital and various political parties who subscribe and say that the treaty is one of the best measures accomplished for the business of the country for years. If this be the case why should not an extension of these reciprocity treaties be made until all friendly governments are included. That would save half the time of our Congress spent in making faces across between Democrats and Republicans over tariff questions; it would save the necessity of keeping up at least one great party which exists for the sake of upholding tariff; and it would practically bring in free trade which will relieve our "oppressed" farmers and laborers. We take note that the brewers, whose humble servant Mr. Blaine has been making himself, have not their testimonial ready yet.

Since the Supreme Court set the grand keynote on the liquor business, declaring it the mother of a pestilent brood of evils, and that any community has the right to outlaw it, we are having the decisions of other courts adding to the force of public opinion as the explosions in a multiple-charge cannon continually accelerate the speed of the ball. Down in Missouri last year a company of women, made desperately brave by the distress the saloons of the place were bringing to their homes, marched in with hatchets and cleaned out the vile dens. They were arrested, but their trial was put off. Meantime the Supreme Court decision was given, and with such law before him the local judge decided that these devoted women had the right to abate a nuisance like an unlicensed saloon. Then the other day Judge Caldwell of Little Rock, Arkansas, dissolved an injunction granted against the State authorities of Kansas, to prevent their prosecuting criminally men charged with violating the prohibitory law of the State. Efforts to secure a resubmission of prohibitory constitutional clauses in Kansas and the Dakotas have failed. The good cause is not going back.

A national temperance convention has been called by Dr. T. L. Cuyler, president, and John G. Stearns, secretary, of the National Temperance Society of New York. It is to be held in the First Methodist church, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., beginning July 15th next. The bodies which are invited to send delegates are "all associations of ministers and churches, all general assemblies and synods, all general and annual conferences, classes, presbyteries, and religious, national, or State conventions, all national and State temperance organizations, all Woman's National, and State unions;" and as Mr. Stearns is a Freemason and has uniformly combined lodge work with his supposed efforts for temperance, the following lodges are invited by special mention of their names: "Grand Divisions Sons of Temperance, Grand Lodges of Good Templars, Grand Temples of Honor and Temperance, and other State temperance bodies." It is supposed that this will be an open meeting, but where one part of the invited guests are of the lodge, it is in the nature of an insult to open Christian bodies to invite them to join in a deliberative body on terms of equality, when the very nature of a secret society renders it continually open to the charge of unfairness and unscrupulous methods to carry its ends.

AN APPEAL TO MANHOOD.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

Lift up thy right hand to heaven!
Aye, lift it high, thy strong right hand! and swear
That every danger thou wilt meet and dare
Till the chains of wrong be riven.

March onward in the van!
Thou hast not need of blazoned badge or sword;
The best gift thou receivest from thy Lord
Is this,—to be a MAN.

For O! the word is sure,
That, braving every tide of shame and wrong,
In Him thy soul shall be forever strong,
Because thy heart is pure!

That voice still peals aloud!
It bids thee rise, oppression's chains to break.
It calls as when its rolling thunders spake
From Sinai's flaming cloud.

Like the chief of long ago,
Smite with strong hand the hard and flinty rock;
Till, torn and parted by the mighty shock,
The living waters flow.

Made captive by his will,
He walked and held the lightnings in his hand—
What then? thou in his strength may'st rise and stand
And bid the waves be still!

Look forward, up and on!
Keep step with God! He guides thy willing feet;
Thy heart with his own mighty heart shall beat
Till the field of death be won.

Then, to the thunder's voice
March onward still with brave, uplifted head,
Timing thy steps with God's majestic tread,
Till heart with heart rejoice.

Then lift thy hand to heaven!
Aye, lift it high, thy strong right hand! and swear
That every danger thou wilt brave and dare,
Till the chains of wrong be riven!

TEMPORARY EXPEDIENTS NOT RADICAL REMEDIES.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

"They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying peace, peace, when there is no peace." Jer. 6: 14.

The Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ provides but one remedy for sin. It must be forsaken. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but he that confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy." (Prov. 28: 13.) This is not only true of persons but is equally true of churches, communities and nations. In dealing with the evils of society, there is a constant tendency to temporize. If there is some expedient to avert immediate danger, the radical case can be at least postponed.

Among the kings of Judah there were a number of whom it is said that "they did right in the sight of the Lord,"—"Nevertheless the high places were not taken away, the people still offered incense in the high places." The people still worshiped Baal. It was only Hezekiah and Josiah, of whom it is said, "They broke down their high places and cut down their groves."

The fathers of this nation saw the evil of slavery. They had been importing slaves from Africa for nearly two hundred years, and thought that if the foreign slave-trade were suppressed, the institution would soon die out of itself. Others thought that there ought to be a limit put to its boundaries and that there should be no new slave States. Others thought there should be some mitigation of the abuses of the system: that the church should prohibit its members from buying and selling slaves, and that traveling preachers should not even own them. This was the position of the Methodists. Others thought that church members should be forbidden to separate families, and that they should give their slaves oral instruction and not require them to labor on the Sabbath.

The men who dared go farther and demand that we "undo the heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free," were regarded as the greatest fanatics. In the South a price was set on their heads, and the nominal Christian churches testified to their utter abhorrence of such proposals. But it was God's plan, and it was inevitable that it should prevail.

The same kind of temporizing policy is being adopted on the temperance question. It is going through the same phases of treatment as did that of slavery. The saloons must not be open on the Sabbath, nor sell after midnight, nor to boys, nor to habitual drunkards. Above all, the men who sell must be persons of "good moral character," etc. This is supposed to be an advanced step towards prohibition. But is it? It is rather a backward step; for whatever tends to make the saloon more respectable, will tend to its perpetuation.

The same temporizing policy is pursued by the churches on the lodge question. Either the whole matter is covered up and ignored, or the churches content themselves with asking that lodge members shall not let their lodge duties interfere with those that they owe to the church. They may offer incense to Baal, but not so much as they offer to the Lord, nor at the same time that other brethren are making their offerings.

The question of sectarian divisions is met in the same way. The command is, "that there be no schism in the body" (of Christ). (1 Cor. 12: 12-25.) To this the response of the church is, that there ought to be no more schisms, and that among existing sects there ought to be "denominational comity," or "church federation." Is there no good in this? Certainly, but it is just the kind of good that was done by kind treatment to slaves, or by closing saloons on the Sabbath. Neither is an adequate remedy. Those who propose them seek to "heal the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying peace, peace, when there is no peace." Radical reformation is the only true remedy.

John L. Sullivan, it is said, has not been expelled from the order of Elks, as reported. We have our opinion of the elk or the moose or any other horned game animal that would fraternize with Sullivan.—Northwestern Mail, Madison, Wis.

"When shall we three meet again?" There were delegates from the "Free-thinkers," "Saloon-keepers," and "Seventh-day Adventists" in Sacramento last week, in fond accord, opposing the proposed enactment of a law for the protection of the "first day of the week." These people all wish to keep that day open to all sorts of intrusions. Some of them object to intrusions upon Saturday, but insist that the law shall not oppose them on Sunday. They observe Saturday with conscience, but don't wish other good people to put any conscience into Sunday, in any due proportion to their numbers. The world is so bad they don't enjoy Saturday very well; therefore, they would rather affiliate with infidels and rum-sellers than allow others to enjoy Sunday very well. It is a very bright and happy state of mind they are in. And what a mark in history this triumvirate must make.—Pacific.

SCHOOL POLITICS IN WISCONSIN.

BY REV. J. B. GALLOWAY.

Elections are over and men have had time to pause and consider the situation. The thoughtful must see that the ship of State has not yet weathered every gale. She is among the breakers in mid-ocean, surrounded by the fogs of error, ignorance and superstition; and whether or not she shall escape the rocks of destruction, is the question of questions. Her chart is not as good as it might be, and yet it seems to be too good for the motley crew, which she has picked up from every port. In Wisconsin all parties were astonished at the result. The Bennett law is so just and beneficent in its designs, that good men never dreamed of the storm of opposition with which it was to be met; but now, since all is over, we can trace the direction of the adverse winds—we can, without doubt, locate the storm-center. It is in the region of the Vatican. The perpetual and inveterate hatred of Rome to our public school system is simply taking form; that is all.

It was found by official investigation that in many of the parochial schools no English was taught, and not only so, but in some districts no public schools at all were being maintained. This is brought about in a very simple way. At the annual school meeting, when the question is reached, "How many months' school shall we have this year?" the enemies of the school can carry their point either by refusing to make a motion, or by voting it down if it is made. A Protestant minority is thus left without a school. The Bennett law points toward these abuses, but is not quite long enough to reach them. It should contain a section compelling the keeping of school in every district where there is a sufficient number of children. Germans almost unanimously voted with the Democrats. This was brought about principally by misrepresentation, which is not a lost art with demagogues; their national pride was appealed to. They were told that the aim of Americans was to down the Germans; that the next step would be to forbid the teaching of German; that it was a needless interference with parental authority, etc. The masses seemed to forget that law is made for the lawless and disobedient, and that only these will be affected by it. However, it will doubtless be repealed, as the Democratic party, by its platform, is pledged to do so; and they will have the power.

But after all this is a matter of little moment, when compared with the late decision of our Supreme Court, which puts a ban on the reading of the Bible in our public schools, especially if objection be made to such reading in any district. This is a surrender that forebodes disaster. The favor of God is necessary to all true prosperity; but how can we expect this, when his holy Word is set at naught? Can we expect the children to reverence as they ought the proscribed book? We have no standard of morals in our schools, yet every teacher is expected to teach morals. The foundations are surely being destroyed. We are heading toward Canossa! We are fast becoming the servants of men. The command that takes the Bible out of the hands of old or young is human, not divine; and whomsoever we obey his servants we are. Rome is the only church in our broad land making such a demand. All others are more than willing to leave the State free to obey God in this matter. Neither church nor state is in any danger from rendering obedience to the divine will. The danger lies in another direction—in obeying the doctrines and commandments of men. Whenever the measuring line of God's Word is applied to politics or to legislative enactment, politicians and others are ready to howl as from the midst of purgatory, "Union of church and state!" while at the same time they are bowing the knee to the only church in Christendom which believes that a man, by virtue of his position in it, is king of kings and lord of lords. They do not seem to know that this harlot is ready at any time to mount our beast and drink our blood, and land us in perdition; and that God alone can deliver us from such a death.

We should learn from these developments:

1. The uncertainty of human affairs because of the instability and corruptness of ignorant masses; that democratic government has no title to eternal life; that we cannot say of our Republic, "Thou art that head of gold." Although we may not belong to the prophetic earth, yet at best we are but iron and clay, partly strong and partly brittle. "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay," Dan. 2: 42. And if we will not be taught of God, the rod of iron will break the potter's vessel, Psa. 2.

2. The necessity of moral and spiritual education, in order that men may be able to discern between good and evil—right and wrong, and not be forever the prey of demagogues.

3. The necessity of a revival of true Protestantism. Let all the churches of Christ, with one mind and one mouth, protest against Godless and Christless government; against Christless thanksgiving proclamations to Christian people; against the proscribing of God's Word, which ought to run and be glorified; against Jesuitism and every other secret government; against the aggressiveness, the principles, and the practices of Rome, which if allowed to go on to perfection, would destroy every free church and every free state.

Vernon, Wis.

THE NEW ORLEANS CLAN-NA-GAEL.

Secret societies even in America sometimes have the power of life and death over their members. While it is hoped that the recent murder of the chief of police of New Orleans by the Mafia, the Sicilian secret society, may end in the suppression of that organization in this country, it is evident that the task will be a difficult one. It will be easier because its members, being all Italians, cannot lose themselves in the mass of the people, and, conscious that they are thus marked, may be terrified into submission by the menace of expulsion or extermination. But the fact that, despite the efforts of the police force and the arrest of suspects, no direct evidence against the society has thus far been obtained, indicates that witnesses have been spirited away, or that in view of the death sentence pronounced by the organization upon traitors, they are not procurable. As the members of the Mafia, like those of other societies employing murder to attain their ends, fear their own law more than that of the land, in that its operation is never relaxed or mitigated and hangs over the offender as long as he lives, the ordinary civil law is not strong enough to deal with them, and the society thus continues its existence in spite of the government. So far as is known, the chief idea of the Mafia is to extort money from the rich to give to the poor, but its power is evidently used for other and more disreputable purposes, and in Sicily it systematically levies blackmail, and is even accused of hiring out assassins. All attempts to crush it by ordinary process of law have failed, as, indeed, they have in the case of all the principal secret societies sanctioning murder, even when the attempts have been made by governments not too scrupulous as to the methods employed. The group of Italian societies called Carbonari, may be fairly held to have beaten the governments, though attacked by several Italian administrations, by the Austrian government, and by the Roman Church, which may be supposed to have known its motives as well as actions. The Nihilists have never been rooted out, though they are few in numbers, and the Russian police use about any means they like, legal or illegal, are backed by overwhelming physical force, and have the sympathy of the masses in their efforts. The Triad, the immense Chinese secret society, has peristently defied the efforts of the Peking authorities to suppress it, though the latter simply exterminate its members wherever known; and the Singapore government could do nothing with the Chinese society there, but for its ability to shell the city from the water. The Camorra maintains its hold in Naples, though unpopular with all classes of society; a once strong secret society exists in France, though now inactive; and the efforts of the British government have failed to crush the Irish societies, though its efforts are indorsed by the Catholic Church to which their members belong. The societies die, of course, but mainly from internal dissension or lack of sufficient motive to live, the ordinary law, depending for its successful operation upon the procurement of evidence, in these cases not procurable, lacking the strength to deal with them. The signal exception to the rule of failure is the suppression of the Thugs by the Indian government, a task regarded as wholly impossible, the members of the society being scattered through a population of 250,000,000, with no outward sign to distinguish them, and bound together by religious creed. But in this struggle the government possessed advantages not to be obtained elsewhere, in the exemption of its officials from assassination by the Thugs by reason of religious scruples, in the freedom of witnesses from terrorism by subjection to life-long detention, and in the exact truthfulness of the testimony they gave. But no other governments can, in their conflict with secret societies, hope for these advantages; and although they cannot relax their efforts for the suppression of crime, it is to be feared that the societies will continue to baffle them until they die through extinction of the motives that brought them into being.—Joseph Cook in Our Day.

THE CAMORRA.

The importation into this country of a Sicilian secret organization, the Mafia, claiming a jurisdiction over its members and over people of their race of greater extent and more relentless rigor than that exercised by our own government, makes it more than probable that another Italian product of equally poisonous character will before long show itself in this country, and particularly in the larger centers of population. This is the Camorra, the most infamous of all secular orders which have ever existed.

The Camorra, it is claimed, was organized in Naples by Spanish outlaws who came there during the wars in the first half of the sixteenth century with the Spanish troops of Charles V. The name itself is said to be of Spanish origin—the Spanish word camorra meaning quarrel or dispute. It was not, however, until the beginning of the present century, and after the growth of revolutionary sentiment directed against both the church and the State, that the Camorra became a prominent factor in Italian society. Its loyalty to church and State was never doubted by either, and the government of the Bourbons relied more upon the Camorra than upon its own police for the suppression of all liberal or revolutionary tendencies.

IRON RULE OF THE CAMORRA.

The city of Naples was the seat of the government of the Camorra, which dealt with all the people of the Neapolitan government much in the same manner as the authorities instituted by the king. The Camorra assessed regular taxes upon all business men and property holders and collected practically a percentage—as high as 10 per cent—from all incomes it could ascertain. The men in high places, dukes, bishops and priests, bankers and beggars, private coachmen, domestics, hack drivers and messengers, hotels, gambling houses and dens of prostitution, landlords, the mistresses of aristocrats and the common street-walker, the great merchant and the huckster, the professional man and the most humble shop-keeper, the man of leisure and the professional thief and cut-throat—not one of them was overlooked by the tax-gatherers of the Camorra. The latter even maintained a kind of custom house and leveled a tariff on all goods entering Naples for consumption. As the Camorra knew but one punishment, death, its collections met with but little resistance.

SUPREME POWER OF THE ORDER.

The kingdom was divided into a number of Camorra districts, twelve of which were made up of portions of the city of Naples. The supreme power of the order was rested in the "vicaria," or supreme council, whose president was known only as the "general" and conducted all the busi- of the order with the absolute independence of a dictator. Then there was a "grand council," composed of all the heads or "capi" of the different district councils, whose powers were advisory and in which was vested the control over the finances of the order and the distribution of its revenues among the subordinate councils. Not a penny could be collected for the Camorra which had not to be turned over, under penalty of death, to the grand council. It is quite significant that for a number of years preceding the fall of the Bourbon regime the "general" and the "capi" of the Camorra councils in the city of Naples were in receipt of regular salaries paid by the Bourbon chief of police.

QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERSHIP.

The object of the Camorra was mutual protection and support for its members, and a cruel, relentless war against all enemies of the existing order of things in Naples, and particularly against all who dared oppose the authority and decrees of the order. Its membership came mostly from the lowest walks of life, but received, during the period of its greatest power—say, from 1820–1861—many accessions from the ranks of the aristocracy. Applicants for membership had to prove a comparatively spotless record—a man who had stolen or who permitted prostitution of the female members of his family would be rejected at once. On the other hand, murder committed to satisfy personal spite or in resentment of some injury was a great recommendation. The novice became at first a "giovane onorato," an honored youth, and was placed in charge of an older member who had the life of the novice practically in his hands. The next degree could only be earned by some bold act in the service of the order, an attempted daylight assassination, for instance, or a dagger-thrust at some citizen professing himself within the novice's hearing as opposed to Bourbon or ecclesiastical rule. This would make him a "piccinotto di sgarro," or man of the knife, and eligible for the more important work of the order—the execution of its sentences of death, its robberies and incendiaries.

THE MAN OF THE KNIFE.

The man of the knife had to serve the order a long time, sometimes as long as ten years—before he would be deemed worthy of the last degree, or actual membership in the "parranza" or club of his district. The ceremonies of initiation were of the most trying nature and well calculated to make the superstitious and ignorant Italian a blind tool in the hands of the order. The Camorrist assumed obligations of fidelity and secrecy, but gained support for himself and his family from the treasury of the order. Among the Camorrists existed absolute honesty and loyalty, and no one ever hesitated to risk his own life in the defense or protection of a fellow-member of the order. All difficulties or quarrels among members of the Camorra were settled by its authority, which was extended also over all against whom a Camorrist had a grievance and all others who through a Camorrist applied for the order's protection. The order administered justice with dramatic rigor, but also with a great show of impartiality when only its members were concerned. Embezzlement of Camorra funds, violations of the seventh and eighth commandments to the injury of Camorrists and refusal to execute a death sentence were punished with death. Each Camorrist carried two knives of a peculiar shape, by which he was identified and which were the only instruments for the execution of death sentences.

UNDER BOURBON RULE.

The common people stood in great awe of the Camorra and eagerly sought its protection. Under the two last Bourbon kings it was the ally of the police and was employed principally in the hunting down of supposed revolutionists or sympathizers with the cause of united Italy. Toward the end of the Bourbon regime the Camorra entered into negotiations with the liberal movement, but denounced the members of the secret liberal committee, when its terms were rejected, to the police. The duke of San Donato, to-day one of the most popular men in Italy, had to flee at that time from Naples, and even after the fall of the Bourbons, December, 1860, he received a dagger-thrust from a Camorrist which came near proving fatal.

GARIBALDI AND THE CAMORRA.

Garibaldi intrusted the Camorra with the maintenance of public order in the city of Naples when he first took possession of it, but the Piedmontese police waged a relentless war against the order, whose members organized themselves into bands of robbers very similar in character to the bands of outlaws which sprung up in this country after the close of the civil war. It was supported by Francis I. and Cardinal Antonelli, and did not cease to be an acknowledged power until Gen. Lamarmora and Prefect Spaventa instituted a perfect hunt, which resulted in the capture, incarceration and execution of hundreds of Camorrists, not to speak of the many more who were killed while resisting arrest.

The Camorra is not dead, however, and still rules in secret over Neapolitans in and out of Italy. A great many Camorrists have been "assisted" to emigrate and have been forbidden the country; the order itself has been deprived of all legal standing. Only a few weeks ago in Caserta about two hundred men were arrested for being members of a Camorra council. The lower ranks of Italian society have been so thoroughly poisoned that its members still continue to rely more upon the "protection" of a secret organization of outlaws than upon their regularly constituted government, and there is still enough bigotry, fanaticism and ignorance among Italians to make them ready victims of the Camorra.—Chicago News, Feb. 18, 1890.

THE IDENTITY.

THOUGH MASONRY IS IDENTICAL WITH THE ANCIENT MYSTERIES, IT IS SO IN THIS QUALIFIED SENSE, THAT IT PRESENTS BUT AN IMPERFECT IMAGE OF THEIR BRILLIANCY.—Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, in "Morals and Dogma," p. 624.

"The Blue Degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the Princes of Masonry."—(Morals and Dogma, p. 819.)

In the Ancient Mysteries (those sacred rites which have furnished so many models for Masonic symbolism), the opening ceremonies were of the most solemn character. The sacred herald, in the Ancient Mysteries, commenced the ceremonies of opening the greater initiations by the solemn formula of "Depart hence, ye profane!" to which was added a proclamation which forbade the use of any language which might be deemed of unfavorable augury to the approaching rites.—From Manual of the Lodge by Albert G. Mackey, Past General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, p. 12.

The circumambulation among the pagan nations was referred to the great doctrine of Sabaism, or sun-worship. Freemasonry alone has preserved the primitive meaning, which was a symbolic allusion to the sun as the source of physical light, and the most wonderful work of the Grand Architect of the Universe.—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, p. 24.

The instructions which constitute the hidden or esoteric knowledge in Freemasonry are forbidden to be written, and can only be communicated by oral intercourse of one Mason with another. This is another instance of the great antiquity of the usages of Freemasonry, which is presenting such collateral evidences of its venerable age.

In all the ancient mysteries, the same reluctance to commit the esoteric instructions of the hierophants to writing is apparent, and hence the secret knowledge taught in their initiations was preserved in symbols, the true meaning of which was closely concealed from the profane.—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, p. 27.

It must, however, be confessed that many of the interpretations given in this section are unsatisfactory to the cultivated mind, and seem to have been adopted on the principle of the old Egyptians, who made use of symbols to conceal rather than to express their thoughts. Learned Masons have been, therefore, always disposed to go beyond the mere technicalities and stereotyped phrases of the lectures, and to look in the history and the philosophy of the ancient religions, and the organization of the ancient mysteries, for a true explanation of most of the symbols of Masonry, and there they have always been enabled to find this true interpretation.—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, p. 37.

The spurious Freemasonry of the Tyrians was called the Mysteries of Thammuz. It was celebrated by Hiram with all the pomp and solemnity which characterized these institutions in any part of the world. And while the Tyrians practiced Operative Masonry as a science from which they derived both pleasure and profit, their near neighbors were engaged in the beauteous celebrations of Speculative Masonry, under the superintendence of their Grand Master, David, King of Israel. A league of the strictest amity and brotherly love subsisted between these celebrated men, as the representatives and Grand Masters of the two branches or divisions of Freemasonry.—From Lecture VIII. Theocratic Philosophy of Freemasonry by Rev. G. Oliver, D.D., of the Collegiate Church, Wolverhampton, p. 112, Vol. X., Universal Masonic Library.

It was not by mere accident that certain symbols were placed in and about Egyptian temples. They were potent means of teaching divine truths to the masses who could not read. The style of worship now in use, which glorifies deity by words and phrases conveying praise and adulation, was not then in use. Simple and sublime truths were taught instead. The Supreme was thought of as a principle and not a person, and represented as manifested in countless forms and modes, visible and invisible. The Royal Masonic Rite devotes a part of its work to teaching the truths of all antiquity as they are known and explained in the light of modern research and scientific inquiry. What is promised in the blue lodge is fulfilled in this rite, and in no other.—From Lecture on the Royal Masonic Rite by Dr. Darius Wilson, K. T., 33°, in the Grand Opera House, New York, 1885, p. 21.

Masonry, as in the days of the great Dionysiac mysteries in ancient Greece, is calculated to again become the popular faith of mankind. Only a few years since, a Congress of Freethinkers met at Brussels, Europe, wherein nearly all civilized peoples of the world were represented, in most cases by Freemasons, every one of whom was a firm and steadfast supporter of faith in the Great Architect of the Universe, a teacher of the "Philosophy of Science," and a believer in the coming "Federation of the World," "The Republic of Man."—A. L. Rawson, LL.D., 32°, in comments on lecture on Royal Masonic Rite, p. 34.

LABOR TROUBLES.

At present the workingman can hardly make both ends meet. Is it not because he insists on creating capitalists out of saloon-keepers, and not content with that, on submitting all his rights of citizenship to the same object of worship?

The saloon in politics is the most hideous abuse of the day; but where would it be if the workingmen withdrew their support from it? It keeps them poor. It keeps our politics corrupt. It supplies a constant stream of base adventurers, who disgrace the American name at home and abroad. It makes the terms "public office" and "public plunder" synonomous. It stifles progress, fosters pauperism, brutalizes husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the workingman's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart. Yet, when labor is most disturbed, when the demand for advanced wages is the loudest, when strikes are most frequent, when hunger and misery are most rife in the homes of the poor, the saloon flourishes still. There may be no bread at home, but there is always beer and whisky at the bar; and the men who consider themselves the victims of circumstances, and the "thrall" of capital, squander their earnings and spend their savings in these dens.

Can there be a serious labor question while this state of things continues? Can workingmen talk gravely of their wrongs, while it is plain to all the world that, if they only saved the capital, they would be comfortable.—Atlantic Monthly.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Matters municipal—The Order of Columbia—A curious parallel from natural history—A Boston saloon-keeper sued: the verdict against him.

There is a proposition to annex all the towns within ten miles of Boston to that city, thus giving her a population of nearly a million. But the towns in question are in no hurry to be annexed and become a portion of our rum-ruled metropolis. This passion for territorial extension seems to belong to all great cities. It was a characteristic of ancient Babylon; and her modern prototype, London, has attained her present mammoth proportions in the same way.

The law which limits the height of Boston's public buildings has its opposers, who seem to think that when a man buys a few square feet of earth he also owns the heavens above it. But if wise counsels prevail a similar law will be passed in all our American cities forbidding the erection of these Babel-like structures. How few of us, by the way, who own a modest plot of ground, ever think of the vastness of our possessions when measured in a perpendicular direction; four thousand miles of subterraneous property only limited by the boundary line—which, it is pleasant to reflect, will never be the subject of litigation in the courts of the little freehold of our opposite neighbor in China. Think of that marvelous sepulchre of extinct creations over which we are daily treading, on which is traced in characters that make the oldest written language a thing of yesterday, the history of that strange past when you and I were not, and the megatherium and the pterodactyle and other fearfully and wonderfully named creatures possessed the land.

In the present General Assembly of Rhode Island there is a strong opposition to the investment insurance orders, so that the bill to prevent them from doing further business in that State has a good prospect of passing. Rhode Island has not recently done herself much credit, but if she will set a good example in this respect to her sister States, it will help to slightly redeem her record. For cold-blooded selfishness, and deliberate purpose to use the misfortunes of three-fourths of the members as the only means of keeping their promises to the remaining fourth, these endowment orders are certainly a masterpiece. That idleness is the mother of crime, has come to be an axiom with all practical philanthropists. At the Concord Reformatory the boys are instructed in different useful trades, so that when their term of confinement is over they can take their place at once—if they will—as respectable members of society; but the Journeyman Plumbers' Union has lately been investigating the matter through a committee of three—all bearing Irish names—and their indignant characterization of such instruction to "jail-birds" as "simply abominable, disgraceful and criminal," would be ludicrous if it were not sad to see how far human selfishness can go. Imagine our governments, State and municipal, run by these foreign-officered labor clubs, and we can imagine a state of society in which it would be about as pleasant to live, as treading on the thin crust of a live volcano.

The Order of Columbia is one of the so-called "patriotic" orders, closely allied to the Know-Nothings, which has risen in the wake of the present Romish agitation. Its motto is, "liberty, fraternity, and equality;" and the object for which it works, as set forth in the ritual, is praiseworthy to the highest degree. It declares, "that as intelligence, virtue and sobriety are the safeguards of freedom, and eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, now and ever, we declare in favor of free schools, freedom of conscience, free speech, free press, the right of every one to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and equal rights, privileges and opportunities for all, and we demand from all citizens loyalty to but one flag, the flag of our Union; and fidelity to but one sovereign, the sovereign people." This sounds exceedingly well. So does the statement that "the Order of Columbia is not a religious or a political organization," though its force is somewhat blunted by the fact that this is a common assertion of all the secret orders. The ritual says on this point, "Write the memories of the past upon the enduring tablets of time, but let not partisan bitterness, sectional strife, nor religious bigotry mar the beauty of our temple of freedom." It has five degrees—thus showing its Masonic parentage—but instead of being taken from the Bible or the legend of Hiram Abiff, they are all founded on some event in our national history, from America's discovery by Columbus to the war of Independence. This is certainly better than travestying the Scriptures, or going back to the old heathen mysteries for material on which to found their initiation ceremonies; but just as with the Good Templars, the secrecy is the dead fly in their pot of ointment. It is bringing in, to help a patriotic cause, a policy utterly opposed to the genius of Protestantism and our free institutions. The Order of Columbia is a curious copy in miniature of our United States Government. The local branches are not called lodges but "settlements;" the settlements themselves form a State government, with governor and legislature, and the States form a national government, with a congress, president and cabinet. This is an imperium in imperio to perfection. It reminds me of another curious fact discovered by modern science, that the tiger is afflicted with a minute parasite which, examined under the microscope, is seen to be itself a tiger in miniature, having all the parts pertaining to one. Is not the parallel well nigh perfect?

The Boston Herald favors what it states "to be a general demand among turfmen," that "betting within the enclosure of racing parks" be made a legalized business in Massachusetts. There is not much danger that such a demand will ever be conceded by our Legislature, but it is a little funny to think how the bare idea would shock many a good citizen of this commonwealth who believes high license—so long as men will drink—to be a very satisfactory way of settling the drink problem.

A Mrs. Edwards, who sued a saloon-keeper in Boston for $5,000 for selling liquor to her husband after he had been warned not to, has been awarded a verdict of $778. Probably her example would be more generally followed if the wives of drinking men were not as a rule very ignorant of their legal rites and too timid to enforce them.

New England's various State legislatures seem to have followed the bad example of Congress, and left all their most important business for the closing days of the session. Municipal Suffrage for women, the repeal of the liquor laws, and the question of biennial elections are yet to be heard from.

—The Presbyterian church has now in Alaska seven missions and four churches, with seventy to eighty communicants each. Besides the Presbyterian, the Moravian, the Protestant Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal, the Roman Catholic, and the Anglican churches have missions in Alaska.

—From the recent report of the Japanese Minister of Education it appears that education is now offered to all the children in Japan, and that there are nearly three millions of pupils in the public schools of the Empire. There is a remarkable growth of intelligence among the people. The standard of education is advancing, as is shown in the fact that many new studies have been introduced in the Imperial University of Tokyo.

—Dr. Arthur Mitchell, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, was greatly impressed in his recent visit, with the vast unoccupied fields in Central China. He found cities of from 75,000 to 300,000 with not one missionary of any denomination. These fields are open, too. "There is as little excuse," he says, "for leaving a city of 100,000 on the New York Central Railroad without a single preacher of the Gospel, as for leaving cities of that size and double that size utterly neglected within twenty-four hours of Shanghai."

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRO. JORDAN'S ELOQUENCE AGAINST RUM-SLAVERY.

Milton Junction, Wis., Feb. 22d, 1891.

The good people of this place have been enjoying a real treat. On the 14th of February at our regular Sabbath morning services, the Rev. L. G. Jordan (colored Baptist) occupied our pulpit, preaching from the words, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation." The sermon was a good one. His peculiar mode of expression made it sometimes a little ludicrous, but it was brought to a close in a most touching manner.

The evening following, he spoke to a full house on the temperance question. It was an able effort. Eloquence, logic, pathos and dramatic power all combined to make it entertaining, instructive and impressive. At the close he favored us with a touching song, beautifully rendered, in which we were urged "To fly to the rescue of somebody's boy."

On Wednesday evening, the 18th inst., he favored us with a lecture on the modern Esau. After briefly recounting the story of Esau, the speaker proceeded to enlighten his audience in regard to the foreign syndicate that is buying up the breweries of the country, and through them controlling the saloons and the liquor vote (as the saloons are mostly mortgaged to the breweries), intending by this means to hold the politics of our beloved nation in their grasp. "Esau sold his birthright for something to eat, and the American people are selling theirs for something to drink."

I hardly know what to say about this lecture. It was something new and startling, and full of instruction. I thought the first one excellent, but this one surpassed it in my opinion. He seemed to have perfect control of his audience both evenings. Sometimes they were laughing, sometimes crying, sometimes applauding, and sometimes it seemed as though the stillness of death reigned, broken only by that pleading, earnest voice. Some said they looked around to see how those took it that prayed liquor out and then voted it in, but as for myself, I had no time for anything of the kind. My eyes were on the speaker, for the burning words of eloquence that dropped from his lips brought up memories of the past. I thought of the only brother that gave his life to help redeem this man from the curse of American slavery. I thought of the burdens I had borne in consequence of that life being given up, and before me stood a man, born of a slave-mother, holding his audience spell-bound, as he plead "For God and home and native land." Don't you suppose I felt like thanking God from a full heart? Ah, yes. The trials of the past turned to joys and the tears to smiles.

May God help Bro. Jordan to keep very near the Cross.

I want to say to the Cynosure that although it hears nothing from me in its peculiar line of work, I am not dead. My heart is as deeply interested in its work as ever. Most sincerely,

MATTIE HARVEY WARDNER.

THE Y. M. C. A. IN KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky.

One of the greatest obstacles to the unity and efficiency of Christians in our land, and especially in the South, is the spirit and practice of caste. So long as acknowledged Christians, though divided by no denominational lines, refuse to worship together or to unite in the celebration of the Lord's Supper, there can be little brotherly love, and little evidence of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Up to a recent period the Y. M. C. A. has, at its State conventions, manifested much of this spirit. Colored delegates from Berea have been denied recognition, and politely told that they were not wanted.

I am glad to note a change for the better. Last week the State Y. M. C. A convention met in Lexington, and continued from Wednesday to Sunday night. The attendance was large and the meeting one of great interest. Berea College was representsd by six delegates, three white and three colored. Last night they made their public report. They found they were not the only colored delegates, but there were two from Louisville, representing a local Y. M. C. A. They were received, and in the main most kindly entertained and treated. The only marked evidence of discrimination was in the public gathering for refreshments, when the colored delegates were provided with a separate table.

Perhaps there were some of the delegates who would not have scrupled to eat with colored people, but most of Kentucky Christians, including some who profess holiness, would under no consideration be found eating at a table with a person who had a suspicion of African blood in his veins. Yet these persons have mingled with Negroes all their lives, often been nursed from the breasts of a black woman, and they profess to like them "if they only keep their place," which is that of a servile caste.

Very slowly, and in spite of some religious teachers, this feeling is giving way. The influence of a large and growing number of cultured Christian gentlemen and gentle-women cannot fail to, sooner or later, break down the caste spirit. The best Christian sentiment already repudiates it, and when this shall prevail, and not until then, shall we have solved the great question of the unity of our nation. I believe the Y. M. C. A. movement is having an important influence in this direction. Yours in the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

ANOTHER MACEDONIA CALLS.

LEXINGTON, Oklahoma, Indian Ter.

I belong to the Wesleyan Methodists; am laboring here as a missionary in Oklahoma. I moved here from Dakota and have a letter from that conference. I am doing what I can for the Master, to advance the cause of truth as it is in Jesus. But I find that the secret power is also here trying to overthrow the church of God.

Now, what I have been praying for, is the means to let the secret out and let the light on the people; and while I was thinking how much I would like to have money to buy anti-secret literature to distribute, I found one of the N. C. A. circulars among some tracts. I notice there is a fund to provide ministers and missionaries with the Cynosure and other literature.

When I saw that I felt as though my prayer was answered. Now if you will furnish me I will do the best I can to use all to the glory of God. I am sorry I cannot contribute money to help on the cause, rather than ask to be supplied free, but it is impossible at present. I would like the best exposition of Freemasonry you have, as I need to be better posted myself, and I will leave it to your judgment what will be the best for general distribution.

This is a fine country and well settled. It ought to belong to the Lord, and by his grace I am doing and will do all I can to redeem it. If any of the members of the N. C. A. are traveling this way, I would be happy to have them call on me, or if you know of any one that is looking for a mission field send them this way. Your brother in the holy war, WM. J. ABBOTT.

A CHURCH OF CHRIST ONLY.

MARTINSTOWN, Mo.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I would be glad to hear through our family paper (the Cynosure) more from able writers and speakers, showing how unreasonable and contrary to American and Christian principles our lodge friends are, when they claim for themselves superiority over those who will not give up any part of family, American or Christian liberty, for lodge clannishness. I do not remember that I ever saw that difference as fully manifested as the past week.

Elder H. Cain and myself were holding a week's meeting at Pennville, Mo., and constituted a United Baptist church, the covenant of which positively required every member to renounce and forsake all lodge connection; while about thirty more wanted to join the church, and seemed quite anxious. But they were mostly of the F. and L. U's, and said they were so badly oppressed, it seemed that they must seek some relief, and they urged that their move was only for the relief of labor. We urged that as our Creator had supplied his creatures with an altar to worship him at, that they were bound to forsake all other altars before they would dare to claim a right at the altar of the Lord, or before they could follow God as dear children, for it required all their being to serve God acceptably; that for them to risk dividing their service at opposing altars was destructive. We could not encourage them in saying that if they failed to serve God as he requires, that they could reach the heavenly altar where the angels bow and worship around God's throne.

God commands all men everywhere to repent and come to him. The pagan deity commands all who have money to pay entrance dues and fees to come to his altars. Americanism says, All are created equal, with inalienable rights. No, says Despotism, we are the favored few.

If Christ would not teach in secret so far as two or more are concerned, then surely they who follow him will not and do not. If they say he is in secret chambers, believe them not. Christ bids us to come to his altars and partake without money and without price. Satan says, Come not unless you have money and I'll set the price.

Now, to all classes of oppressed brother workers, who seek a living by their labor, will not you bear with one who was poor as you, but blessed with abundant strength, health, and a determination to enjoy himself, live and die a free American; and as I love this life I strive more abundantly to seek the life beyond. I began to nurse the afflicted and help the needy with my hands in my fifteenth year, and have spent over half of my whole life, all for the good of my suffering fellows. I am free as the waters of the sea, and waiting for my crown at the end of the way; and my family are comfortable on a farm (not mortgaged). You may say, How is this? Be honest, industrious, sober, dress plainly, use plenty of healthy food, stay away from spendthrift company and places. When you have a nickel that you feel like spending for pleasure, give it to your dear wife or child, or some needy one; and as you train yourself to this, just note a growing and real pleasure.

But stop, look there! What a gang of lazy, spendthrift, slick-tongued, soft-handed fellows,—hundreds, yea, thousands of lodge officers and saloon-keepers. We labor from eight to fifteen hours per day to feed and clothe them in pomp. See! is it possible that I am mistaken? Are not the lodge and saloon leaders among the very leaders in the money monopolies, that are fast taking away from us what little we have tried to save for dear wives and children? Please, dear sirs, get up! Come out of the lodge; out of the saloon, and stay out. Give dear wife or poor neighbor such fees and dues. Don't vote for such men, nor uphold the party who asks you to do so. Give me your hand on that, and by the grace of God I will stay with you should we live fifty-six years more. Seek first the kingdom of God, and all is well. A. B. LIPP.

AT THE OLD HOME.

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath morning I preached in the U. P. church of Bellefontaine, Ohio, Rev. G. W. Hamilton, pastor. This is a congregation of 250. They have a new brick church which cost them $12,000. It was a great pleasure to meet so many old acquaintances. The Reformed Presbyterian congregation, being without preaching, came over and joined in the services. My father and mother spent the closing years of their lives in this city and their bodies lie in the cemetery near by awaiting the resurrection morning. At 7 P. M. I preached in the Presbyterian church. The heavy rain diminished our audience very materially. The pastor, Dr. Kalb, said: "You had an audience of 70 people. They were with you throughout." On Monday evening I lectured in the R. P. church of Belle Center, Rev. J. J. Huston, pastor. The rain was worse than the previous evening. "The Responsibility of Nations" was discussed. It was a splendid audience for such an evening.

On Saturday evening I attended the county teachers' institute in this place. Dr. Hancock, Ohio State Commissioner of public instruction, delivered the address of the evening. His subject was "The Higher Education." He gave an earnest plea for general culture. Farmers complain that their boys leave them and go to the city. The reason is they thirst for knowledge and do not get it at home. Educate your boys, furnish them with books and facilities for study at home and they will not go away. Teachers should be better paid and kept for a longer term of years.

COVINGTON, Ky., Feb. 23.—Sabbath morning I preached in the Newport, Ky., Presbyterian church, Rev. Mr. Irwin, pastor. In this city of 34,000, there are one Presbyterian, one Congregational, one Baptist, one Episcopal and two Methodist churches. The rest are Catholics and nothings. No wonder their city government is in the hands of the worst elements. The saloons are wide open all Sabbath day, although there are laws against it. Except for Congressmen, they vote here vive voce. In some precincts conscientious voters do not dare vote. It would cost them their lives.

At 3 P. M. I addressed a Gospel Temperance meeting held by the Covington W. C. T. U. This association gets little encouragement here. This city is like Newport, steeped in whisky. Brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers have their hands on the throats of the city government.

The liquor traffic is a power in politics. In Toledo, O., there are 90,000 people; 15,000 are voters. There are 800 saloons. The owners and bar-keepers make 1,600 votes. This is a solid vote and it is the balance of power between the two parties. In New York the saloon vote is 40,000. That is the power that turns the scales. When will our eyes be opened to see our enemy? A minister asked the families in a tenement house to come to his church. They refused because they had no money for the collections. He told them to save the money spent for tobacco and beer and they would have a nice contribution for the church. The saloon get's the poor man's earnings. The saloon is an unspeakable curse. Delenda est Carthago, said the Roman Senator, every time he addressed the Senate,—"Carthage must be destroyed." The saloon must be destroyed. The national issue has it thus: Twenty-five snakes running through the streets; that is free whisky. Twenty-five snakes in a box with twenty-five holes so they can all get out; that is low license. Twenty-five snakes in a box with twenty-five holes and ten stopped up; that is high license. Twenty-five snakes driven over to the next town, that is local option. Twenty-five snakes with their heads cut off; that is prohibition.

Sabbath night I preached in the Main street M. E. church, Covington, Rev. Mr. Bickley, pastor. This brother competed for the prize offered two years ago for the best essay on "Christ, the King of Nations." He has a very difficult field, surrounded by saloons and Catholics. But he works manfully. J. M. Foster.

A GREAT QUESTION.

Meriden, Kansas.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I have been a reader of your pages for twelve years. At first I was very reluctant to see any good therein because of lodge teaching and family connection therewith; but when the Lord saved me from formalism and all manner of sin I was willing to be convinced of all wrong, and quickly saw that the true Christian cannot follow God's Word and have any fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. So I have agreed with you in your reproofs thereof and have not hesitated to use your arguments against the system whenever an opportunity is presented.

But I agree with the Free Methodist sentiments presented therein several years ago, advancing the opinion that a true Christian cannot and does not belong to so sinful an association, and the way to warn the people is to clearly set this before them; that it is a sign of a backslidden Christian to have such connection with the things of the world.

I want to call your attention to another side of this subject of fellowship with the world. That is in regard to what is termed church association. Will any one question that a man who follows the Lord is tied to worldlings when four-fifths of his associates in "church relation" are worshipers of strange gods? Many to-day are bowing down to the works of their own hands, worshiping, honoring and giving glory to the "church association" more than to God, revealing the man of sin in the temple of God, according to 2 Thess. 2.

But God Almighty is sounding his trumpet against this awful idolatry, and it behooves every one who names the name of Christ to depart from this iniquity. Therefore for the spread of Gospel truth I send you several tracts and papers on this subject, and hope you will be as patient in a careful consideration of them as I was with the Cynosure, and hope you may receive a greater benefit therefrom than I did. My soul rejoices in the freedom from sect bands and associations, and I praise God every day of my life for this blessed "evening light." Yours in Jesus our King,

Jennie C. Rutty.

PITH AND POINT.

THE SERMON TO FARMERS.

While reading the Feb. 12th number of the Cynosure, I was very much interested in finding the cause of Kansas troubles so plainly and truthfully set forth in The Business Principles of the New Testament," by Rev. T. C. Moffatt. That sermon to farmers ought to find every home in Kansas,—I should say in the U. S. All the societies to prop up credit, all the alliances, all the granges, and every subterfuge the devil can get humanity to take hold of will avail us nothing so long as we let go unheeded so plain an injunction, "Owe no man anything but to love one another." I have spent fifteen years of my life in Kansas, and I find when man has done his part God has done the rest. I have seen men this winter buy corn and pay 50 cents per bushel for it, who sold hundreds of bushels of corn the winter before for 12½ cents, because they were in debt; they are in deeper now. There was not much feed to put up last fall. But we have had such a fine open winter, cattle have kept fat on the green wheat. W. D. Clay, Wellington, Kansas.

NEVER BE DISCOURAGED. FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS FROM ONE. HIS SHARE OF THE 50,000.

Enclosed find money order for four dollars and eighty-five cents. Four fifty of it to be applied to the payment of the EIGHTEEN NEW TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS that I have procured since I last wrote you. The balance, thirty-five cents, for the postage on the literature that you sent me; which, by the way, is out on its mission. Oh, that it may yield an abundant harvest! Allow me to say that this list makes fifty new readers of the Cynosure that I have procured since some time in the fall. Now if you can only manage it so as to retain them, great good certainly will be the result thereof. Amen and Amen. —J. W. Thompson, Greenfield, Mo.

A GOOD MAN FOR THE CONFERENCE.

I have decided to make an effort to come and enjoy the "feast of fat things," as I have attended these good conferences heretofore. Bro. Dillon says he intends to go along. I wish he might be on the "program" if it could be so arranged. We consider him one of the best we have. At least he is too much for the stoutest Liberal that lives. I love and enjoy the Cynosure more and more. Had I the money at my command some have, I'd send it (and the Conservator) to thousands, How I long for the time to come when the lodge will become as loathsome to the majority of the people as it is to me. I have offered $10 to any man who will show me an oath-bound secret society on earth that is not anti-Christ, for the past six years, but no one has taken it. A Grand Army man said he would take it while we were at Fostoria General Conference, but when I attempted to go with him into the lodge (or post meeting,) he objected, and that spoiled it all. God speed the right.—W. O. Dinius, Dayton, O.

HAS JUST HEARD OF A GOOD THING.

I saw in a little California paper, the Messiah's Advocate, the notice of a new Chicago paper, the Christian Cynosure. It purports to be a representative of the "national movement against secret societies." I feel to applaud such a movement if such a movement there be; for the present craze for secret societies I consider the most effective nullifier of Christian influence there is in existence. I would say, "Success to the effort." Please send me a sample, that I may see something of its methods.—W. H. Porter, Jamestown, Kansas.

A CONDUCTOR AND ENGINEER ON THE UNDERGROUND RAILROAD.

I have taken the Cynosure ever since I heard of such a paper, which was at the inception and unveiling of Morgan monument, Batavia, N. Y., both of which I attended and got strongly reproved for keeping such company, by a wealthy banker, elder in a large Presbyterian church. One of the company was the one whose life was given to us on his eightieth birth-day, in which my family were much interested with me. I am about five years his senior, have not been a public man, but at one time kept an underground depot, did the whole of the business myself, even to delivering my freight myself in Queen Victoria's dominions.—H. N. Waldo, Arcade, N. Y.

FOLLOWING UP A GOOD TESTIMONY.

We have had a four weeks', union prayer meeting in the seven evangelical churches, meeting in the afternoon. I have attended a good many of the meetings and distributed tracts and papers; and I want more. They prayed for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. I talked plainly in the meetings, and told them the necessity of clearing out the churches as Jesus did the temple preparatory for the day of Pentecost; that there was a need of a separation between the churches and the temple of Baal. But I see no signs of a move that way. I want more tracts and papers to follow up the work by supplying the ministers with proper reading.—Harris Johnson, Nebraska City, Neb.

COUNT FOUR MORE SAVED.

Four Masons have left the lodge in this place within the last four years, but are afraid to take the Cynosure. Some have left for other parts. I wanted sample copies to send to them, as they wrote to me for them. I sent the best I had and they are all good. I am a worker for God with you.—James Hart, Monroe, Ia.

FROM OUR GOOD OLD FRIEND BROKAW.

I am now eighty years old and cannot think of giving up the Cynosure. I am taking so many papers that I have hardly time to read them all. I have taken the Cynosure from the first copy and like it well.—Geo. Brokaw, Washington, Iowa.

FLASHES.

I would rather my salary would be short than for any of the flock to discontinue the Cynosure. It is a means of grace in this, our time of need.—Cyrus Smith.

With a renewal from Bro. Abraham Krum comes the word:

"I fell on the 2d of January and broke my leg. I am 81½ years old. I like the paper and believe in its sentiments."

Though of such extreme age, we trust our friend will recover and have many days for God's work yet on earth.

I would say to Josiah Divol that the civil law or civil government is of Divine institution, just the same as the church; and it is as wrong to stand aloof from one as the other. The Bible says, "Curse ye Meroz, because they went not up to the help of the Lord."—W. N. Wilson, Freeland, O.

LITERATURE.

Health at Home Tracts. By Alfred Schofield, M. D., M. R. C. S. Price 60 cents. London Religious Tract Society. Chicago and New York, Fleming H. Revell & Co.

This is a remarkable book. It may first be noticed as a singular fact that a religious tract society should be issuing medical books. But the reason is manifest as we come to the end of each of the twelve tracts of which the volume is made up, and notice the honest and excellent religious admonition with which they all close. For instance, what could be more practical and sound than these words, which we find among the closing instructions in the part on "How to Nurse a Sick Person:" "God in his goodness, frequently blesses a time of quietness, of enforced rest, of leisure, for reflection, reading and prayer so as to completely alter the current of the lives of nurse and patient to all eternity. Whatever you shut out of the sick room, do not shut God out. Read a few verses from the Bible every day to your patient, and many for yourself, and ask for the teaching of the Holy Spirit." "Pray to God to bless your care of the patient, to give you the needed tact, wisdom and patience, and as your patient is able to bear it, as God may teach you, faithfully show him the way of life." Similar instructions close each section: How to Avoid Dying Before the Time, Breathing and Ventilation, Blood Poisons, Care of Children, What to Do in Accidents, Care of the Skin, Clothes, Cooking and Eating, Babies, Common Ailments, and How to be Healthy in One Room. It will be seen that this is a manual for the poor as well as the rich. And its instructions are of the most practical nature in easily-understood language, full of good sense as of good religion.

The Haydocks' Testimony. By L. C. W. Pp. 276. Price $1.00; paper 50 cents. Published by the Christian Arbitration and Peace Society, Philadelphia.

The well-known doctrine of the Friends which forbids them to participate in war, and the incidents connected with the practical application of the principle among the North Carolina Friends during the rebellion, form the subject of this story. Those incidents have been more or less familiar to ordinary readers. They are of intense interest, and are a testimony not to be disputed that the faith of these godly people was not founded on a fable. The story upon which these incidents are strung, is as simple and beautiful as the Quaker faith. No home life can be more dear than that told of in these pages, no faith more clear and true, no human love more chaste. The religious faith of the Haydocks and their friends is continually before us, but is not obtrusive amid the incidents of real life. The vindication of the anti-slavery principles of the Friends is quite as excellent as that of their abhorrence of war, and the quiet Christian methods by which their slaves were set free many years before the war, are very happily explained.

Hand-book of Facts and Alliance Information.—This is the first of a series of documents issued from the office of the National Economist of Washington and "specially prepared for the members of the Order" of the National Alliance and Industrial Union of which the Economist is the national organ. This pamphlet contains an almanac, historical and other facts briefly stated about the different States of the Union, a compilation of facts and statistics respecting agricultural affairs, revenue tables, lists of members of Congress, brief history of the secret Alliance and of the "Industrial Wheel" and a report of the Ocala, Fla., meeting of the Alliance.

"Scribner's Magazine" for March contains two striking articles of exploration and adventure—Mr. Mounteney Jephson's account of one of the most exciting periods of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition, and Mr. M. B. Kerr's description of the latest attempt to reach the summit of Mount St. Elias in Alaska. The former describes the desperate forced march made from the camp, where Nelson and his famished party were left, to the Mayen camp at Ipoto, where food and rest were found for the starving men. These were the darkest days of the great Emin Pasha Relief Expedition, and Mr. Jephson gives the unpublished record of the experiences of the column which he commanded in the advance. "Mount St. Elias and its Glaciers," is the account by Mark Brickell Kerr (topographer of the expedition) of the third attempt to reach the summit of Mount St. Elias—made in the summer of 1890 by a party under the auspices of the National Geographic Society. After weeks of hardship the expedition saw success within its grasp, but a sudden snow-storm blocked the way. "If the storm had only held off," says the author, "for twenty-four hours more, the scalp of Elias would have been in their belts." However, the work which was done in discovering new peaks and glaciers, and in making a topographical reconnoissance of an unknown region was an ample scientific reward for the expedition. Besides, a new measurement of St. Elias was made which places its height 15,327 feet instead of 19,500, which has been accepted since 1874. Sir Edwin Arnold's fourth "Japonica" paper, dealing with "Japanese ways and thoughts" is an entertaining conclusion to this delightful series, which has given the appreciative view of one who says that "never have I passed days more happy, tranquil, or restorative than among Japanese of all classes, in the cities, towns and villages of Japan." Samuel Parsons, Jr., as a result of his successful experiments in ornamenting public fountains and ponds in New York parks, writes a practical paper on "The Ornamentation of Ponds and Lakes," with special reference to small country places.

In the Christian (London) for December, Mrs. Grattan Guinness gives a long and critical examination of General Booth's book, "In Darkest England." She especially calls attention to many existing agencies which in his book are entirely overlooked, and the Christian adds that Mrs. Meredith, with her Prison Mission to Women, and Mr. George Hatton, with his coadjutor, Mr. William Wheatley, long before led the way into this philanthropy, and that the Salvation Army is indebted for its methods to the plans which they have been following. The Christian mentions George Holland, of Georgeyard, whose work is like the waters of Siloah, that flow softly; then there comes to mind a multitude of names, each of which awakens memories of orphans housed and homed, or girls rescued, or, still better, prevented; of work of every conceivable kind for the glory of God and for the good of men. Miss Macpherson, Archibald Brown, F. N. Charrington, Henry Hill, William Cuff, Dr. Stephenson, Peter Thompson, Miss Steer, Miss Child, Evans Hurndall, J. W. Atkinson, Christian Community, Strangers' Rest, Seaman's Missions, Mrs. Birt in Liverpool, William Quarrier in Scotland, and innumerable others all through the land. Positively one's heart aches to think of the noble army of God's servants who serve him and see his face in the squalid parts of our great cities, who are, for the moment at least, forgotten by many of the churches, and by individual donors accustomed to contribute to their funds. Notwithstanding these statements, it seems to us that General Booth's scheme ought to have a full and fair trial. We believe that if it be not entirely successful, it may at least lead the way to a larger and more prominent work for the poor not only of London, but of all our great cities.—Missionary Review.

The Pall Mall Gazette to-day publishes, in parallel columns, a sermon which Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, pastor of the Tabernacle, preached in 1864, and an address delivered by the Right Hon. Joseph Savory, Lord Mayor of London, at the Polytechnic Institute (Young Men's Christian Institute for Apprentices, Artisans, etc.,) in Regent street. The two discourses are identical in almost every particular, long passages in the Spurgeon sermon being unchanged in the Lord Mayor's address. Lord Mayor Savory, whose attention was called by a reporter to this singular coincidence, said that he was unaware of the similarity existing between his recent oration and Spurgeon's pulpit utterances of 1864. The Lord Mayor added that he had never, to the best of his knowledge, seen the sermon referred to.

A magazine of the size of The Ladies' Home Journal, which has just reached the monthly circulation of 600,000 copies, requires a good deal of room; another four-story building is to be occupied next month, in addition to the two now in use. The growing popularity of the Journal has also overtaken the capacity of its nine large presses, and twelve new ones of latest improved pattern are awaiting the completion of the new quarters.

The Voice

Is easily injured—the slightest irritation of the throat or larynx at once affecting its tone, flexibility, or power. All efforts to sing or speak in public, under such conditions, become not only painful but dangerous, and should be strictly avoided until every symptom is removed. To effect a speedy cure no other medicine is equal to

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

The best of anodynes, this preparation rapidly soothes irritation, strengthens the delicate organs of speech, and restores the voice to its tone and power. No singer or public speaker should be without it. Lydia Thompson, the famous actress, certifies: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been of very great service to me. It improves and strengthens the voice, and is always effective for the cure of colds and coughs."

"Upon several occasions I have suffered from colds, causing hoarseness and entire loss of voice. In my profession of an auctioneer any affection of the voice or throat is a serious matter, but at each attack, I have been relieved by a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This remedy, with ordinary care, has worked such a that I have suffered very little inconvenience. I have also used it in my family, with excellent results, in coughs, colds, &c."—Wm. H. Quartly, Minlaton, Australia.

"In the spring of 1853, at Portsmouth, Va., I was prostrated by a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia. My physicians exhausted their remedies, and for one year I was not able to even articulate a word. By the advice of Dr. Shaw I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and to my surprise and great joy, in less than one month I could converse easily, in a natural tone of voice. I continued to improve and have become since a well man. I have often recommended the Pectoral, and have never known it to fail."—George R. Lawrence, Valparaiso, Ind.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Let's reason together. Here's a firm, one of the largest the country over, the world over; it has grown, step by step, through the years to greatness—and it sells patent medicines!—ugh!

"That's enough!"—

Wait a little—

This firm pays the newspapers good money (expensive work, this advertising,) to tell the people that they have faith in what they sell, so much faith that if they can't benefit or cure they don't want your money. Their guarantee is not indefinite and relative, but definite and absolute—if the medicine doesn't help, your money is "on call."

Suppose every sick man and every feeble woman tried these medicines and found them worthless, who would be the loser, you or they?

The medicines are Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," for blood diseases, and his "Favorite Prescription," for woman's peculiar ills. If they help toward health, they cost $1.00 a bottle each! If they don't, they cost nothing!

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1891.

FORWARD, MARCH! Spring is here. Get your garden tools ready. First of all you need a Garden Cultivator. The Cynosure has one for you—and it is the best! We have made special arrangements with the manufacturers, so that all our subscribers can get one at very advantageous rates. SEE! For your renewal and a new subscription and $4.00 (or for two new subscriptions and $4.00), we send you a $6.00 machine, or you may say you pay for the machine $6.00, and get your subscriptions worth $3.00 for $1.00.

But the two-wheeler is what everybody wants. We send this for a new and old subscription (or two new subscriptions) and $5.50 additional. That gives you the two copies of the Cynosure for a year for the trifle of 50 cts. Freight or express extra in all cases, unless four machines are taken at once.

This is our best offer yet. The Cultivator is a grand help in the garden. You can get over from six to eight times as much ground as with a hoe, do it easier, and do it so much better, that you will be amazed that you did not try it before.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE."

"Man on the dubious waves of error tossed,
His ship half-foundered and his compass lost,
Sees, far as human optics can command,
A sleeping fog, and fancies it dry land;
Spreads all his canvas, every sinew plies,
Pants for it, aims at it, enters it and dies!
Then farewell all self-satisfying schemes,
His well built systems, philosophic dreams;
Deceitful views of future bliss farewell!
He reads his sentence at the flames of hell."

—Cowper.

Darwin was born A. D. 1809, and Huxley fourteen years after him. Darwin's theory of the "survival of the fittest," and Huxley's "Protoplasm," and the evolution of men, animals, and plants, from the slimy "first form" of matter, with endless shades of difference, yet agree in ignoring God, and in the doctrine that creation created itself. We have conversed with Agassiz, and heard from his lips that men grew up spontaneously like "the flora and fauna" (plants and animals), and that it is absurd to suppose "the human varieties run back to a single pair."

It follows, from these theories, that the story of Eden is a myth. There was no Adam, or Eve, or devil, or fall of man. In the course of a life, somewhat prolonged, many such bubbles on the stream of human intelligence have danced, gleamed and burst,

"Just like the snow flake on the river,
A moment white, then gone forever."

We have traveled a hundred miles in Utah, and found every thinking Mormon, with whom we conversed, had a Mormonism of his own. The first time we entered Boston, a Cambridge professor, or a gentleman reputed to be one, lectured us on phrenology, and taught that to hang men for murder, because their bump of destructiveness was so large that they could not help killing, was itself crime.

A few weeks since we received an invitation to attend, in Chicago, a graduation from a school of "Christian Science," "falsely so called;" and we have since read a little pamphlet on the subject which reminds us of a school of monks of Mt. Athos in the Middle Ages, who by steadily gazing in a certain direction, said they were filled with a transporting light.

There is no Christian science but the teaching of Christ, to-wit, that taught by "the Scriptures" which he endorsed as true, viz., that the one living and true God made the world, men and animals; that man sinned and fell; that we fell in our parents as we daily see, and so are "by nature children of wrath;" that God gave his Son, Jesus Christ, to die for us; that "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God;" that the conditions of this new birth are repentance for sin, and faith in Christ; and that Christ had, and still has, "power on earth to forgive sins" and save men. The Ten Commandments show what sin is by forbidding it, and repentance includes renunciation.

Now wherever this brief, plain Bible doctrine is received, man at once arises from his degradation and devil-worship, and begins to regain the lost moral image of God. And there is not, on earth, a foot of free soil where the Bible is not taught, though even Christian countries are full of false systems made up of error and Christianity mixed; and no writer has equalled Cowper in the lines above quoted which liken these systems to "sleeping fogs." Even when filled with beautiful moonlight, fogs are often fatal to ships, wrecking them on rocks.

Men are weak as well as wicked, and the most successful superstitions are those which promise healing bodies as well as saving souls. Such, we understand, is this "Christian Science." It is the doctrine of the Indian powwow adapted to civilized mind. We are told by those who have seen them, that some native Africans, who worship a beetle bug, will gaze on the insect with the intensest rapture, as charmed frogs charmed by snakes.

The philosophy of these sciences, Christian, pagan, or mixed, in a Darwin, a Freemason, or a Hottentot, seems to be this: the mind, gazing at some material or mental object, projects itself into the infinite beyond, puts itself into a posture of adoration. No matter what this object is. It may be protoplasm, priest-rite, or a process of nature. And those legions of evil spirits, who met and resisted Christ, have only to insert themselves in the focus of that mind's gaze to make itself an object of its adoration, and become its guide and god. Socrates, Demosthenes, and Cicero, were Gentiles, and, if Paul was correct, "sacrificed to devils," 1 Cor. 10: 20. And when those magnificent intellects had paid their religious homage to the deities of the Greek or Roman calendar, which were

"Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust, Whose attributes were rage, revenge and lust,"

their misery showed the meanness of their religion. Cicero, looking to his hereafter, says, "Timeo, dubio!" (I fear, I doubt) and well he might. He had worshiped gods who were themselves bound for "the bottomless pit."

Satan, who is the poisoner-general, mixes his dose to suit the taste of his patient. And this pseudo Christian Science is mixed for Christians.

QUAKER GUNS AND SHAM PATRIOTISM.

A long list of respectable names is attached to a protest sent last week to President Harrison. They represent gentlemen residing in this city who have formerly been connected with the navy. The burden of their request is to prevent the construction of a model of a war-ship of latest pattern made of painted pine boards, brick and mortar, with guns of cement, etc., etc. These gentlemen suggest that the construction of such a sham boat to be exhibited to visitors from all parts of the world would be sure "to invite the ridicule of those familiar with the powerful naval establishments of other less powerful nations," and would cause our comparatively meager naval establishment to be yet more abused than it is now, by men who understand that the more jobs government puts up, the greater their chance for public plunder.

Nobody will be disposed to dispute these gentlemen. What have the implements and material of war to do anyhow in an exhibition of the arts of peace?

But there are "Quaker guns" in patriotism as well as in war; and if they would serve the purpose of contrasting with the genuine article as well as the sham ship would do, we might endure them. The trouble is they serve exactly the purpose of the painted logs mounted by the rebels before McClellan's splendidly equipped army. They scare honest men and real patriots, and hinder genuine movements for the promotion of American principles and the American spirit.

To speak more definitely, a "National Council of Patriotic American Societies" was held last week at a room in the Grand Pacific Hotel. It is said that there were about seventy delegates representing

FIFTY-NINE DIFFERENT SECRET ORDERS.

These gentlemen were gathered in secret session to look after the patriotism of the United States! They were presided over by Mr. Minor of this city who is interested in the movement as editor of an anti-Catholic paper in this city. To a reporter this gentleman said: "While our aims are largely political, we are not a political body nor do we intend forming a new party. Our membership represents over two million voters and we consequently hold the balance of power. By wielding this balance of power we are going to compel political managers to conform to our aims and ideas. In short, we are going to make politics more American. Let me tell you, too, that the political parties are recognizing us. This very day three politicians called on me to inquire if certain men would be acceptable to us. We are a power and will see the day when Americans will have control of America." That is, this Quaker-gun Americanism is holding in check all the political movements of the day.

The list of the fifty-nine different secret societies which are thus at work demoralizing our patriotism are not given. But from a list of the societies invited to participate in this conference we select the following which are presumptively secret lodges:

American Alliance,
American Defense Ass'n,
American Eagle Order of,
American Fraternal Circle,
American Institute of Ceries,
American Order of Foresters,
American Patriotic League,
American Progressive Leag.,
American Protestant Ass'n,
American Protestant Ass'n, (five degrees),
American Protestant Ass'n of the United States,
American Protestant Ladies' Association,
American Star Order of,
American Star Ancient Order of,
American Union Order of,
Brotherhood of the Union (H. F.),
Columbia Order of,
Daughters of the Forest,
Daughters of Liberty,

United Americans Order of,
True Americans Order of,
United American Mechanics' Order of,
United American Mechanics' Supreme Commandery of,
United Friends of America,
United Order of Pilgrim Fathers,
United Sons of America,
United States Americans.

Lincoln's well-known axiom: America cannot exist half free and half slave, was no more certainly true than the fact that American patriotism can neither be promoted or preserved by secret lodges, nor its politics purified by them. And as for the efforts of these orders to expel Jesuitism they might as well begin fighting the devil with his own fire.

We regret to see the names of Mr. Slason Thompson, editor of America, and Mr. James M. King, secretary of the "National League for the Preservation of American Institutions," connected with the meeting as supporting the movement. Hon. John Jay, the president of this League,. would not, we are sure, approve the action of his secretary.

DR. CARRADINE'S SERMON.—To numerous inquiries we would reply that this great discourse is not printed in pamphlet form. But it will be so published immediately if orders are sent in freely this week. It can be sent postpaid for 5 cents per copy; ten for 40 cts; fifty copies for $1.50 and $2.50 per hundred. We shall wait to hear from the friends. Let your orders be quick.

—Bro. Stoddard, the New England agent, wrote Friday that he had engaged a hall at Tariffville, Conn., where he was to begin a series of meetings on Monday evening.

—The Sierra Leone Times of January 17th last contains an account of the dedication of a mission hall in that city, which had been secured and furnished through the efforts of Rev. J. Augustus Cole, whose visit to this country a few years since is well remembered.

—A Roman Catholic paper of this city, a large part of whose contents is made up of sensational fiction, contains on the first page of a recent issue the report of "a Grand Euchre party" held by a young men's society connected with one of the Romanist churches of Chicago.

—It is announced in the Northwestern World of Evanston, that Pres. C. A. Blanchard will address students of Northwestern University on the question of college secret societies in Massasoit Hall next Monday evening, March 9th. The non-fraternity students in the institution are all urged to be present.

—A letter from Jennings, Louisiana, informs us that the Christian brethren in the southwest part of that State propose holding a convention to discuss the secret orders and the duty of the churches respecting them. This meeting is to be held this week Wednesday at Jennings. Rev. C. Powers, of that place, is interested in getting up this meeting. God grant the best of success to his efforts.

—At the annual Junior Exhibition at Baldwin University, Berea, Ohio, on the 21st ult., one of the young men selected "The Secret Oath" as his topic for an oration. The idea showed originality and force of character and the effect was very marked and on the whole excellent, although there were some doubtless among the friends of the lodge. The Cynosure readers will have the pleasure of reading this student oration next week.

—The lodge is ready to use the least provocation to destroy the usefulness of Dr. Carradine of St. Louis. He lately spoke in his prayer-meeting against the worldly tendencies of church entertainments, and especially those of a theatrical nature. His enemies have seized upon this Christian testimony, and are fomenting strife among the St. Louis Methodist churches. This is the best answer the lodge can make to the ovewhelming argument of Dr. Carradine's recent sermon.

—The last letter of our Pacific agent, Rev. M. H. Nichols, written from Tacoma, Washington, speaks of better prospects for his work than ever before. Friends are giving more assistance. Having been a missionary in India he is able to give entertaining and instructive lectures on that great country. He has several times spoken on this theme. He would like a sciopticon and slides to illustrate these lectures. If any of our readers have such apparatus and can donate or loan them, they will confer favor on Bro. Nichols.

—Actual experience with garden cultivators warrants the highest commendation of the Manweight Cultivator which we advertise this week and offer free (except freight) to those who get up clubs. The ordinary cultivator is pushed by the arms and is hard work at times. This new machine is pushed forward easily by the simple weight of the body. There is no garden tool a boy likes so well as a cultivator. With this new machine a boy can cultivate a quarter to half an acre and think it play. The wheels are high so he can make a team of his playmates and pull it through the soil. Before the first of May we should be glad to add a hundred clubs of eighteen to our list in exchange for this useful and beautiful implement.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, our agent for the interior States, preached a very able and convincing sermon to the College Church, Wheaton, during his late home visit. His text, "Neither is there salvation in any other," gave him an opportunity to speak upon the salvation offered by God's rival and man's enemy. His argument was clear, logical and earnest, yet in so kindly a spirit that the conviction was only rendered more deep, that there is "no other name given among men whereby we can be saved;" and those who enter the Masonic lodge for whatever purpose—gain, curiosity, society, or salvation—do thereby in terms, if they do not in purpose and in spirit, reject that Name which is above every name. Bro. Hawley started again Monday for his lecture work.

—The editor of the Journal of Anthony, Kansas, speaks with pride of the fact that his father is one of the oldest living ministers of the United Presbyterian church, but he forgot the Fifth Commandment when he joined the Masonic lodge, and did not repent of the folly when he was disciplined by the church, and his name cut off from the number of God's people. He was rather embittered than humbled by this righteous act, and strikes back with ill-temper at an act of love to mankind, himself included. The Instructor of Philadelphia having quoted with approbation the scathing reply of Senator Harkners of the Kansas Legislature to the emissaries of the lodge who asked for his vote, the Journal editor approves the comment, but says there are United Presbyterian churches in Kansas "almost wholly supported by men who bow to the grip and password of the political Alliance." This church, he says again, "is supported by a secret society, that in its principles is as dangerous to liberty and integrity as the socialists and anarchists of the old country. It is supported almost entirely by the Farmers' Alliance, an oath-bound secret association of Southern ex-rebel origin, that by the grip and pass-word is attempting to control the politics of Sunny Kansas. It is an outrage upon humanity, a disgrace to intelligence and honor, but is condoned by the church because it pays contributions and pew rent." Making all allowance for the personal feelings of this editor, the charge he brings is so grave that it is worth the attention of pastors of that church everywhere.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. Isaac Bancroft, who has several years rested from active service in our reform, writes from his home in Hartley, Iowa, that he can speak at places not too far distant where his expenses and railway fare can be paid.

—Captain William Wilson of Menomonie, Wisconsin, has just passed his 84th birthday, but maintains a vigorous old age in spite of a recent illness. He sends his name to be added to the call for the conference, and hopes to attend in person. He is deeply interested in various reform questions, that represented by the N. C. A. being one of the first in his esteem.

—Our friend of song and good will to men, Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, was a prominent figure among the veterans at the late Prohibition convention at Jackson, Mich. He made one of the inspiring speeches of the meeting, urging that the war be fought against the saloon on the line of the old Abolition doctrine, of no compromise with the death-dealing traffic, but that it be followed to the end under the comprehensive decision of the Supreme Court.

All Reformed Presbyterians who purpose to attend the anti-secret conference soon to be held in Chicago, can be furnished with credentials as delegates by notifying the undersigned. We hope many will find it convenient and see it their duty to attend. By order of Synod. J. S. T. Milligan,

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 25, 1891.

The United States Senate is our highest legislative body, and by many it is considered the ablest body of the kind in existence; therefore it is only natural that the great mass of people who are cognizant of the rapid strides that moral reform of all sorts is making throughout this Christian nation, should expect the members of the Senate to be fully abreast of the front rank of the reform army, if not among its leaders.

These things occurred to me when I saw a vote taken upon an amendment offered by Senator Hoar to a bill reported from the District of Columbia committee, prohibiting pool-selling or "book-making" in the cities of Washington and Georgetown or within one mile of the boundaries of these cities. Mr. Hoar's amendment was simply to prohibit this species of gambling in the entire District of Columbia. It will be remembered that the President vetoed a bill prohibiting pool-selling, because it excepted the race course. I was shocked, as doubtless were others, to hear the chairman of the committee (Mr. Ingalls) explain that the bill was "an attempt on the part of the committee which framed it to adjust the topography of the District to the conscience of the executive," but still more so when Mr. Hoar's very desirable amendment was deafeated by a vote of 39 to 6. Think of it, only six Senators willing to place themselves on record as opposed to this most pernicious form of gambling. This is conclusive evidence, to my mind, that the Senate chamber is an inviting field for zealous missionaries. After defeating the amendment the original bill was passed by the Senate, but it is doubtful whether there will be time for it to be acted upon by the House.

Yesterday's session of the Woman's National Council, which is in session here this week, was devoted entirely to temperance work and woman's connection therewith. Among the most prominent speakers were Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, the representative of the Non-partisan W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, representing the National W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, who was the leader in the movement to erect a woman's temple in Chicago, which is to be completed before the opening of the World's Fair, a beautiful feature of which, as she described it, is "to be a memorial hall, whence the incense of prayer will rise every day to heaven for the suppression of the liquor curse of this country—the Westminster Abbey of the temperance cause;" Mrs. Lease, of Kansas; Mrs. Mary Allen West, editor of the Union Signal; Mrs. James B. Hobbs of Chicago and Mrs. Bessie Starr Keefer, representing the Good Templars.

Forty-six organizations are represented in the Council, including the following, which have just been admitted to membership: The Ladies' Health Protective Association of New York City, Woman's Relief Corps (a secret society), the Woman's Missionary Society of the Reformed Church of the United States, the Ladies' Physiological Institute of Boston, Universal Peace Union, and the Woman's Missionary Society of the Cumberland (Md.) Presbyterian Church. The meetings of the Council, which began on the Sabbath (!) and have been held twice each day, have been largely attended and the greatest interest has been manifested in them.

The Congressional Temperance Society celebrated its fifty-seventh anniversary by holding a public meeting Sabbath evening, which was presided over by Representative Dingley of Maine. Among the speakers was ex-Congressman Smalls, a colored man from South Carolina, who said that he had joined the society at the request of two ladies, and not because he personally needed to take the pledge, for he had never taken a drink of liquor, smoked a cigar, or chewed a piece of tobacco in his life. Good for him.

How many members of the present Congress do you suppose are members of this society? To their shame be it written there are only forty, less than ten per cent of the total membership of the House and Senate, which is 420. If the session was not so near at an end, I would suggest a special Congressional temperance crusade to be conducted by a special committee composed of the most vigorous and successful temperance workers of the country.

The foreign custom of Sunday afternoon receptions and Sunday night "at homes" is growing in Washington society with a rapidity that is positively alarming to good Christian men and women, who believe in keeping the Sabbath day holy. Invitations to these entertainments, for that's what they are, call them what they please, are declined by many good people to whom they are sent; but shouldn't a Christian man or woman, receiving such an invitation, do more than merely to decline its acceptance? I think that they should avail themselves of every method at their disposal to let the public know that they disapprove of this Sabbath desecration, but I am afraid, in fact I know, that they don't. The reason they give is that they do not wish to offend their social friends, who are not Christians. They forget the Master's words, "He that is not for me is against me." *

Six or eight Odd-fellows' lodges met on the third floor of Odd-fellows' Hall in Reading, Pa. There are fire escapes on the building, and recently it was discovered that some boys had climbed up on these and were making themselves acquainted with the initiation services that were progressing within. The matter was investigated and the fire escapes have been so arranged that the boys cannot reach them. It is said that even if the boys could not see what was going on inside, they could hear what was being said. Members of the order, it is added, are considerably exercised over the matter. But why should they be, unless there is something which they know to be wrong in the initiatory rites of their lodges, or something at least of which they are ashamed? What men are afraid to have boys see or know, cannot be good for either men or boys. —Christian Instructor.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1891.

FORWARD, MARCH! Spring is here. Get your garden tools ready. First of all you need a Garden Cultivator. The Cynosure has one for you—and it is the best! We have made special arrangements with the manufacturers, so that all our subscribers can get one at very advantageous rates. SEE! For your renewal and a new subscription and $4.00 (or for two new subscriptions and $4.00), we send you a $6.00 machine, or you may say you pay for the machine $6.00, and get your subscriptions worth $3.00 for $1.00.

But the two-wheeler is what everybody wants. We send this for a new and old subscription (or two new subscriptions) and $5.50 additional. That gives you the two copies of the Cynosure for a year for the trifle of 50 cts. Freight or express extra in all cases, unless four machines are taken at once.

This is our best offer yet. The Cultivator is a grand help in the garden. You can get over from six to eight times as much ground as with a hoe, do it easier, and do it so much better, that you will be amazed that you did not try it before.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE."

"Man on the dubious waves of error tossed,
His ship half-foundered and his compass lost,
Sees, far as human optics can command,
A sleeping fog, and fancies it dry land;
Spreads all his canvas, every sinew plies,
Pants for it, aims at it, enters it and dies!
Then farewell all self-satisfying schemes,
His well built systems, philosophic dreams;
Deceitful views of future bliss farewell!

—Cowper.

Darwin was born A. D. 1809, and Huxley fourteen years after him. Darwin's theory of the "survival of the fittest," and Huxley's "Protoplasm," and the evolution of men, animals, and plants, from the slimy "first form" of matter, with endless shades of difference, yet agree in ignoring God, and in the doctrine that creation created itself. We have conversed with Agassiz, and heard from his lips that men grew up spontaneously like "the flora and fauna" (plants and animals), and that it is absurd to suppose "the human varieties run back to a single pair."

It follows, from these theories, that the story of Eden is a myth. There was no Adam, or Eve, or devil, or fall of man. In the course of a life, somewhat prolonged, many such bubbles on the stream of human intelligence have danced, gleamed and burst,

"Just like the snow flake on the river,
A moment white, then gone forever."

We have traveled a hundred miles in Utah, and found every thinking Mormon, with whom we conversed, had a Mormonism of his own. The first time we entered Boston, a Cambridge professor, or a gentleman reputed to be one, lectured us on phrenology, and taught that to hang men for murder, because their bump of destructiveness was so large that they could not help killing, was itself crime.

A few weeks since we received an invitation to attend, in Chicago, a graduation from a school of "Christian Science," "falsely so called;" and we have since read a little pamphlet on the subject which reminds us of a school of monks of Mt. Athos in the Middle Ages, who by steadily gazing in a certain direction, said they were filled with a transporting light.

There is no Christian science but the teaching of Christ, to-wit, that taught by "the Scriptures" which he endorsed as true, viz., that the one living and true God made the world, men and animals; that man sinned and fell; that we fell in our parents as we daily see, and so are "by nature children of wrath;" that God gave his Son, Jesus Christ, to die for us; that "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God;" that the conditions of this new birth are repentance for sin, and faith in Christ; and that Christ had, and still has, "power on earth to forgive sins" and save men. The Ten Commandments show what sin is by forbidding it, and repentance includes renunciation.

Now wherever this brief, plain Bible doctrine is received, man at once arises from his degradation and devil-worship, and begins to regain the lost moral image of God. And there is not, on earth, a foot of free soil where the Bible is not taught, though even Christian countries are full of false systems made up of error and Christianity mixed; and no writer has equalled Cowper in the lines above quoted which liken these systems to "sleeping fogs." Even when filled with beautiful moonlight, fogs are often fatal to ships, wrecking them on rocks.

Men are weak as well as wicked, and the most successful superstitions are those which promise healing bodies as well as saving souls. Such, we understand, is this "Christian Science." It is the doctrine of the Indian powwow adapted to civilized mind. We are told by those who have seen them, that some native Africans, who worship a beetle bug, will gaze on the insect with the intensest rapture, as charmed frogs charmed by snakes.

The philosophy of these sciences, Christian, pagan, or mixed, in a Darwin, a Freemason, or a Hottentot, seems to be this: the mind, gazing at some material or mental object, projects itself into the infinite beyond, puts itself into a posture of adoration. No matter what this object is. It may be protoplasm, priest-rite, or a process of nature. And those legions of evil spirits, who met and resisted Christ, have only to insert themselves in the focus of that mind's gaze to make itself an object of its adoration, and become its guide and god. Socrates, Demosthenes, and Cicero, were Gentiles, and, if Paul was correct, "sacrificed to devils," 1 Cor. 10: 20. And when those magnificent intellects had paid their religious homage to the deities of the Greek or Roman calendar, which were

"Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
Whose attributes were rage, revenge and lust,"

their misery showed the meanness of their religion. Cicero, looking to his hereafter, says, "Timeo, dubio!" (I fear, I doubt) and well he might. He had worshiped gods who were themselves bound for "the bottomless pit."

Satan, who is the poisoner-general, mixes his dose to suit the taste of his patient. And this pseudo Christian Science is mixed for Christians.

QUAKER GUNS AND SHAM PATRIOTISM.

A long list of respectable names is attached to a protest sent last week to President Harrison. They represent gentlemen residing in this city who have formerly been connected with the navy. The burden of their request is to prevent the construction of a model of a war-ship of latest pattern made of painted pine boards, brick and mortar, with guns of cement, etc., etc. These gentlemen suggest that the construction of such a sham boat to be exhibited to visitors from all parts of the world would be sure "to invite the ridicule of those familiar with the powerful naval establishments of other less powerful nations," and would cause our comparatively meager naval establishment to be yet more abused than it is now, by men who understand that the more jobs government puts up, the greater their chance for public plunder.

Nobody will be disposed to dispute these gentlemen. What have the implements and material of war to do anyhow in an exhibition of the arts of peace?

But there are "Quaker guns" in patriotism as well as in war; and if they would serve the purpose of contrasting with the genuine article as well as the sham ship would do, we might endure them. The trouble is they serve exactly the purpose of the painted logs mounted by the rebels before McClellan's splendidly equipped army. They scare honest men and real patriots, and hinder genuine movements for the promotion of American principles and the American spirit.

To speak more definitely, a "National Council of Patriotic American Societies" was held last week at a room in the Grand Pacific Hotel. It is said that there were about seventy delegates representing

FIFTY-NINE DIFFERENT SECRET ORDERS.

These gentlemen were gathered in secret session to look after the patriotism of the United States! They were presided over by Mr. Minor of this city who is interested in the movement as editor of an anti-Catholic paper in this city. To a reporter this gentleman said: "While our aims are largely political, we are not a political body nor do we intend forming a new party. Our membership represents over two million voters and we consequently hold the balance of power. By wielding this balance of power we are going to compel political managers to conform to our aims and ideas. In short, we are going to make politics more American. Let me tell you, too, that the political parties are recognizing us. This very day three politicians called on me to inquire if certain men would be acceptable to us. We are a power and will see the day when Americans will have control of America." That is, this Quaker-gun Americanism is holding in check all the political movements of the day.

The list of the fifty-nine different secret societies which are thus at work demoralizing our patriotism are not given. But from a list of the societies invited to participate in this conference we select the following which are presumptively secret lodges:

American Alliance,
American Defense Ass'n,
American Eagle Order of,
American Fraternal Circle,
American Institute of Ceries,
American Order of Foresters,
American Patriotic League,
American Progressive Leag.,
American Protestant Ass'n,
American Protestant Ass'n, (five degrees),
American Protestant Ass'n of the United States,
American Protestant Ladies' Association,
American Star Order of,
American Star Ancient Order of,
American Union Order of,
Brotherhood of the Union (H. F.),
Columbia Order of,
Daughters of the Forest,
Daughters of Liberty,
Daughters of St. George,
Enrolled Americans Ord. of,
Get-There American Benefit Association,
Golden Gate Order of the,
Home Communion of N. J.,
Home Communion of Penn.,
Independent Order of Americans,
Junior American Protestant Association,
Junior Order United American Mechanics.
Knights of Malta,
Knights of St. John (Malta),
Knights of Columbia,
Ladies' Loyal Orange Ass'n,
Loyal Knights of America,
Loyal Men of American Liberty,
Loyal Orange Institution of the U. S.,
Loyal Sons of America,
National Order of Videttes,
Native Americans Order of,
Native Sons of the Golden West,
Past Councillor's Ass'n,
Red, White and Blue Organization,
Royal Black Knights of the Camp of Israel,
Sons of America Patriotic Order of,
Sons and Daughters of America,
Sons of St. George,
Templars of Liberty,
United Americans Order of,
True Americans Order of,
United American Mechanics' Order of,
United American Mechanics' Supreme Commandery of,
United Friends of America,
United Order of Pilgrim Fathers,
United Sons of America,
United States Americans.

Lincoln's well-known axiom: America cannot exist half free and half slave, was no more certainly true than the fact that American patriotism can neither be promoted or preserved by secret lodges, nor its politics purified by them. And as for the efforts of these orders to expel Jesuitism they might as well begin fighting the devil with his own fire.

We regret to see the names of Mr. Slason Thompson, editor of America, and Mr. James M. King, secretary of the "National League for the Preservation of American Institutions," connected with the meeting as supporting the movement. Hon. John Jay, the president of this League,. would not, we are sure, approve the action of his secretary.

DR. CARRADINE'S SERMON.—To numerous inquiries we would reply that this great discourse is not printed in pamphlet form. But it will be so published immediately if orders are sent in freely this week. It can be sent postpaid for 5 cents per copy; ten for 40 cts; fifty copies for $1.50 and $2.50 per hundred. We shall wait to hear from the friends. Let your orders be quick.

If the session was not so near at an end, I would suggest a special Congressional temperance crusade to be conducted by a special committee composed of the most vigorous and successful temperance workers of the country.

The foreign custom of Sunday afternoon receptions and Sunday night "at homes" is growing in Washington society with a rapidity that is positively alarming to good Christian men and women, who believe in keeping the Sabbath day holy. Invitations to these entertainments, for that's what they are, call them what they please, are declined by many good people to whom they are sent; but shouldn't a Christian man or woman, receiving such an invitation, do more than merely to decline its acceptance? I think that they should avail themselves of every method at their disposal to let the public know that they disapprove of this Sabbath desecration, but I am afraid, in fact I know, that they don't. The reason they give is that they do not wish to offend their social friends, who are not Christians. They forget the Master's words, "He that is not for me is against me." *

Six or eight Odd-fellows' lodges met on the third floor of Odd-fellows' Hall in Reading, Pa. There are fire escapes on the building, and recently it was discovered that some boys had climbed up on these and were making themselves acquainted with the initiation services that were progressing within. The matter was investigated and the fire escapes have been so arranged that the boys cannot reach them. It is said that even if the boys could not see what was going on inside, they could hear what was being said. Members of the order, it is added, are considerably exercised over the matter. But why should they be, unless there is something which they know to be wrong in the initiatory rites of their lodges, or something at least of which they are ashamed? What men are afraid to have boys see or know, cannot be good for either men or boys. —Christian Instructor.

THE HOME.

AS GOD LEADS.

Just as God leads me I would go;
I would not ask to choose my way;
Content with what he will bestow,
Assured he will not let me stray;
So, as he leads, my path I make,
And step by step I gladly take,
A child in him confiding.

Just as God leads, I am content;
I rest me calmly in his hands;
That which he has decreed and sent,
That which his will for me commands,
I would that he should all fulfill,
That I should do his gracious will
In living or in dying.

Just as God leads, I all resign;
I trust me to my Father's will;
When reason's rays deceptive shine,
His counsel would I yet fulfill;
That which his love ordained as right
Before he brought me to the light,
My all to him resigning.

Just as God leads me, I abide
In faith, in hope, in suffering, true;
His strength is ever by my side—
Can aught my hold on him undo?
So patiently I wait and know
That he who doth my life bestow
In kindness all is sending.

Just as he leads I onward go,
Oft mid thorns and briars keen;
God does not yet his guidance show,
But in the end it shall be seen
How, by a loving Father's will,
Faithful and true, he leads me still,
A child in him confiding.

ANSWERED PRAYERS.

The whole history of missions is made up of remarkable answers to prayer. The beginning of the great work in Japan was traced to a little room where the missionaries met every day to pray.

In the State of New York is a little village nestling among the hills. Near by is a river, where the high rugged rocks and rainbow falls have a wildness of beauty unsurpassed. In this little village a minister once lived in a parsonage which was much too small for his increasing family. His salary was hardly sufficient to feed and clothe the six little children. He had been for several years principal of one of the public schools in Brooklyn, and his oldest son, who was sixteen years of age, was ready for college. He was eager and impatient to continue his studies, and the father found it hard to control the impetuous boy, who would not brook delay. He was at work in a store, but complaints came constantly from the merchant that he was more interested in his books, which he concealed behind the counter, than in selling goods; and finally the boy declared that he would run away to sea if he could not go to college. It was a time of great anxiety to the father and mother. They could never expect to feed and clothe and educate six children on a preacher's salary in those days. After much worry and planning and anxious thought they could see no way out of the perplexity, and so they dropped the burden that they could not carry, and gave their children to the Lord for special work in his service, with earnest prayers and as careful training as the mother of Moses gave her little one, though she knew that he was no longer hers, but the king's. The children grew to realize more and more that the prayers of their parents followed them constantly.

In those days people knew but little about missions. A few years before Lee, with one of the flat-headed Indians from Oregon, had visited them, and after that there was a new interest in the cause of the heathen in the minister's family. The pastor carefully scattered the Missionary Advocate among the children of the Sabbath-school. There was one little girl in his congregation into whose heart the preacher's words sank deeply. She eagerly listened, and studied with intense interest the missionary paper, with its strange pictures of lands and people beyond the sea, and always as she gazed upon those dark pictures of heathen cruelty a feeling came to her, a dim foreshadowing of the future, that some time she herself would sit under those palm-trees in India. As the years passed by, and there seemed no way to realize the dreams of her childhood, she forgot her early resolve to be a missionary. But one day, years afterward, just a few weeks before she graduated in the medical college, suddenly the forgotten vows of her childhood came to her. The rush of recollections came like a revelation, and in a flash she realized what all the training of years had been for, and she was so overcome that she burst into tears. She was the first lady physician sent to heathen lands from America as a medical missionary. The daughter of her early pastor said to her, "How were you led to become a missionary?" She replied, "It was your father who did it; the result of his labor and prayers."

The faithful minister lived to see his prayers answered also in a remarkable way in his own family. His sons became ministers of the Gospel, and his youngest daughter a missionary. His eldest son was the late Dean of the Theological Seminary of Boston University, a school which has sent scores of missionaries to foreign lands—to China, India, Japan, Mexico, South America, and to the islands of the sea.—Missionary Review.

HOW MISSIONARIES ARE MADE.

Dr. Cyrus Hamlin has told in a five-minute speech how it was he came to be a missionary. He said: "In the vast majority of cases missionaries are made by the influence of the family. My widowed mother made me a missionary. She had me read every Sunday out of the Panoplist, and then later out of the Missionary Herald. We had in those days in our town a missionary contribution box, a cent box, and we were encouraged to earn some special cents for that box. I remember well one occasion which was, I think, a turning-point in my experience. When the fall muster came every boy had a pocketful of cents to spend. My mother gave me seven cents, saying, as she gave them, 'Perhaps you will put a cent or two in the contribution box in Mrs. Farrar's porch on the common.' So I began to think as I went along, Shall I put in one or shall it be two? Then I thought two cents was pretty small, and I came up to three—three cents for the heathen and four cents for ginger-bread; but that did not sound right, did not satisfy me, so I turned it the other way, and said four cents shall go for the heathen. Then I thought the boys will ask me how much I have to spend, and three cents is rather too small a sum to talk about. 'Hang it all,' I said, 'I'll put the whole in.' So in it all went. When I told my mother some years after that I was going to be a missionary, she broke down and said, 'I have always expected it.'"—Missionary Review.

HEROISM AT HOME.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes. How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action. We become tired of the routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We forget that the world bestows no titles as noble as father, mother, sister, or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care of sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they may accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to garner. If some one in that dear home can look back in after years, and as he tenderly utters our name say, "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness; to her I owe my present happiness," we may well say, "I have not lived in vain."—National Presbyterian.

A DYING BOY'S PRAYERS.

An incident illustrating the power of prayer was recently mentioned by Dr. F. D. Sandford in the course of an address. He said: A little boy in the charge of a friend of mine gave himself upon his dying bed as a Christian to God. He was only fourteen years of age, but he grieved that he could do nothing for Jesus. Upon his bed he was conscious of the Lord revealing himself to him. The result was that he said to his pastor one day, "Well, I am full of love for Jesus Christ, but yet I cannot do anything for him." The pastor said, "Yes, you can do a great deal for Jesus." "What can I do?" "You can pray; if you have your heart right you can pray, and you will prevail." He began praying. Every night when his father and mother came home and told him what was going on in the church, he said, "Mother, who asked for prayers to-night?" and they told him. Soon his little form was laid away, and under his pillow they found a crumpled piece of paper in his writing, with sixteen names upon it, every one of them crossed out, all converted. Now, if a boy can do that, we can.

A YOUNG HERO.

"Coward! coward!" shouted the boys scornfully. Ned Morse's face flushed, but he made no effort to prove that he did not deserve the epithet which his schoolmates were bestowing upon him. The boys had been skating, and Walter Banks had dared Ned to a trial of bravery.

"Do you see that old stump yonder? Now let us see who can first skate down opposite to it and come back."

Ned shook his head. "No, father said the ice was not safe the other side of the bridge, and he told me not to go below it. I'll race you in any other direction, though."

"So you're afraid of getting in the water, are you?" sneered Walter, who was very jealous of Ned's reputation as the best skater in school. "It's perfectly safe there, but you want an excuse to get out of racing with me. You know we cannot go far in any other direction. You are a coward, isn't he, boys?"

"Coward! coward!" echoed the little group who were special friends of Walter's, and were glad to have an opportunity to taunt Ned with cowardice.

"I'll prove to you that it is perfectly safe," and Walter sped away toward the other end of the lake, darting under the bridge and over the glassy surface beyond almost as swiftly as a bird could fly.

The boys watched his swift, graceful motions in silence, but suddenly a cry of alarm escaped them as through the clear frosty air they heard a sharp, crackling sound, and saw Walter throw up his arms and with a loud scream for help vanish through a hole in the ice.

Half a dozen boys started for the scene of the accident, Ned pausing to snatch up a fence rail which lay on the bank near the edge of the pond. In a moment he had overtaken the others, and encumbered as he was with his burden he kept pace with them.

"Stop," cried one of the boys; "we shall all get in the water if we go any farther. See, the ice is cracking now."

He retreated, and all his comrades but Ned followed his example. The ice was indeed perilously thin, and as Ned drew near the dark circle of water, he threw himself flat upon the ice, and pushing the rail in front of him so it made a slender bridge across the opening, he dragged himself toward the edge.

For a few moments Walter had kept his head above water by clinging to the edge of the ice, but it had crumbled away in his grasp, and just as Ned reached him he sank out of sight. When he arose again to the surface, Ned's hand caught his collar and held him firmly till he recovered his breath.

"Walter, do you think you can climb upon this rail?" Ned asked quietly. "If your clothes do not drag you down too much, you can get out at once that way, and crawl over the ice till you get where it will bear your weight. If you can't manage it I will hold you till some one comes with a rope to help us."

"I think I can manage it," Walter answered, and making a vigorous effort he dragged himself shivering from his icy bath, upon the rail. In a moment more he had reached the ice and crawled along it till a safe place was reached.

"Now put on my overcoat and skate home as fast as you can," Ned said, and the boys cheered with triumph as they saw the boy who had been in such peril gliding swiftly toward them, with his rescuer at his side. Walter's home was very near the lake, and he was soon tucked snugly up between hot blankets, recovering from his cold bath.

When he entered the school-room the next day he walked up to Ned and held out his hand. "You know I can't thank you enough for saving my life at the peril of your own, old boy," he said, "but I want to beg your pardon before all the fellows for having called you a coward. You have proved yourself to be brave when I was only foolhardy, and I have learned the difference between a coward and a hero. You would have been a coward to have risked your life because I dared you, but when you could save me by venturing into danger you were a hero."

No one ever called Ned a coward again, for the boys had all learned that day the difference between foolhardiness and bravery, and they knew that the coward was not the one who was brave enough to withstand taunts rather than unnecessarily risk his life.—Christian Intelligencer.

TEMPERANCE.

WORLD'S FAIR IN RUM-RIDDEN CHICAGO.

It has been claimed for high license that the system would reduce the number of saloons, and the "business" would fall into more "respectable" hands. The Voice in a startling article shows that in Kansas City in 1882 there were 283 saloons under a tax of $280 a year, while in 1890 there were 454 saloons under a tax of $800. Other statements are on the same scale, including the fact that the liquor traffic is absolutely in possession of that city government. Years ago when the agitation for high license began in Chicago, it was claimed that license would "take the liquor question out of politics." That claim is on record, and should be remembered when it is correctly stated that our present city government is the creature of, and therefore controlled by, the city's saloons and the gambling fraternity. If things go on this way, he who attends the Columbian Fair will need to come to this city armed to the teeth. The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THEY COULDN'T BEAR THE LIGHT.

(Philadelphia correspondence of the Voice.)—Moore & Sinnott, the big firm of wholesale liquor dealers, who last spring, just after the Voice exposure through the Crowell interview of the secrets of the Anti-prohibition campaign, sued the Pennsylvania Brewers' Associations for some $20,000 loaned the latter for use in the campaign, have compromised their suit. The reason given for this action is that the liquor men did not want any more campaign secrets brought out and they feared the searching process of the witness stand. Some $18,000 of this sum lent to the brewers it was alleged in the complaint was paid by them to Pennsylvania newspapers for printing articles against Prohibition as follows: Delaware County Citizen, $500; Philadelphia Inquirer, $2,488.52; Catholic Standard, $325; Commercial List, $187.25; Philadelphia Record, $2,482; Evening Bulletin, $1,250; Evening Star, $225.09; Philadelphia Ledger, $145.30; North American, $2,942.20; Philadelphia Times, $3,516.30; Evening Telegraph, $4,000.

A Voice reporter who talked with one of the attorneys for four of the brewers in the case asked him if it is true that the matter was compromised because the liquor men did not wish a further exposure of their campaign secrets. The attorney answered that "It is true." I also asked the brewers' attorney what premium was paid to the Anti-prohibition "workers" that made the funds run short, and he said "none in the city, the banner money went into the country districts."

The reporter also saw Harry P. Crowell, one of the chief defendants, and the secretary of the brewers' campaign committee. Mr. Crowell refused to say if the suit was compromised because the liquor men did not wish to reveal their secrets, intimating to the reporter that the Voice was "a dirty sheet."

SMITING THE HAND THAT SAVED THEM.

[From the New York Wine and Spirit Gazette.]

The reason why Moore and Sinnott waived their right to the full amount of their claim, was the apprehension that all the minor and major details of the campaign would be exposed, and the brewers were shrewd enough to see the difference between statements for newspaper interviews and testimony under oath. That garrulous and mentally unbalanced Harry P. Crowell, ex-Secretary of the Brewers' Association, had been subpoenaed!

NOTES OF BATTLE.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Feb. 12.—A general crusade against saloon men was inaugurated here to-day, forty-five liquor injunction suits being filed this morning. A new feature in the cases is that all the city officers are charged with conspiracy in permitting saloons to run by accepting a license fee or monthly fine, and it is sought to enjoin the officers from accepting the money. The mayor, the city clerk and the city marshal have been enjoined by the parties bringing the suit from collecting the fines.

Sioux City, Iowa, Feb. 17.—The saloon men of this city, who have been unmolested for several months, are uneasy at the appearance of a detective from Des Moines who is in the employ of the State Temperance Alliance and is busy making a transcript of evidence in the police courts regarding all who have been paying the monthly license of $50 required by the city. It is said that vigorous measures will be used against the saloons of this city and Council Bluffs.

Springfield, O., Feb. 16.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city and neighboring towns started a campaign against indecent show-bills to-day, beginning with the posters of an English Folly Company billed to play here. In some places white paper was pasted over the immodest pictures of women, and in some instances the bills were pulled down. Public feeling runs high and the women have the support and sympathy of the better element in the community. It is expected that proprietors of bill-boards will take the matter into court and ask for injunctions restraining the reformers and also bring suits for damages. The opera-house people say the crusade will help the show.

The King of Samoa will have "no spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks whatever sold, given, or offered to be bought or bartered by any native Samoan or Pacific Islander resident in Samoa."

The defeat of Senator H. W. Blair, of New Hampshire, and the election of Gallinger as his successor in the United States Senate, was a square triumph of the whisky ring of the Republican party of that State over the moral and temperate minority. The New York Voice says the friends of Gallinger kept practically an open bar during the contest, and the victory over Blair was celebrated by a big drunk. It is hoped that Mr. Blair will now find his only field of usefulness is in the Prohibition party.

The Chicago Champion, a rabid liquor organ, says: "If the unreasonable, stupid antagonist of the saloon could only understand what a loathsome, disgusting object the sot and habitual drunkard is to the saloon-keeper they would not abuse the latter as they do. Let them see to it that the drunkard is dealt with according to law, and they will accomplish the reforms they prate about." The New York Voice replies: "You Pecksniffian old hypocrite! Isn't there a law, in nearly every State, forbidding sales to 'an habitual drunkard?' No wonder the sot is a 'loathsome sight' to the saloon-keeper, for he is in every case a standing (or staggering) evidence of the saloon-keeper's habitual disregard of law."

"Papa made me drunk."—These are the last words repeated over and over again, of a little boy who died from the effects of whisky. His father carried a jug of whisky home with him from town, and gave each of his children a dram out of it. This child was brought under the control of the whisky devil by the drink given him, and slipped to the jug, as soon as he could do so unobserved, to get as much of the fiery liquid as his cravings called for. When found, he was lying on the floor by the jug, unable to move, and insensible. The doctor was sent for, and he was roused sufficiently to say and keep saying till he died, "Papa made me drunk."—Cal. Voice.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A question of conscience. Vs. 15–19. We notice (1) that Naaman was a grateful man, and he wanted to leave with the prophet some substantial token of his gratitude. Yet how many who have felt the cleansing power of Christ, forget to leave a thank offering, and spend on themselves money that should be given to his cause. How soon the world would be evangelized if every member of our churches was as ready as Naaman to offer of their substance in grateful testimonial of their spiritual healing! (2) He was a brave man. His humble confession of the one true God was made in the presence of his whole retinue, which comprised without doubt some of the noble and great of Syria. This was not a small thing to do, and must be remembered when we come to the point of conscience which he raises later. Had Naaman been an Israelite, Elisha might have accepted the money, not as pay, but as a tribute to the Lord whose servant he was. Numerous passages in the Bible, for instance 1 Sam. 9: 8, prove that this was the common practice. The prophets of the old dispensation, like the apostles and evangelists of the new, had to have their temporal wants supplied by these voluntary offerings. But what is lawful in one case may not be expedient or even right in another. It was important that Elisha should thus demonstrate by refusing Naaman's offered gift his utter unlikeness to the necromancers of that day, and glorify Jehovah among the heathen by doing this wonderful work of healing "without money and without price." The true preacher of righteousness, and the minister of a false religion or a corrupted Christianity can be easily distinguished by the same sign that marked the two classes in Elisha's time. An exalted rank often makes it more difficult for a man to serve God. Naaman, as the king's prime minister and favorite, would be obliged to accompany his royal master when paying his customary devotions to Rimmon. How could he help the usual act of homage, even though his allegiance was all given to Jehovah? Elisha's answer shows that he had much of the spirit of One, of whom it was said, "The bruised reed shall he not break." He would not bind a heavy burden on the weak shoulders of one just emerging from heathenism. Hence Elisha's beautiful answer, "Peace be with you." The Spirit of God would teach him what to do. But no one can gather from this a permit in our own Christian land to bow before the shrine of a false god while professed servants of the true. Ministers and deacons who believed that liquor in its place was a good thing, before science and the added light we have on God's Word was poured on this subject, were pardonable. Not so the man who at the present day votes for high license. And similarly with the lodge question. We have no right to say without qualification that no lodgemen are Christians, but if they are Christians they will certainly be taught of God their duty in this matter. And so of many other things about which we can lay down no cast-iron rule. Elisha's example should teach us how very patient and tender and wise we ought to be when dealing with weak consciences.

2. The curse of covetousness. Vs. 20–27. Gehazi seemed to be placed in circumstances the most favorable for making him a good man—he was the servant and constant associate of the prophet Elisha. But we see in the case of Judas that the springs of conduct run deeper than circumstance. Gehazi had that covetous spirit which has been the destruction of more souls than even a desire for sensual pleasures. He could not enter into the purity and nobility of motive which made Elisha refuse such great wealth; for covetousness is a passion that narrows the whole being, and makes the one who harbors it incapable of understanding a generous act on the part of another. It is strange that having seen so much of his master's prophetic power he should dare to come before him with a falsehood; but the covetous man, as pictured by John Bunyan, is always looking downward, and his vision is confined to a very short range. "Shall cleave unto thee and thy seed forever." The saddest result of indulged sin is that it tends to permanence and involves generations unborn. Many a covetous man has spent his life heaping a great fortune together to have it squandered by dissolute sons. Rumsellers and men who live on the vices of their fellow creatures are almost invariably cursed in their children; and thus, "Thou shalt not covet," is written in providence as well as in revelation.

Religious News.

—The address delivered by Dr. Charles A. Briggs in taking the Chair of Biblical Theology in Union Theological Seminary, New York, and repeated by him recently in Chicago, is stirring up no little commotion, especially in Presbyterian circles. It was highly liberal, the doctor recognizing not only the Bible and the church but reason as fountains of authority. He has been very strong against the Westminster statements of doctrine and naturally has alienated quite a number of the more orthodox wing.

—Over six hundred thousand copies of the works of D. L. Moody have been sold. It is worth noting that the writings of the evangelist sell on the trains along with those of Colonel Ingersoll et al.

—Mr. Moody prolongs his stay in Boston through February, preaching at Tremont Temple both Sabbath morning and evening. Dr. Philips Brooks, Rev. George A. Gordon, Rev. P. S. Moxom and others have united in requesting that the evangelist hold a series of meetings in the Back Bay section of Boston.

—Great preparations are being made to have the international convention of Christian Endeavorers at Minneapolis in July the largest ever gathered. Of the 750,000 members the world over at least ten thousand are expected on this occasion, and the Exposition Building is being prepared to receive the concourse.

—Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, when he went to Washington, united at once with the First Congregational church, and took charge of a Bible class, and became a regular attendant at the weekly prayer meeting.

—"Gail Hamilton," Miss Abigail Dodge, conducts a Bible talk on Sabbath afternoons in Secretary Blaine's drawing-room at Washington Her audience is usually composed of the ladies connected with the Cabinet. Mrs. Harrison is often present.

—The Fifth United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, have arranged to send a missionary to India. They made choice of Mr. E. L. Porter, a student just finishing his course in the seminary, and the choice of the congregation was confirmed by the Board of Foreign Missions at their last meeting. Mr. Porter is known to many through his evangelistic work in the mining towns of the State, having been engaged for two summers in that work under the direction of the Pennsylvania State W. C. T. U. He will leave for his field of labor in the fall.

—The first international convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions was held in Cleveland, Ohio. Five hundred delegates from all parts of the world were present, and many of the leading colleges in America were represented. The movement had its origin at the Mount Hermon meeting of college men in the summer of 1886. At that time 100 of the 251 students in attendance from all parts of the United States and Canada volunteered for the foreign field. Since then the movement has been extended among the institutions of learning on this continent, until now there are over 5,000 students who have signified their willingness and desire to become foreign missionaries. Over 300 of their number have already sailed. Many others are ready to go whenever the way opens, but a large majority are in the various stages of preparation.

—The interesting fact is stated that while the number of Christians in Japan is only about one in one thousand, and in no province do Christians even approach to a majority, yet there have been eleven members of the House of Representatives chosen from their number. There are also three professed Christians in the House of Peers. A Christian has been chosen president of the new House of Representatives. A former vice-president of the liberal party is an active Presbyterian elder.

—It is said that Hebrew is rapidly becoming again a living tongue in Palestine. Jews driven by persecution from other countries are gathering in the land of Israel. They do not know each other's language, but all of them understand something of Hebrew, and the consequence is that Hebrew is becoming the medium of communication among them. Two weekly newspapers are now published in Jerusalem in Hebrew. It would seem expedient that missionaries to the Jews in Palestine should be able to speak in the Hebrew language.

—The missionaries in Africa deem the work of one woman equal to that of twelve men, since the women can go anywhere, even among the fiercest tribes, unmolested. The female missionaries are held in high esteem; their motives are never questioned, and they are listened to with greatest respect.

VOLUMES OF TESTIMONY.

NOTES FROM LETTERS RECEIVED FROM SIGNERS OF THE CALL.

J. G. Craighead, (Pres.) Dean of the Theological Dep't Howard University.

This [secret lodges] is an alarming evil in the churches of the colored race.

H. A. Thompson, Chairman Prohibition State Executive Committee, Columbus, O.

Your paper received and I return it with my signature. You will see by the letterhead that at present I am looking after the interests of the State Prohibition party in Ohio. It will, therefore, be uncertain whether I can personally be at your convention or not. Will depend upon the work on hand. Will if I can.

Rev. Wm. M. Brooks, D. D., (Cong'l) Pres. of Tabor College, Tabor, Iowa.

I can subscribe to all in the enclosed call except the paragraph [third] I have marked. I cannot say I believe connection with a secret society is "always injurious, etc." I do believe they are likely to make much of the lodge and little of the church, or much of the church and little of the lodge, and with what you are trying to secure I am heartily in sympathy.

Prof. Galusha Anderson, D.D., Baptist Union Theological Seminary, Morgan Park, Ill.

I am not a member of any secret organization, but I see no practical advantage in conferences on this subject; the only remedy for this, or any other evil, is to preach the Gospel in its purity, and to keep on preaching it. Spend the time consumed in conferences in preaching the Gospel.

Rev. W. P. Hamilton, (Cong'l) Childersburg, Ala.

I take great pleasure in signing the paper and endorse the ideas set forth by the National Christian Association. I believe that secret societies are a great evil to our country, and also a great hindrance to the cause of Christ. Rest assured that you have my full sympathy and prayers. And I hope that the efforts that are being put forth by your Christian body may result in the saving of many men and women from the thraldom of the oath-bound societies. I have endeavored to use my influence against secret societies, and I shall continue to do so.

Rev. J. A. Thompson, President Tarkio College, Tarkio, Missouri.

You have my sympathy and prayers in the work in which you are engaged. I have not seen Rev. Joseph Cook's address, and should be pleased to receive a copy of it.

Prof. M. S. Terry, Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.

I am not a member of any secret society or lodge, but have no convictions of the evil of such societies deep enough to lead me to assume any responsibility in the proposed conference on the secret lodge system.

Rev. H. S. DeForest, D.D., President of Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.

I gladly sign the call and wish the conference large success, though I shall not be able to attend. The evils of secret societies blossom out most fully among the colored people of the South, whom we are seeking to reach. I wish you God-speed in this difficult, but heroic undertaking.

Rev. H. H. George, D. D., ex-Pres. Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa.

You can attach my name to that call for a Christian convention, and with that my hand and my heart for a grand convention. I felt that the after-wave of the first Congress of the Churches held in Chicago was more powerful and wider reaching than any thing that had gone before it. The united testimony of so many Christians against the orders was weighty and effective. Yours for Christ and the right.

M. H. Wright, pastor Cong'l church, Port Sanilac, Mich.

I am heartily opposed to the secret societies which deluge our country, but did not feel that I could in every thing endorse your circular sent for my signature. There is no doubt about the evil of the lifeless ritualism of the societies; and even the wretched mockery implied in some, I fear. To a call for a meeting antagonistic to them I am willing my name should be affixed.

Rev. Josiah B. Clark, (Cong'l) Ellis, Mass.

I have received a circular stating the principles of the Association, and am glad to be able to say that I am in full sympathy with them, and that I am satisfied that the relation of those secret organizations to the interests of morality and religion is such that their character and tendencies ought to be thoroughly investigated and fully set before the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ. "The Call" you ask me to put my name to I cheerfully sign, with the understanding that, while I express my fullest sympathy with its spirit and aim, I shall not be able to be present at the meeting on account of my age (83). I have always borne my testimony against secret organizations, even to being blackballed by members of clubs in my own denomination. I have on several occasions sought to discuss the matter in the papers, but have found those who are at the head are either willingly or by constraint fixed to exclude all discussion. This is an evil we cannot well measure. One of the worst evils of the organizations is the great influence they exert in circumscribing the power of the friends of temperance. That power has been diminishing for twenty-five years in Vermont. It has come about in this way: Twenty-five years ago every pastor in about every Christian denomination annually gave in a report on temperance. But for ten years little or no attention has been given to it. Every pastor either lectured or obtained lecturers on the subject; but nothing of this is done now. Why? The ground is taken up by the secret societies. The matter is managed by their clique. The influence is to a large degree limited to the organization, and the main current is in the wrong direction. I will put my name down to show my good will, and shall pray for God's help that some means may be devised to bring Christian people to see the evil and to give their influence to bring it to an end. Yours in every good work.

Rev. E. G. Cooper, (U. B.) Albany, Mo.

I am ever eager to let my mite of influence be used against oath-bound secretism. I think the devil's millennium has at length been reached in our country on the line or multiplication of secret orders. I am in favor of keeping the movement moving which we inaugurated years ago, by which light is let on these systems of heathenism or Baal worship. We put the brake on their old car here by publications, lectures and public exposes, and its wheels have dragged heavily ever since.

Rev. T. P. Robb, (Ref. Pres.) Linton, Iowa.

I most cordially sign my name to the call for the Conference of Churches. The one of last year was a grand assemblage of God's people, and surely did untold good. It ought to be just the beginning—"the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees," to be followed by such united and decisive action as will secure the triumph of the truth. Another reason why we ought to be to the front in this movement and make our influence felt, is seen in the significant, and I think, alarming manner in which secretism is spreading. It laid its hand on the trades some years ago, and they are tributary. Now the rural districts are invaded, and the farmers are being drawn into the dangerous net, in its most dangerous line—viz., political organization. If the church hopes to maintain her honor as a witness for "the truth as it is in Jesus," now is her golden opportunity.

J. M. Billingsley, Petersburg, Ill.

I believe that much time and money is unnecessarily wasted on secret organizations that should be given to the cause of Christ. I am sure "that some," yea, many "oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country." To meet in confereuce and deliberate, so as best to meet the opposing foe, perphaps, would be profitable, and I am sure, not wrong, unless harm is made of it. Too harsh and sweeping efforts and denunciations are not always the most effective. Let your moderation be known to all men, is advice from the Lord. We always do well to obey the Lord.

Rev. Julius D. Pettigrew, (Cong'l) Paris, Texas.

Rest assured that you have my heartiest sympathy and my continued prayers for the final success of this effort on the part of the believers of Christ, to overthrow this iniquitous system of vice and crime. I heartily indorse the movement, and shall do all that I can to advance the cause, both sectional and nationally. I am for Jesus and church, and against everything that oppose them.

Rev. M. E. Sloan, (Cong'l) Nat, Alabama.

I have received from you a letter asking me to sign the enclosed "Call." I do so. I am sorry that such a convention is necessary to get Christian people to consider such a subject. Why spend so much in effort and expense to consult and pray, in order to find out how to be saved from such institutions as secret societies? The New Testament gives all the information needed. If Christian people would follow and proclaim the simple spirit of truth therein expressed, such questions would be solved, in the nature of the case, without need of consultation for human schemes of salvation. The Spirit of God, admitted into the heart, is what men need. A recognition of divine sonship very naturally cuts one loose from such artificial and inconsistent bonds as pertain to all secret societies.

Elder Nathan Callender, (Baptist) Montdale, Pa.

I am in favor of the proposed conference of Christians in Chicago or some other large city. What is to hinder us from passing it about among the great towns of our country? The first was in the "Hub" (Boston) very properly, the next in Chicago. Why not the next in Philadelphia, or in New York? This is to suggest. Let us test the loyalty of our clergymen in the big cities, by going right among them. I am much encouraged by the result of these meetings thus far. Great and noble men are coming into the work.

Rev. J. P. Hershiser, (United Brethren) Cohoctah, Mich.

I am in sympathy with the work of the N. C. A., and would be glad to attend the conference at Chicago, if it were possible. I believe secret societies to be of no earthly good to church or state, nor civilization, and therefore should be blotted out of existence.

Rev. S. C. Olds, Larchwood, Iowa.

I most cheerfully sign the "Call" and may God speed the work. I find the secret lodge system one of the worst hindrances to success in the Master's work.

Rev. Thomas M. Chalmers, Lawrence, Kan.

Trust you will have another grand Conference. I got the report of last Conference, containing Dr. Cook's address. But you may send me ten copies of separate addresses for use here among pastors who are bound in the bondage of the lodge. I'll send you a dollar later to help your cause.

News of the Week.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate confirmed the nomination of Foster for Secretary of the Treasury, but it was not until a serious effort had been made to defeat him. The effort was a failure, but it brought out the fact that there is still some feeling between the President and those Senators who are known as the silver Senators.

The immigration bill passed by the Senate Friday provides for the exclusion from admission into the United States of all insane persons, paupers, or persons likely to become paupers, persons suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases, persons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, polygamists, and contract laborers.

A new polar expedition is on foot. It will be undertaken by Civil Engineer Robert E. Peary, U. S. N., who has secured leave of absence for eighteen months, with this object in view, from the Navy Department. Mr. Peary proposes to start on his expedition from St. Johns, Newfoundland, about May 1. His idea is to go north as far as a whaling steamer will carry him, and then strike for the north pole on foot across Greenland.

CHICAGO.

A most astounding revelation is made respecting Nora Shaunessy, 13 years old, who was sent by a police judge to the House of the Good Shepherd, a Roman Catholic institution called a reformatory, on Oct. 13, 1885, to remain six weeks. She was forcibly kept there for more than five years, having been released Wednesday. During these five years and nearly four months she has been deprived of any education and has been compelled to spend all of her time in the peformance of menial work, so that her entire life is blighted and warped. The offense for which the girl was sent to this institution was picking up coal on a railroad track. For this offense she was fined $25 at the Armory Police Court, and in default of the money was sentenced to six weeks in the House of the Good Shepherd. That was the sentence of the court—six weeks. More than five years was the term of imprisonment imposed by the Mother Superior at that reformatory institution.

Geo. C. Ingham, a young lawyer well know to the public for his assistance in prosecuting the anarchist and Cronin cases, died suddenly Thursday evening of heart disease.

O. D. Emmons was fined $50 for swearing and using improper language before Justices Prindiville and Bradwell.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The grand total of all the money appropriated in behalf of the Exposition, by the United States, the Exposition company, the States and Territories, corporate bodies, trade associations, manufacturers and foreign nations, up to date, is about $32,000,000. Treasurer Seeberger says the largest building in the fair grounds will be the manufacturer's building, whose roof will cover 31.1 broad acres of exhibits. The machinery building, its annex and power annex, will extend over 26.7 acres. The agricultural building of iron and stone will take 9.2 acres, with its annexes. The administration building, surmounted by a dome commanding the buildings of the fair and forming the central figure of the grand court, will be a beautiful feature, although but 1.4 acres are assigned to it. The transportation building will cover about ten acres. The horticultural building will be a crystal palace of glass and iron, having a grand central dome, overlooking domelike pavillions on each end. It will occupy 5.7 acres. The mines and mining building and the electrical building have each an area of 5.6 acres. The government building will use 3.6 acres and the woman's building, built in a severely classic style, 2.3 acres. The fisheries building, covering 1.7 acres, will have a colored exterior of Spanish style.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. "March April May."

The appearance of this familiar headline immediately suggests to everybody the use of the popular medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, with which it is inseparably connected by many years of use in advertising.

There is no question but that at this season nearly everybody needs to take a reliable blood purifier to cleanse the system of impurities which have accumulated during the winter, and the popularity which Hood's Sarsaparilla has gained as a is simply wonderful. Druggists say the sale of this remedy is larger than that of any other in their stores, and in many cases exceeds the sale of all other sarsaparillas and blood purifiers combined.

It is pertinent to inquire the reason for this great business which has grown up so rapidly as to cause amazement throughout the retail and wholesale drug trade. Followed down to rock bottom, the fact seems to be that the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla rests upon the basis of ABSOLUTE MERIT.

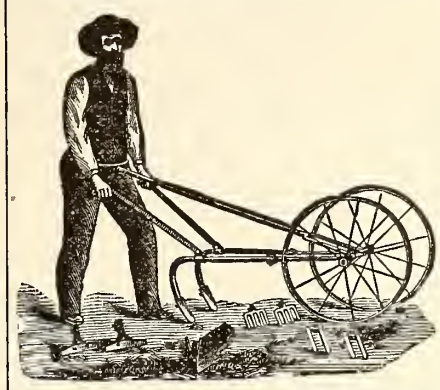
The medicine has proven so generally successful for those complaints and diseases for which it is advertised, that it has won its way to the front among medicines. Of course liberal advertising has helped greatly, but many people have learned to their sorrow that the most lavish expenditure in advertising avails nothing if not backed up by merit in the goods.



Thousands of our readers will take Hood's Sarsaparilla this season; and to those who have never tried it, we say take Hood's Sarsaparilla for a "spring medicine."

EVERITT'S MAN-WEIGHT

HOE, CULTIVATOR PLOW, ETC., SINGLE AND DOUBLE WHEEL.

Will Revolutionize Hand-Power Cultivation—Makes Keeping a Horse an Unnecessary Expense in Many Cases.

This new Invention is a Great Boon to all Cultivators of the Soil, and must be Classed with the Great Inventions of the Age, yet it is so simple that the natural question with every one is, "Why did I not think of that?" And so nicely does it fill a want existing with thousands of gardeners, nurserymen, seedmen, florists, and farmers, that after the first trial they invariably conclude to "never do without it." The Man-Weight Cultivator is worth its weight in silver, if not in gold, to any one who uses man-power in cultivating the soil. All who have used the machine unanimously indorse it in the strongest language they know how to use. We have heard sensible, shrewd gardeners remark, "I would not sell it for $25," "$100 would not tempt me to do without it one season," etc. It is the only machine we know of that suggests sufficient merit and practical utility at first sight to sell without a trial. Gardeners at once acknowledge that it is just what they want, and many remarked that "if all gardeners knew of this machine they could not be made fast enough to supply the demand."

All other Garden Tools, Seed Drills, Rollers, etc., can be attached and run with our propeller with many times the power and greater ease than by hand power.

SINGLE WHEEL cultivator, with attachments, price $6.00. W't, 15 lbs.

DOUBLE WHEEL, with attachments, $8.00. W't, 20 lbs.

With every Double Wheel Machine the extra parts are furnished necessary to convert it into the single wheel machine, without extra charge. Thus practically giving the two machines for the price of one.

This best of all hand cultivators to everybody free as follows:

Two-wheel for 18 new subscribers. ($22.50.) Single-wheel for 15 new subscribers. ($18.00.)

Two-wheel machine, 1 renewal and one new subscriber for $8.50. Same for two new subscribers.

Single wheel and same for $7.00. Express or freight extra.

Home and Health.

LIVING ON $200 A YEAR.

Goldsmith's Vicar was "passing rich with 40 pounds a year." An English magazine writer says that her annual income is just that and no more.

She rents one neat, pretty room in the suburbs of London for 8 pounds, does her own cooking, and her dietary costs but 5 shillings a week. She puts aside a pound for sickness, which she knows almost nothing of, 55 shillings for charity, 60 for travel, literature and stationery; 6 pounds for dress, which includes a tennis suit and evening dress; goes one year to Scotland and the next to Belgium, besides an annual visit to a brother at Nottingham.

She is a teacher of French and drawing, entertains a Sunday-school class, gives treats to an association of working girls and two musical evenings to friends.

All this within $200 a year. Let wasteful Americans learn a lesson! The brilliant, brainy daughter of the Great Gladstone dines in a gingham dress. Undue attention to dress is usually a confession of either social or mental inferiority.

TO HAVE BEAUTIFUL FUCHSIAS AND OTHER PLANTS.

Get slips of those you wish to raise as near the first of the year as possible. Put them into rich earth, and water frequently with warm water. As soon as good roots show, put them into pots two inches in diameter, and set them in sawdust or a box of earth, burying the pots to the brim. When they have grown an inch or two high, tie them to slender sticks, as they grow faster and better if supported. Keep them continually moist with warm water. Examine them frequently, if they show rapid growth, to see if the roots have reached the outside of the earth; as soon as they do this, give them a larger pot, and so on till it is time to set them out of doors. Then as they increase in size, give them liquid twice or three times a week, using horse manure. To prepare it, fill a bucket two-thirds full. Pour boiling water over it, and cover; when cool, stir it up a little in the water, then let it settle. Use one-fourth liquid manure to three-fourths water. This mixture benefits most rapidly growing plants, and answers well for fuchsias, geraniums, amaryllis, gloxinias, cactus, etc. Pansies set in beds, if watered twice a week, will keep up their size, and in some instances have increased it. The manure thus treated will last two months (with repeated scaldings), and afterwards can be used to enrich the earth for pot plants.

Fuchsias are much benefited by being watered overhead once a day in a moderate temperature, and twice a day in extremely hot weather. In summer they should be put in the shade, but not under a tree. Sun in the morning or evening does not hurt them; but mid-day sun in summer is too scorching. There are several winter-blooming varieties that do well in the house. These must not be allowed to bloom in summer. Fuchsias treated as directed above become a mass of bloom and continue their blossoms during the warm season.—Experience in American Garden.

FARM NOTES.

THE FARMER OF THE FUTURE.

The Rural New Yorker has been publishing the opinions of some of its correspondents on the "Farmer of the Future." A correspondent who locates the farmer's millennium somewhere about the year 1915, says:

"The size of farms will be limited by statute. One person will not be allowed to gobble up everything adjoining him simply because he has the money to do it. Most of the farms will be owned by the men who till them. There will still be a few tenant farmers, but the rent they will pay, after deducting taxes and two per cent on whatever amount is still unpaid, will be applied to the purchase of the land. The man who sells a farm will be permitted to secure the unpaid balance with a mortgage, but he will not be allowed to foreclose that mortgage within 10 years from the date of the last payment on the principal, provided the buyer annually pays all taxes and two per cent on the amount due and unpaid. On foreclosure of the mortgage the seller will be obliged to refund to the buyer all money paid him, less an annual interest of two per cent on the amount due and unpaid, and reasonable indemnity for deterioration of the land, buildings, etc., while under his control.

"There will be no fences except those around pastures and barn lots, and these will be composed of twisted, looped and curled wires with barbs one-eighth of an inch long.

"Farmers will individually cultivate a smaller acreage and do it thoroughly and scientifically. Instead of robbers they will be wardens of the land. The needs of the soil will be ascertained by experts employed by the Government, and farmers will supply these needs intelligently and economically.

"A smaller number of expensive implements will be kept by individual farmers. Harvesters, corn-huskers, haying-machines, potato planters and diggers, etc., will be owned by skilled machinists, who will make a living by contracting for and doing the work.

"There will be two distinct kinds of plows in use. One will cut a wide furrow, and by means of a removable mold-board either turn the soil over as now, or allow it to glide back over the share through steel breakers and fall crumbled into the furrow. The other will cut a narrow furrow and run deep, and will be used for special purposes. Both will have light wheels and the plowman will ride.

"All crop cultivating will be surface work. Deep root cutting, gouging and hilling will be things of the past. The new implements will thoroughly stir the entire surface, working close to the plants, and will have steel knives for cutting off large weeds and numerous narrow teeth for uprooting small ones, all of which will be completely under the control of the operator who can either ride or walk.

"Corn husking will be done by machinery. The implement will take a row of corn as fast as a team can walk, cut the stalks off close to the ground, strip off the ears, husk and drop them into a wagon driven alongside, cut the stalks into half inch pieces and either shoot them into a light frame, drop them in heaps or rows, or scatter them evenly over the field to be plowed under.

"More corn and stalks will be converted into silage. The crop will be cut and bound into small bundles by machinery, shocked up and partly cured and then cut into the silo. More silage and less hay will be used on the farm.

"Wagons will be broad-tired and low-down. The box will be steel-bound and so constructed that one or both sides or ends can be removed almost instantly. The bottom will be in two or more sections, easily taken apart and put together.

"Small, electric engines of one to four horse-power will be found on many farms. They will be sold at a price which will enable almost any farmer to own one, and will be used for grinding feed, pumping water, etc., etc.

"The art of making malleable glass will be discovered, and many acres in the Northern States will be covered with it and devoted to growing vegetables and semi-tropical fruits for the local markets. Many farmers will cover their barnyards, piggeries, etc., with a roof composed of this material and sheet aluminum-steel.

"Sugar beets will be grown on thousands of acres in our Western States, which are now devoted to corn, oats and wheat, and we shall be making 75 per cent of all the sugar we consume.

"The mines and manufactories of the country will be managed in the interests of the workers and consumers, and not, as now, for the enrichment of a few millionaire barons. Coal will be resold at a price that will enable the tiller of the soil to run two stoves in his house without fearing bankruptcy.

"Farmers will be as prominent in the councils of the Nation as lawyers now are, and their interests will receive as much attention as those of other classes. They will display more practical common sense, and good judgment in the management of their own business."

Premature gray whiskers should be colored to prevent the appearance of age, and Buckingham's Dye is by far the best preparation to do it.

The picture of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, playing upon his magic pipe, while the entranced rats of the town leave their holes and flock after him into the sea, reminds one of the speed with which the diseases and impurities of the blood leave the system when Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is taken.

It removes all humors, poisons, or taints, from the system, whether manifested in the common pimple, or eruption, or in boils, carbuncles, eczema, salt-rheum, fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and kindred affections — in fact anything and everything resulting from impure blood.

For scrofula of the lung tissues (consumption) it has no equal, and often cures cases which physicians have given up. It is a guaranteed liver, blood and lung remedy, and the only one sold. Your money returned if the medicine fails to accomplish what its manufacturers claim, when taken in time and given a fair trial.

All the year round, you may rely upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to purify the blood and invigorate the system. It's not like the sarsaparillas, that are said to be good for the blood in March, April and May. The "Golden Medical Discovery" works equally well at all times, and in all cases of blood-taints, or humors, no matter what their name or nature.

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, sold through druggists, no matter how many doses are offered for a dollar, because you only pay for the good you get.

Your money is returned if it doesn't benefit or cure you.

Can you ask more?

"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol to inebriate, and no syrup or sugar to derange digestion.

It's a concentrated vegetable extract; put up in large bottles at $1.00; pleasant to the taste, and equally good for adults or children.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

afternoon, and a large number of passengers were wounded.

Five laborers, traveling through the northern part of Montana in search of work, were caught in a severe storm, while in Two Medicine mountains, and four were frozen to death.

An act repealing the organized labor conspiracy law has passed both Houses of the Montana Legislature.

Governor Hill, of New York, Tuesday, refused to honor a Connecticut requisition for a criminal on the ground that he does not recognize Morgan G. Bulkley as Governor of Connecticut.

The Kansas House Tuesday passed the Elder railroad bill, reducing passenger rates from 3 to 2½ cents a mile.

In the Illinois Senate Tuesday a bill was presented by Mr. Mahoney, making it a conspiracy for two or more persons to agree to prevent the election of any person to office on account of his religious beliefs.

In the Minnesota House the proposed prohibitory constitutional amendment came up for action, majority and minority reports being presented. The majority, consisting of two Republicans and five Democrats, recommended the indefinite postponement of the bill.

A special from Aspen, Col., says that negotiations are under way for the purchase of all the mining properties in the lower part of Aspen mountain by a syndicate of English capitalists. The price is said to be in the neighborhood of $17,000,000, and the sale will doubtless be closed in a few days.

About 4:15 oclock Monday morning a meteor apparently the size of a full moon fell near Madison, Me., bursting when near the earth with a report like heavy thunder and shaking houses as though by an earthquake. The meteor was visible all over the State.

Three special trains carrying 150 emigrants and their effects from McLean and adjacent counties in Illinois started for Iowa and Nebraska Tuesday.

Monday at Columbus, Ohio, W. J. Elliott, of the Sunday Capital, and A. C. Osborn, of the Sunday World, began hostilities with revolvers on a thronged thoroughfare. Three or four bystanders were shot, a man named Hughes being killed instantly. P. J. Elliott, brother of one of the combatants, was also hit. Osborn died of his wounds a few hours after the fight.

The Kansas House by a vote of 72 to 27 defeated the proposition to resubmit the prohibition amendment, Republicans and alliance members voting against the measure.

Disastrous floods have been experienced in widely separated parts of the country for three weeks. First in the Mohawk and Hudson river vallies, on into western Pennsylvania and down the Ohio. But in Arizona and southern California the loss has been heaviest. Railway traffic has been carried on with difficulty, and in the latter case suspended. Yuma, at the junction of the Gila and Colorado where the Southern Pacific crosses into California, has been entirely swept away. Fourteen hundred people are homeless, and many have lost their lives.

An explosion of gas took place at the Pottstown, Pa., iron company's steel works. Several tons of hot metal shot from the converter and fell in a regular shower over the men, painfully burning fifteen of them.

A terrible railroad accident occurred on the Richmond division of the Panhandle, at Hagerstown, Ind., in which three men were instantly killed, one mortally wounded, if not two others, and a large number injured.

The ashes of Henry Meyer, late proprietor of the Puck Hotel, at Port Richmond, will be taken to the top of the statue of Liberty, in New York Harbor, by the Staten Island Scheutzen Corps, and a portion scattered to the winds in accordance with his wishes. The remainder will be delivered to his widow.

The limited concessions of the Pennsylvania R. R. company to their men were accepted Friday, and all threatened trouble is over for the time being, at least.

Tuesday the Geyser Oil Company, one of the most aggressive opponents of the Standard Oil Company in Ohio, went under the complete control of the latter. The price paid for seven-sixteenths of the stock was $1,600,000.

FOREIGN.

It is reported at Montreal that the priests of the Province of Quebec have been instructed by the ecclesiastical authorities to use their political influence in favor of Sir John Macdonald and his Parliamentary nominees.

Empress Frederick, of Germany, left Paris Friday. She came to persuade French artists to patronize a German exhibition at Berlin. The Paris papers aroused a shameful ferment at her presence in the city. No unpleasant incident marked her departure. The gravity of the situation, however, can be judged from the fact that, acting under advice from high quarters, the Empress changed the line of her route for fear of being insulted by that portion of the populace, which had gradually worked itself into a fever heat of rage over the presence of the imperial visitor in Paris.

It is reported that citizens of Russia have raised £500,000, and that the government will spend a like amount for an exhibit at the Columbian exhibition in 1893.

The McCarthyites are sending a deputation, composed of members of the Irish Parliamentary party, to the United States to collect funds. The proposition to send a Parnellite delegation over is also considered, who will represent Mr. Parnell's policy and will collect funds for its furtherance.

DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P.O. address. T. A. THE STUDENTS have the platform this week; and no one shall say they do not deserve it after reading the speeches of Burr and Wylie. Both are remarkable in their way: the former for making a courageous innovation in a college where members of the faculty and personal friends are lodge-members; the latter for its eloquence, sense, piety and popularity. His faculty are proud of their representative who can speak so ably and not be afraid of the word LODGE; and missionary agents already want him for a promising city church. We should add that the representative of the Morgan Park (Baptist) Seminary at this re-union was Mr. Lee R. Thomas, the leader in the late debate in that institution who carried the day against the lodge. Mr. Wylie has been active in promoting the Student's Correspondence Bureau. We must have a "student's movement" against heathenism at home as well as abroad.

Rev. O. E. Murray, a converted Roman Catholic priest, spoke last Sabbath in one of our city Methodist churches on the Roman evangelization of the Negroes. "The Black Pope's Brother" was his theme. He showed how Romanism had maintained slavery and given sympathy to the rebellion under Jeff. Davis, but that church seeks to strengthen itself by means of the black race, promising to see that their votes are counted if they will become its converts, and thus seeking to turn party against party.

The Mafia trial proceeded at New Orleans last week with some sensational features. The testimony of the prosecution was complete and that for the defense began. Friday morning, when the prisoners were brought into court one of them, who had a few days before made a confession, seemed scared into insanity. He was removed from the court raving, and the faces of his comrades were blanched with fear. The confession does not seem to satisfy the attorneys of the State, who believe they have other evidence, largely circumstantial, sufficient to convict the prisoners.

The great London pastor, Spurgeon, has just returned to his people from Mentone, Italy, with renewed health. He is preaching again with wonted vigor and power. He has just asked his people for $5,000 for repairs on the Tabernacle; and afterward, speaking gratefully of their liberal response, he said, "No fuss, no pressure, no nonsense." The request was modestly made, and in a few minutes the amount was pledged. American churches need to learn the lesson of "no nonsense" about raising money for God's work. We want less clap-trap and more heart-felt, consecrated liberality.

The Columbus Institute has lately been established in Italy. It is a popular name for the time, and should be engaged in a useful work. Bishop Scalabrini, its founder, lately addressed the dignitaries of the Roman Catholic church in Rome on the Italian emigration to America. He claimed that this movement would be mutually beneficial if properly managed. Therefore, Italian priests are to attend them here and keep them untarnished by the pollutions of republican Christianity. The Columbus Institute is for the purpose of keeping these poor fellows from escaping the thralldom of wretchedness, ignorance and superstition under which they have lived for centuries.

Who shall be mayor of Chicago in 1892? The office is a prize, for a man who is popular can be re-elected and serve through the World's Fair. The Masonic incumbent, whom everybody is brave enough to denounce, is hard at work for a re-election. But his Democratic friends are deserting him, and even the saloons are reported as combining for a change. Carter Harrison, who has been thrice mayor, is a strong candidate. He is an able man, a demagogue and a high Mason, but does not make his living by the lodge like Cregier. Frank Lawler, a third Democrat, a Romanist, who went from his saloon bar to Congress, is in the race. The gamblers, rum-holes and brothels will want one of the three. Chicago is on trial again. If either is elected it will not be a safe and pleasant city for strangers to tarry in.

Senator Ingalls of Kansas, who has during his term been ex-officio Vice President, retires to private life and sends some sensible words to the New York Truth on the folly of great naval expenses. The European ships of ten years ago are already antiquated and valueless. "Dynamite and other explosives complicate the situation, and the navy that we are now building at a cost of $50,000,000 will be as worthless in 1900 as Roman galleys. . . . . Is there any necessity for spending millions every year for naval defense, or any justification for the historical appeals to popular apprehension and alarm? Our policy is pacific. We have no colonies nor dependencies nor entangling alliances. Wars break out unexpectedly, it is true, sometimes, but from what quarter can danger be rationally anticipated?" The German Emperor has yet to learn wisdom in this business, as well as we. He wants a navy to rival England, and was only saved a great defeat by persuading members of his parliament to be conveniently absent when the vote was taken. Members of the opposition argued that it was impossible for the country to bear the added burden. The only rational "war measure" for Christendom is arbitration, and the only safety for the common people who form the rank and file and pay the taxes is disarmament.

American enterprise is now sending rum to Japan, as well as to Africa. It is carried over the Union Pacific Railway and forwarded to Yokohama by steamer. The annual drink bill of Japan is $86,000,000, an average of $2.40 for every individual in the Empire.

THE SECRET OATH.

JUNIOR ORATION, BALDWIN UNIVERSITY, BEREA, OHIO, BY H. C. BURR.

The Bible tells us, and observation has shown it to be true, that certain men love darkness rather than light; and, as a reason for this choice, it says it is because their deeds are evil.

Righteousness and justice always appear brighter in the light of the noon-day sun; wickedness and crime never seem so horrible and monstrous as when shrouded by the veil of night. Day is the time for the open, honest deed; night, the time chosen by the secret assassin. That which is holy does not seek concealment; that which is evil tries to hide itself in secrecy.

In Salt Lake City, Utah, a building, with walls twelve and nine feet thick, with narrow windows and guarded doors, forms the rendezvous of a secret society called the Mormon Endowment House. By the highest tribunal of our land the oaths administered for initiation into this society have been declared disloyal and un-American. That same court also decided that any one, a member of said Endowment House, should not be naturalized; and, if a citizen already, that he should be at once disfranchised.

Now let us look at the result. Here, in a land without tyrants or despots, we have an oath-bound organization, entirely made up of those who are not citizens, and who cannot become citizens, on account of their sworn disloyalty, and this society the controlling element of a church with millions of money and tens of thousands of adherents.

This fact for the United States augurs evil and only evil. The question is then, shall we permit longer to exist such a powerful association of foreigners right in the midst of us or not? With one accord we all say, No!

It is my purpose, then, to show how this troublesome element may be greatly weakened, if not, in time, entirely eliminated.

The laws of the State of Vermont make it a crime to administer or take an oath not required or allowed by law. This one clause I would have incorporated with the Constitution of the United States. In this way the finger of the government could touch the very root of all foreign societies that may have been transferred to American soil.

But to this plan, as well as to all others, there is great opposition. The Catholics, to a man, oppose it; and all secret societies oppose it, including the worshipful Freemasons and the knightly Odd-fellows. Still I think that I can point out a way in which to obviate all difficulties.

The society of Jesuits, the ruling power of the Catholic church, is composed largely of the clergy. In becoming a priest certain oaths of loyalty to the Pope are taken, and others making the wish of the Pope above the law of the land. To take away the right to take and give oaths, other than those required by law, would be to strike a blow at Catholicism which might endanger the whole superstructure. If, then, a measure, like the one suggested, would as seriously affect the papists as the Mormons, the result of such action would be two-fold and all the more desirable.

But last of all, we are met with stubborn resistance from those of a much higher order who cannot be disregarded. I refer to members of all oath-bound secret societies, organized for any purpose whatever. Doubtless among the number are many men whose motives cannot be questioned, and whose good intentions all concede; but, nevertheless, in these societies we find men, who profess to be Christians, united with those who revile and deny Christ. Here we find Jews and Gentiles, deacons and brewers, decent men and devils, all jumbled in together, calling each other "brother." The bad and wicked hold up their more moral brethren and tell us the lodge is a good thing; the better part, hoping to find something, or do something, or get something, no one knows just what, cling to their vile brethren with a tenacity and affection that is worthy of a better cause. A few, finding nothing that they desire, leave; others, who seem good, rapidly sink to the level of their brethren. This is the rule.

Now, this state of affairs ought not so to be. Let the good unite with the good, and all will prosper; for, if they are good enough, when a bad man joins them, either he will become like them, or he will quit their company because it is distasteful to him. And let the bad unite with the bad, and what good man wants to join them? But here is where the Arch Deceiver gets in his nefarious work. If he can get a class-leader to call a saloon-keeper "brother," he has won a point. When he gets a minister to call an infidel "brother," he has won another; and when he gets the good and bad all mixed up together, he quotes a verse of Scripture and takes the whole pile.

In all these societies, if any evil is done or any crime committed, that is what they seek to hide in sworn secrecy; if anything good is accomplished or any commendable act performed, this, to the praise of the lodge, is poured into the ears of everybody.

Therefore, I, with thousands of others, assert that, while secrecy may be used to cover up any crime, it absolutely is not used to cover up anything worthy of praise. From this, then, is it not apparent that, for a good purpose, no secret society is needed?

On the whole, the Vermont statute, if added to the Constitution of the United States, would assault not only the vile institutions of Mormonism and Romanism, but it would take by storm even all oath-bound secret societies. And until this time comes, justice and impartiality must be considered below par; partiality and injustice will reign; and envies and jealousies be prevalent.

The secret oath gives to Mormonism its growing strength. The secret oath makes Rome a constant menace. The secret oath creates hatred among free people. Therefore, I say, the time has come when the United States should begin to uncoil this hideous serpent, whose head is the secret oath, from the body politic; or better still, sever the head from the body and the slimy carcass shortly will fall.

Let the secret society oath be forever proscribed!

A LODGE ADVOCATE ANSWERED.

BY REV. J. P. STODDARD.

A recent writer attempting a defense of the secret societies in a New England paper, begins his article with the statement, "The arguments against secret societies are composed in large part of misunderstandings and misrepresentations;" and then proceeds to enlighten his benighted readers by simple assertions which he does not even attempt to verify. One can easily understand how "arguments" could be based upon "misunderstandings and misrepresentations," but just how they are "composed" of such material is not so clear to the ordinary mind. But let that pass, as one of the "mysteries."

The lodge champion very properly classes all "secret societies" under one head, and without an exception attempts to justify the whole, and discredit the intelligence of those who question their utility. If this is accepted as fair and just to the orders, by their friends, their opposers ought not to protest, but one would suppose that even the obtuse intellect of a lodge-bewildered devotee could detect a slight dissimilarity between an "executive session of the United States Senate" and the meeting of a Masonic lodge; and that a really acute perception could detect a shade of difference between the private conference of the "Supreme Court," or the occasional council of a church, and the meetings of Jesuits, Ku Klux, Clan-na-Gaels, or the Mafia, under a penalty of death, to life-long concealment. The writer's experience, it is to be hoped, is extremely exceptional, since he sees no difference between the secret Endowment House family at Salt Lake and his own or the families with which he is acquainted, that is worthy of note. It is presumable that some lodge men, as well as their wives, are "unfortunately wedded," and the writer is probably one of them; but since it is for "better or worse" I see no way for the unfortunate man but to "grin and bear it," as the women are expected to do.

"The fact of their secrecy is not the awful thing that their enemies represent. . . It does not serve to shield any of the evils that good people abhor and avoid." It is queer enough that this fact (?) should have escaped our Lord's notice, when he said, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light." A flash from this man's dark lantern would have saved Paul from blundering so sadly in his statements about the "hidden things of dishonesty." And then, how much labor, time and expense it would have saved the avengers of the murders of Captain William Morgan, Dr. P. H. Cronin and Captain Hennessey had they known that the "secret societies" called Freemasonry, Clan-na-Gael and Mafia were harmless and pure like the family in its privacy; or like the church, retiring for a half hour's private conference; or the Supreme Court judges, comparing notes apart from the crowd? The discoverer of this wonderful fact is certainly entitled to the nation's best bow, if not to a life pension.

Again, "there are reasons why this practice [secrecy] is thus favored; it has advantageous uses, as experience has demonstrated." True enough in the case of thieves, adulterers and murderers, but what honest man or woman has any use for such advantages, since "he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." I venture the assertion that neither the writer, or a single one of the "secret societies" he so rashly champions, ever performed a really virtuous or good act that they wished to conceal, by a penal pledge or oath. Dishonesty, impurity, and deeds of violence sorely need "advantageous uses" of secrecy to cover their deeds of shame and blood. This class may without challenge accept the writer's statement "that their members have an assurance of help that never fails and never waits," when his brethren are true to their secret vows. Failure to convict and punish some of the worst criminals in the Cronin murder, and similar cases, are in proof; but we ought, perhaps, out of deference to the writer's veracity, to receive his statement without a question.

Again, he says, "They do not pretend to be spiritual institutions." Is it so? And is that the reason why, with rare exceptions, the candidate is hood-winked at his initiation? Cable-towed in Masonry; encompassed with a chain in Odd-fellowship; compelled to leap upon the spikes in Knights of Pythias? Is this why they bandage the heads of female grangers who personate Ceres, Pomona and Flora with hay and flowers at their installation? And is this why Christless prayers are said, sometimes by irreligious and even profane chaplains in these "secret societies?" If, as it is sometimes said, "politics makes strange bedfellows," what is likely to be the result of a Christless "institution" practicing secret performances, in the night, in which women personate heathen goddesses, to whom history does not assign the "shining virtues?" Such unequal yoking up with unbelievers may not incur hazard, or conflict with the writer's estimation of "unspotted" lives and "pure religion," or with his notions of worship, but some of the feeble-minded, deluded fanatics against whom he so bitterly inveighs will still have their surmises, and until they have something more satisfactory than simple assertion.

Intelligent people will rely more upon personal observation and experience, history, the law of cause and effect, the well established facts, and the Scriptures of Divine truth, than upon the averments of a man so "blinded by the god of this world," that he sees no difference between a family and a Mormon harem, or an "executive session of Congress" and a meeting of Ku Klux, Clan-na-Gaels, or Freemasons. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," whether it is on the printed page or in the "secret soc.ety."

THE SHADOW OF DEATH IN EASTERN OREGON.

BY W. H. PRUETT.

In my last article, I gave, in brief, early Baptist testimony by one of our pioneer churches against organized secrecy. No doubt many of your readers would have supposed that the adoption of such radical resolutions by one of the early Baptist churches of Oregon would have influenced others of the same faith to follow the example, especially when nine-tenths of the membership were opposed to such unholy alliances.

But alas! such was not the result, for the unsuspecting could not be induced to believe that the whole system of Freemasonry was so antagonistic to the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. But all could be assured of one fact: in the business session of the Oregon City Baptist church in A. D. 1859, when by the vote of her membership she said, We oppose, and do not and will not fellowship this so-called "hand-maid of religion," she stepped on the serpent's tail, and as the result its venomous fangs were thrust into that body of Christian influence. The poison did its work. To-day we are under the power and control, to a very great extent, of the lodge. It shall be my object in this article to inquire why such a state of affairs exists among us as Missionary Baptists on this Northwest Coast.

1. Pastor Johnson, of whom I spoke in my second letter, stood alone in opposing this great enemy of the church. Had other pastors who were not in sympathy with Baal service been equally as true to their convictions the lodge would have been checked in the founding of other churches subsequent to this date of 1859.

But the slavery question was the issue just then and must be disposed of before discussing such minor questions (as many would have us believe) as secret societies.

Well, time passed along, and when the sin of slavery could not longer be tolerated by the God of heaven, the Emancipation Proclamation was issued, which set at liberty four million slaves. But during this time, Freemasonry got a firmer hold upon the populace of this Northwest Coast, as well as through the South, the East, and the Middle States, bringing into a greater bondage free-born American and Christian people than was our colored race delivered from.

But the question arises, who were responsible for the perpetuation of this great evil? Without hesitation I most emphatically answer that the sin was winked at by our pastors, and hence its being tolerated and nursed lies at their door, more especially those who stood identified with it and knew from experience that the whole system was anti-Christ. By their fellowship with the craft they "said unto the wicked, Thou art righteous." Their blessed Master did not set such an example as this for them to follow. Neither did the Apostle Paul.

2. This extreme northwest field has in very many respects been a very inviting one to many of our ministers East, and many have come; and I am sorry to say that the majority of these imported clergymen have been either closely allied with Baal worship, or strong sympathizers. Hence from such a class of leaders, with few exceptions, their influence has been in favor of secret societies, and could not have been otherwise.

3. Our young men of this coast, who were not satisfied with our educational facilities and who went East in order to secure a classical education, returned to our coast, many of them, having sworn allegiance to Baal during their preparation for this life work.

4. Then we had another class of young men who could not avail themselves of this training in the schools of the prophets, but were useful by their own industry and great sacrifice and consecration of soul to God, who have neither co-operated nor sympathized with the abominable idolatrous worship. These have been opposed and intimidated by influential laymen, who have said, "Don't say anything against secret societies or you will injure your influence;" and not being posted in regard to the deceitful and pernicious influence of the craft upon society at large, have been comparatively silent on the subject.

But out of this number just mentioned, there have been a few, however, who from close observation were convinced that the whole system was anti-Christ; but, desiring to keep their barks in the popular current, they positively refused to examine the subject or to lift their voice against it from the pulpit; and therefore the minds of very many have concluded that the secret society question was not so poisonous as had been represented to them, and did not, neither cared to, expose the growing evil.

5. The few who have examined the subject in the light of Revelation, and who have been ready to oppose organized secrecy (in and out of the pulpit and through the press), could be counted perhaps on the fingers of your right hand. And every attempt made by them to get the subject before our people in our Christian assemblies, by way of resolutions, have been as a rule suppressed, and the element favoring the evil have had the controlling influence.

Then lastly, as a rule, all communications for our papers which gave the truth plainly, have failed to find a publication. Our editors are afraid to risk their patronage in exposing Baal worship. Having no medium through which this worship could be exposed or counteracted, the seeds of secrecy have been sown broadcast and have been nourished until its influence in our churches has become alarming, and the question, Who are responsible for these things? is forced upon all the people.

OPEN LETTER TO THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

IS IT LEGAL TO SELL POSTAGE STAMPS AND DELIVER MAIL ON THE SABBATH EXCEPT IN "ORIGINAL PACKAGES?"

Hon. John Wanamaker:—In your annual report of 1889, at the close of your friendly consideration of the proposition to discontinue Sabbath mails, you intimate your willingness to deal with the matter locally in accordance with "the will of a majority of the patrons of each office." (p. 24.) In the report for 1890, you state the same fact more fully in the following words: "A petition from any community, signed by a considerable majority of the patrons of the postoffice, requesting the closing of an office on Sundays would be regarded with favor by the Department as a means of ascertaining by practical experiment just what the effect of Sunday closing would be." (p. 70.) In your letter to me of Dec. 20, 1890, accompanying these reports, you say truly, "The difficulty is largely with the church members, and if they were to practice what they preach, many of the postoffices need not be open on Sunday." I am urging such "practice," and also such "closing" by "local option."

But as you are still studying the problem, permit me to respectfully submit for your consideration several reflections on the above statements:

1. The language of both reports admits your power to close the postoffices on the Sabbath. The law of Congress does not require but only permits Sunday opening, "If the public convenience requires it," of which the local postmaster first, and the Postmaster-General on appeal, is to be the judge. Certainly, no "public convenience" can really "require" what is against conscience. The toilsome public collection of mail from boxes has not even a permissive law, and should be stopped as a violation of the State laws against Sabbath labor. If Congress has any authority to open postoffices for Sunday business in States forbidding such business, it is on the ground that the mail service is inter-State commerce; but that would authorize the sale of stamps and postal cards and stamped envelopes, and the delivery of mail only in "original packages." May I ask that you will submit to the Attorney-General the question whether the collection of mail from street boxes is not a violation of the laws against Sunday labor, and the selling and delivery of goods at the postoffices, except in "original packages," a violation of Sunday traffic? As those who wish to get their mail on the Sabbath must go to the postoffice, instead of receiving it from the carriers at their door, as on other days, by analogy the collectors also should not go out of the office on the Sabbath, but handle only the mail brought there. In any case you can release all the collectors and stamp clerks from their illegal and unnecessary work—in fact, you can stop all the Sabbath work, and it is all unnecessary, save that of the watchmen, and all wrong, if not all illegal.

As you have made provision in some new contracts on star routes for discontinuing the Sabbath carriage of the mails, you could manifestly do so in all new contracts, and when no mails arrive at local postoffices they have no permission for Sunday opening. Clearly your great powers are sufficient to cancel this great wrong without further legislation.

2. Your letter indirectly admits that Christians who even for a moment enter the postoffice to get their Sabbath mail, do not "practice what they preach." What, then, of the Christian who works there for hours on the Sabbath as a postmaster or postal clerk? For the government to require him to do so is surely an infraction of that provision of the Constitution that forbids "interference with the free exercise of religion." To escape this by saying that Christians should not engage in the postal service, is to foul with the Constitution, again, this time in its provision against a "religious test." Practically Sunday mails have become an irreligious test, excluding the most religious and conscientious people from that very department where conscience is most needed. It is objected that "to stop Sunday mails would be a religious act by government, which ought to be neutral in such matters." But the present attitude of government is not neutrality but hostility. It is state against church!

3. You speak of a "majority," and "a considerable majority." Why "a considerable majority" to decide to do right, when a bare majority in an election may do a great wrong? Is "the will of the majority" to determine your personal action in a matter where the will of God is clearly expressed? Sabbath mails were instituted as a war measure in 1810, without any indication that it was "the will of the majority." You report (1889, p. 23) as a result of investigation that on the Sabbath "the callers for mail-matter comprise but a very small proportion of the patrons of the postoffices." Here, then, is the proof that "a considerable majority" do not want Sunday mails. In 1828, and again in 1888, and since, this matter has been indirectly voted on in the form of petitions, and "the will of the majority" of the petitioners in both cases was against Sabbath mails.

4. You speak of "Sunday closing," even when asked for by a "majority," as an "experiment," which reminds me that when Bismarck made a like remark, Windthorst, the Catholic leader, rebuked the Protestant by saying, in substance, "It is rank atheism to wait to inquire what the result of keeping a law of God would be."

5. I am gratified, but not surprised, to find that in the excuses you offer for the continuance of the Sabbath mails, you omit the sentimental plea with reference to Sunday letters about sickness and death, for which telegrams of Saturday and Monday provide a complete substitute.

6. The claim that business would be congested by stopping mails twenty-four hours you seem to consider partially true, but what you say of the world's metropolis answers this by showing that even in the greatest city the postman may have Sabbath rest without causing any congestion of business. The present method makes a congestion of business by throwing a double mail into the merchant's hands on Monday instead of giving him the same amount as other days, as would be the case if mails stopped at suitable places on Saturday night. You say, in substance, "the trains would go anyway, and the mails might as well go with them." That thought is almost the root of all evil. The Christian railway president says, "The mails must go anyway, and we might as well carry the passengers also." And the Christian passenger says, "The train will go anyway, and I shan't make any more work by taking it." If this excuse is good for mails and trains that break the Fourth Commandment, why not for the liquor dealer also. When we read of a considerable number of postal employes co-operating with confidence men in New York, and with lottery men elsewhere, there comes to mind the report of a British Parliamentary Commission, that as Sunday work in any trade increases, morality decreases; and also the saying of Wm. E. Dodge to certain railway directors, "If you require men to break the Fourth Commandment you must not be surprised if they also break the Eighth." Respectfully,

Wilbur F. Crafts,

HOW IT LOOKS TO A ROMANIST.

It must be acknowledged that Freemasonry in this country has thus far been a very different thing, at least practically, from Freemasonry in the Old World. There the order has been captured by unscrupulous politicians, is openly atheistic, and is plotting continually for the destruction of Christianity. They are moving heaven and earth to gain complete control of the governments, and the effects of their secret power are everywhere manifest. They are determined to rule without a rival, and to exterminate religion from the face of the earth. Indeed, so bold have they become, especially in Italy and France, that they have thrown off all disguise and openly proclaim that "clericalism," by which they mean the Christian religion, is the great enemy against which they have to contend.

Of course, it does not follow that American Freemasonry is, as a body, atheistic. But there are certain considerations of a general nature which lie upon the surface, to which all good, conservative citizens, especially Catholics, would do well to take heed.

The first consideration is, that Freemasonry is a secret, oath-bound society, and, therefore, no loyal Catholic can approve, much less be a member of, it. We are aware that not every secret society is absolutely condemned by the church, although she discountenances the practice of secrecy. Oath-bound societies, where the members are solemnly pledged to obey certain rules which they have had no hand in making, and the full extent and nature of which they have no means of knowing, and when they are required to surrender their freedom of action to the dictation of irresponsible superiors, in which they may be required to do immoral acts, are, of course, under the ban of the church, and it requires no profound course of reasoning to convince any man of sense and candor that the church's sentence is just.

The second consideration is, that the tendency of Masonry is to substitute the order in the place of the church. Masonry is essentially a Protestant institution, and, as the various Protestant denominations are struggling for unity without the possibility of uniting on any religious ground, and as they are, at any rate, fast losing confidence in the Bible and the great essentials of Christianity, the fraternity of Freemasonry furnishes a convenient and attractive organization, which seems really to supply some of the radical deficiencies of Protestantism. Freemasonry has an imposing organization governed by a regular, graded hierarchy; it has an ornate and attractive ceremonial, which appeals, not only to the imagination, but to that feeling of mystery which is so powerful in our nature; it is of a semi-religious character, some of its grades embodying even Christian socialism.

The popularity of the order among Protestants in this country is indicated by the frequency with which the Masons are called upon to lay the corner-stones of public buildings and even of churches. The impropriety of this, we are glad to see, is recognized, even by such a decided Protestant as our esteemed contemporary the Congregationalist, which, in a recent number, commented very emphatically upon the fact, that a Congregational church had secured the services of a Masonic society to lay the corner-stone of its new building.

Now, if such be the attitude of a Protestant denomination towards an order with which that denomination may be supposed to have some natural affinity, how much more objectionable must the order be to Catholics who necessarily occupy an antagonistic position? With such an order we can not only have no fraternal intercourse, but we must solemnly protest against its being put forward to perform important official functions in connection with public, civil demonstrations. Why should a secret order, we care not how respectable the membership or attractive the ceremonial, be called upon to lay the corner-stone of a public building in which all the citizens are interested? We do not wish to trench one iota upon the rights or privileges of our fellow-citizens who choose to join the Masonic lodges; but we have a right to demand, that they be left to the enjoyment of their rights and privileges on their own ground, and be not invited to officiate on public, civic occasions, when a large and respectable portion of the community will be offended, if not disgusted, by their presence.—H. L. R. in Donahoe's Magazine, Boston, January, 1890.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

BY EDGAR WYLIE, CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

An address at the annual Re union of the Theological Professors and Students of Chicago and vicinity, Feb. 27, 1891. Published by request.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—I am glad to bring you the greetings of our Seminary, and to say tbat witb large hopes now realized we bave waited for this anniversary.

We, as students, are in the grey dawn of new experiences. Soon from our several nurseries of clerical life and learning we sball be sent forth to take each bis own appointed place. Wbile we may, it is wise to meet and mingle in friendly intercourse. Even among ministers there is a lack of love. Lord Macauley, writing his sister concerning the death of Wilberforce, said he was sometimes astonished at himself, for he believed tbat wbile there were certainly two or three whose deatb would break his heart, there were not more tban ten wbose death would spoil his dinner. But evidently enough there is to be, at no distant day, a much closer union of all Christian believers. Different communions witb slightly differing manners and customs shall be one in love. The attitude of the cburches toward one another is very largely due to tbe influence of the pulpit. If the ministers are friends so will be the churches.

When we meet in after years, (and I trust the time is near when not more than two of us sball be sent to eacb thousand souls,) when we meet in after years and as firm friends recall these anniversaries, you shall bave the liberty of my pulpit, and your people will perbaps endure the affiiction if we take your places, and you and we will carry the town for Christ; and prayers shall ascend for one anotber.

"More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain, both by night and day;
For what are men better than sheep or goats
(That nourish a blind life within the brain),
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

—Tennyson.

The prayer of faith prompted by a loving heart will draw heavily on divine resources. A Princeton student after preaching to a colored audience invited a venerable deacon to pray. He poured out bis thanks as tears coursed down his face and besought the Lord that tbe dear young preacber might be anointed "wid de ile of Patmos," wbicb he innocently believed had power to give apocalyptic visions.

Now I was to speak of the Voice of the People. With your leave let me change the pbrasing of the subject to this: Wbat tbe neighbors say.

In the settlement of important national questions the voice of the people in toto is heard in two keys, sometimes more. Each commonwealth also has the same experience. So the parisbes and homes have voices on questions peculiar to each. How New York goes affects a Presidential candidate; but what neigbbors say affects most men profoundly. Many tremble at the question: What will people tbink or say? So much of what they have said bas leaked out that one feels what remains bebind to be often too much to bear. And it gets out in such surprising ways as to put to tbe blusb them who said it. For instance, a minister giving a boy in his father's presence a talk on Natural Theology, asked if he knew that flies even served a good purpose. "O yes," said the youngster, "Pa told me. He says 'they are the only thing that keeps him awake when you are preaching.'" Not every bome has a small boy, but every one is for or against the minister and his measures.

1. Wbat are tbe consequences when the pastor makes too much of public sentiment?

Every community has whirlpools of evil which too often partially draw in the good. Conformity yields an advantage. Dissentients are often either frightened or disheartened into silence. To differ with a strong majority gives one tbe feeling of opposing a deity. The pressure almost forces one for the sake of peace to mingle witb the herd. The individuality of the man is lost. He sinks as a rain-drop sinks into a deep. Tbe good effect of protest is forfeited. The balance-wbeel of society is loosed. The finger of scorn wins the day. Rather than be called an enemy of the people, one chooses to keep silent and become one. Such invertebrate objects will never win the respect of the people, not even the wortbless respect of those witb whom they conform.

At the close of Carlyle's life of Cromwell he calls England an ostrich witb its "head stuck into the readiest bush of old church-tippits, king-cloaks, or what other sheltering fallacy there may be, and so awaits the issue." A man with his head in the bush of silence and conformity, is the prey of bis enemies. His security is a snare. A scared man has no power for good with either God or man. He is miserable. His parishioners are to him as watch-dogs. Their eyes are on him warning him not to speak his honest thought. If he has ventured to draw a straight line some Sunday night, the next morning be sends his boy for the mail, his wife for the marketing, and he keeps close housed till the coming of the kindly sbades of nightfall. To keep in with all he decides to keep still. He feels certain if he should bravely speak it would wreck tbe cburcb. Were there as many devils as tiles on his bouse-top be would be more discreet than Luther. Some of the Soutbern river-boats are so weak in their boilers tbat every time they whistle the enginee stops. He fears he would suffer the same consequences. Sometimes be is seriously alarmed at being in tbe flesh. He would like to be a ghost and flit about unobserved. When be dies there will be no vacancy. Upon such a man the fear of his fellows is a shirt of Nessus. The words come true: "O my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy tbe way of thy paths."

A graduate of one of the schools represented here tonight was called to an important parish. Soon after bis arrival at his post be was visited by two worthy members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. They boped to enlist his sympathy and co-operation in tbe struggle between the homes and the saloon power. He excused himself, saying he "cordially sympathized witb all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality," but as he bad been in town but two months and bad not learned tbe public sentiment on the question of temperance, he begged to be allowed more time before he sbould venture to join his voice with theirs. The home-loving women sad of beart returned, and like Niobe, wept at tbeir broken altars and alone continued their attempt at shielding their off-spring from the shafts whicb fell thickly around and quivered in the hearts they loved. He, slippered and clad in a gaudy gown, returned to bis study to prepare a sermon, very likely, concerning the Three Worthies, or Daniel in tbe Den. What sort of a Daniel would he make? The lions would not respect bim!

2. How is public sentiment molded by the right kind of man?

Though one community will differ morally from another, there is no spot under tbe wide-circling sun wbere a timid man is wanted. Hero-worship is natural to man. In any market courage is at a premium.

It is too true that many a parish is extremely worldly. The wealth is often invested in distilleries, breweries, saloons, race-tracks and railroads that tbrive by Sunday traffic. A pastor is called to the churcb of such a parish and he finds a weak band of brethren wbo themselves see no harm in joining in dances, card parties, theatre-going, Sunday travel, and cburch lotteries to meet current expenses. He sees clearly enough the downward drift of these things. The prayer meeting numbers ten wben all are present; the euchre party numbers twenty and is always full. The church has the women and children; the clubs and lodges have the men. The parish is a sbip witbout a helm. Social life is decayed. Tbere is no fine sense of right. Business bouses are open on Sunday; divorce cases fill the dockets of the courts. The starving wives and children of home-made drunkards roam the streets.

The pastor enters on his work and puts aside pbilosophy and metaphysics for the Ten Commandments; or at least he gives them the preference. He offers no apology for tbe truth of God, nor yet does he make bis pulpit a throne of judgment. He neither floats on the popular taste, nor deals witb brains to the neglect of bearts. He has faith in the power of truth to save society. He is, tberefore, a man pledged to trutb, and a devout follower of the light he has. For no one's weak eyes will he put his light under a bushel. He will speak his mind and hold no parley with fears or doubts. Without ceremony he will give to things,—what cowards bint at—their right names. He will rally men's enthusiasm and energies from the clubs and lodges to the church, where they rightfully belong, and ought to be and must be before the church is strong again. He will call on the people for a morality drawing its sanctions and autbority from tbe Bible. Witb Chrysostom, he will agree that the true Shekinah is man, and tbat the soul without God is incomplete. The pastor will not be a star to dwell apart from men. In his courage he will not be ferocious, nor resent small hectorings. He will deal in no splenetic censure, nor will he resign to please some critic, or to preach his old sermons elsewhere. There will be tonic vigor in bis preaching and under it sappling characters will grow into oaks. He will dare to rebuke men in low place or bigh, and no gift can bribe him into silence.

Such a pastor will not regard himself as a privileged character, but as a man among men he will welcome honest criticism, meet it, and count it as showing he has won attention. His arguments will be cool and calm, and he will say no venomous, biting thing. Quietly in earnest be goes about his duties as one knowing perfectly what he is about, and as one who has placed a just estimate upon the importance of what he is about.

There are four things in London at which nobody laughs: the Sovereign, the Premier, the Lord Mayor, and the London Times. Whoever rates himself too low and fails to honor his calling, will be taken at bis own estimate. I know a pastor who is also a graduate of a school in this re-union, and who bad occasion three years ago to feel much as the school-boy, who when asked wbat teacher be was under now, answered, that they all sat down on him when they got a chance. Because of his position on the temperance question, during the national election, his church members left him, and he was hated and burt by enemies from every quarter. But he fought it out on that line and it took all summer. The churcb members were glad to return, and to-day the pastor is honored and respected by the entire city of tbree thousand people. Tbose wbo still disagree with him feel that he is a man "for a' that and a' tbat." All feel under his burning, brave words, tbat life means far more than they have ever thougbt or dreamed.

Before sucb men and methods, it is decreed that worldliness in its worst forms, sball give way to a growing love and practice of what is noblest and true.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers."

I would not dare say that sucb a man will sweep every error out and bring every excellence in; but, at least, while he lives bis parishes, and the world tbrougb tbem, will be blessed by a brave, healthy, beneficient life. And when his lifeless body sball lie "a worn-out fetter" tbat his triumphant soul bas broken and cast aside, there will be hosts whom his zeal has kindled to speak long after he has gone, witb tongues of fire.

Winning men from error and transforming public sentiment to the right, is a divine art. It requires tbe best a man has in bim and ought to bave the devotion of the best men.

How sball we accumulate the power with which to accomplish this great work to which we are about to put our hands? The German sculptor, Dannecker, wrought for years to embody in marble his conception of tbe Christ. One day calling a little child to his studio, and pointing to the statue he asked who it was. After a moment she answered: "'Suffer little children to come unto me.'" The artist was overjoyed at bis success. Soon after Napoleon desired of him a statue of Venus. He answered: "No, your majesty, a man who bas seen Christ can carve no heathen goddess. My art hencefortb is a consecrated tbing." May our lives be sacred to him alone, and as we enter the mighty conflict between light and darkness, let us all bold as our motto:

"Though an host should encamp against me,
My heart shall not fear:
Though war should rise against me,
Even then will I be confident."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., March 4, 1891.

Part of the last legislation enacted by the Fifty-first Congress, which expired by legal limitation to-day, was the bill making it unlawful to sell pools on horse races in the cities of Washington and Georgetown or within one mile of their respective corporate limits. When this bill was first reported to the Senate and that body refused to amend it so as to prohibit pool selling anywhere in the District of Columbia, it was thought doubtful whether there would be time enough for the House of Representatives to pass it, and its receiving the approval of the President, was thought to be still more doubtful, because he vetoed a similar bill at the previous session, on the ground that while prohibiting this form of gambling, in other sections of the District it legalized it, by permitting it to be carried on upon the grounds used as a race-track.

But upon the idea that "half a loaf is better than none," a meeting of local ministers was held, and after satisfying themselves that Congress would not pass any bill on the subject that did not in some way except the race course from its provisions, and being very anxious to rid the city of those pest holes, known as pool-rooms, a committee was appointed to wait upon the President and request him to sign the bill, which he agreed to do. The committee then visited several prominent members of the House, and obtained their aid, and yesterday afternoon the bill became a law. While it isn't all that was wanted, or all that the people had a right to expect from Congress, it is at least a step in the right direction.

Those who believe in the total prohibition of the cursed liquor traffic, are delighted to learn that a bill just signed by the President will result in practical prohibition as far as a number of saloons in this District are concerned. The bill in question was intended by Congress as a protection to the old soldiers who live at the Soldiers' Home, just to the north of Washington, and provided that no liquor license shall be issued by the District authorities to any party carrying on business within one mile of the limits of the Soldiers' Home; but after the measurements were made, it was discovered that the mile from the limits of the Home included a number of squares in the northern end of the city, and the temperance folks are rejoicing to know that legal prohibition will exist in even a small part of the District of Columbia, and are continuing to hope that some day it will embrace the whole of it.

Senator Edmunds has not abandoned his idea of a great national university under the auspices of the Government to be located in this city. He asked for and obtained the consent of the Senate to the sitting of the select committee, to which the matter was referred, and of which he is chairman, during the Congressional recess, and he expects to have a plan formulated when Congress meets again.

The Postoffice Department has discovered that a lottery company is violating the law by mailing its tickets, etc., from Canadian postoffices. The Canadian postal authorities will be asked to put a stop to it.

The Sabbath Union has moved its headquarters from New York to Washington, and its corresponding secretary, Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, addressed the Gospel meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon on "The Sabbath for young men and young men for the Sabbath." He made a suggestion that may bear good fruit in the near future. It was that the association should institute a Sabbath observance department.

Rev. Anna Shaw, who has lived among the Indians of the Northwest since she was ten years old, delivered an address on their condition and their treatment by the Government, Sunday evening. She said that if the Government had spent one-tenth of the money in trying to ameliorate the red man's condition, that it did in trying to kill him during the recent trouble, there would have been no trouble and no bloodshed. *

Reform News.

"THE OLD AND THE NEW STYLE."

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

We have, it seems, two kinds of Masons here in Boston, the ancient and the modern. So the old members tell me. Nothing is more common than the remark: "Masonry is not what it was when I joined thirty or forty years ago. A man must be respectable and have a good character to get in then, but any scalawag who has money and influence can get in now. I don't attend the lodges any more for I don't like to associate with the class of men that run them," etc., etc.

Accepting this as a "true bill," I beg leave to ask, if it is not time for these "old style" members to "turn the rascals out," or to "come out from among them." If walking in fellowship with the ungodly for forty years has so signally failed to reform them, and they have all the time waxed worse and worse, isn't it about time you had ceased to pay dues, to support, and give your character and influence to perpetuate the corruption which you cannot endure? If you fear and shun such vile personal contact, at fifty, sixty or seventy years of age, and with chaste and temperate habits formed, how manifold greater must be the danger to the young members who are inexperienced and perhaps induced to join by being told that you are members!

Said one of this class to me: "Since I found Christ, I have had no sympathy with or pleasure in my lodges. I don't attend any more. In one of them they have a vile, profane man for chaplain, and even unconverted members say it is a shame, and they are trying their best to get me back for chaplain; but it's no use. I have washed my hands of the whole of them." Good, so far. But I want to ask this brother and multitudes more who occupy substantially the same position, If you should not take another advance step, is silence in regard to what you acknowledge a great system of iniquity all that Christ requires of you?

I suppose the three hundred Sir Knights who gave their "annual ball in honor of their lady friends" and danced until one o'clock this morning were modern Christian (?) Knights. Friday is the regular prayer-meeting evening in most of the Boston churches, and it is presumable the "Old Style" would select some other evening if disposed to "trip the light fantastic toe."

This reminds me of a pastor upon whom I recently called in a Connecticut town. Said he: "The lodges have nearly broken up our prayer and class-meeting. They are doing great harm and I fear no good in this place." Calling on another, I asked, "Doctor, are you a Mason?" "No," was the prompt reply, "but I believe in the order. My father was a Mason. My wife's father and her brother belong, and I never knew three better men."

I suggested that good men were sometimes led astray, and that we had but one Perfect Example, and asked if he thought our Perfect Example or his servant Paul would join the Masons or approve of their initiatory rites and oaths if they were now in Boston.

"I don't know anything about Masonry," was his reply;" but I used to be an Odd-fellow, and there is nothing wrong in that order."

When further interrogated he said, "I belonged in Maine, but have not removed my membership to Boston."

"Why not?" said I.

"Well, first it costs too much money; second, it takes too much time; and then I think there are getting to be too many of these lodges; they keep the people away from the prayer and other meetings of the church."

I said, "Doctor, if Boston should become converted and every man, woman and child should become a true child of God, and then a sufficient number of prayer meetings were started to accommodate them all, do you think there would be too many prayer meetings?"

"No," said he, "the more the better."

"Well, then," said I, "if there is nothing wrong in the lodges, as you say, they must be positively good, for they are either in the service of God or mammon. How then can we have too many of them?"

I am still waiting for the Doctor's reply. It seemed never to have occurred to him that an order that "cost too much money" is a swindle and "takes too much time" for what it gives in return; is an imposition, and keeps the people away from the social means of grace, and yokes believers with worldlings, is both an unholy, and extremely hazardous alliance. When I called attention to the omission of Christ's name in their authorized lodge services, his reply was, "We have often discussed that matter in the lodge, and have decided that it is not a religious, but simply a business institution for benevolence, insurance," etc.

"Why, then," I asked, "do you bring the candidate into the presence of a skeleton, and rehearse to him such solemn lessons, if you do not intend to impress upon him the solemnity and certainty of death, and the necessity of preparing for the judgment? That looks to me like religion of some sort."

"Oh," said he, "I always looked upon that as ridiculous."

It was a confession, however, that he had "looked upon it," but for some cause could see "nothing wrong" in such a caricature and solemn mockery of death and of Him who made man in his own image, and who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing. J. P. Stoddard.

SCHOOLS OF EASTERN TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKY.

Berea, Ky.

Dear Cynosure:—When I arrived in Knoxville I called on Dr. McCulloch, president of Knoxville College, who received and entertained me very kindly; and on Wednesday evening, the 11th ult., I preached in the chapel to the faculty and 300 or 400 students. It being a week of special religious services with them, I gave a Gospel sermon, and ten or twelve enquirers remained after meeting for private conversation and prayer. This is a prosperous institution and doing a grand work under the direction of a corps of conscientious teachers. It is full, and they are enlarging to receive and accommodate the overflow. They have no secret societies, and the reform volumes we gave them, two years ago, I found in good order on the shelves of the library.

On the following Sabbath morning I preached in the Congregational church, Rev. E. A. Johnson, pastor, on the principles of the N. C. A.; and in the afternoon, I delivered a discourse on reform at the Slater Training School to the Y. M. C. A. This institution, I understand, has passed into the hands of the A. M. A.

The University of Tennessee which is located here at Knoxville, has Dr. Dabney for president, who is a successful educator and a man of broad views. He was absent when I called; but I found the anti-secrecy volumes which we furnished them two years ago, on the shelves of the library in good order. There is a large building nearly enclosed here, designed to furnish rooms for the Y. M. C. A.; and also a gymnasium for the students to exercise in. There is a military professor, and a large number of the students go through the drill of the manual of arms every day; also a U. S. naval officer, who is professor of mathematics.

On the 20th of February I went to Jellico and called on Prof. F. E. Dizney. He is the principal of the high school there, and sympathizes with our reform work. He invited me to speak to the scholars, of whom there are about a hundred in the institution. The fall term was said to be very successful, and it closed on the 19th of last December with a Demorest temperance prize contest. The friends of the school were out in full force, and they had a very interesting time. There is no school library here; but I made arrangements to send "Finney on Masonry" and "The Broken Seal" to Mr. Dizney for his own use. There is a Congregational church here under the care of the A. M. A.; and a Christian Endeavor Society, presided over by Miss F. Bement, the assistant teacher.

At Williamsburg, which I visited next, I enjoyed the hospitality of the Rev. L. E. Tupper, who is the acting pastor of the Congregational church, under the care of the A. M. A., and editor of a monthly called the Mountain Missionary. On Sabbath morning I preached, at his request, on home missions, and they took up quite a collection for that object. Missionary work was begun in this region, some twelve years ago, by Rev. A. A. Meyers; and it has spread, from this point as a center, to Cumberland Gap, and quite a number of other places in this hill country. Bro. Meyers is laboring at present in Middleborough; and the Rev. A. J. Chittenden, who is one of our reform brethren, preaches at Rockhold and Woodbine; and Rev. C. Farnsworth organized a church at Marsh Creek last November.

Williamsburg Academy is a non-sectarian school for both sexes, and is under the care of the A. M. A. Prof. H. E. Sargent is the principal, assisted by a full corps of thoroughly competent teachers. In addition to the literary classes, there are training classes for the boys in carpentry and printing; and for the girls in housekeeping and needle work. There are three hundred students, and many applicants have been sent away for want of room. But they are building, and will soon have another large hall, with library and reading-room. When this is completed, they are to have, by request, a donation of some of our anti-secrecy books. S. F. Porter.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA STANDS STRONG.

En-route for Washington, Mar. 5, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—To convince me of my error in opposing secret societies I am frequently presented with various papers. An enthusiastic young man belonging to the Jr. O. U. A. M. gave me a copy of the American, the official organ of this society. It makes great pretense of guarding American institutions, especially our public schools. Indeed, had one no other light than that received from this organ he might conclude this young society originated the public school, and had sort of a patent on the same. It refers to those who oppose the order as "enemies of the public school." On the front page of this issue (Feb. 14) I find an article headed, "A Narrow Escape." The editor or reporter says that a member of Fort Pitt Council, No. 220, in visiting the "old Liberty bell" in Philadelphia "was seized with a patriotic desire to be the owner of something connected with the articles." This individual whom the article calls "Brother," craftily stole a piece of wood from the frame of the bell and then lied about it to the guard. The article concludes with the following: "He now exhibits the piece of wood to his friends, but not every one who sees it learns how nearly he fell into the clutches of the law."

The whole paper gives evidence of a worldly, devil-guided spirit at its head. A shrewd manager ought to know that praising a lodge brother whose patriotism led him to become a self-confessed thief and liar would not help his cause with Christian patriots.

As I write we are running down the mountains, soon to pass the Horse Shoe Bend. Our two iron horses are in full view, so short is the bend. Owing to the many calls I desired to make in a short time, I could not well report the pleasant meetings held at Apollo and Olivet last week. At both these points I found many friends, who of course subscribed for the Cynosure, although they did not previously lack for reading matter.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A METHODIST WHO WOULD DIVIDE WITH THE LODGE.

HAMILTON, O., March 2, 1891.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Wednesday I visited Middletown, O., a town of 12,000. It is a great tobacco manufacturing center. It also has a great brewery. The Presbyterian church has just called a new pastor, Rev. Mr. McCammel, from western New York. On Friday I visited Hamilton, O. Rev. Elisha C. Simpson, of the U. P. church, was first seen, and found to be a true yoke-fellow in our reform work. Rev. Edwin W. Abbey, of the Presbyterian church, came next. He met me with open arms and tendered the desired help.

Rev. G. W. Gillette, D. D., of the M. E. church, was then interviewed. It was like going from the tropics to the frigid zone. He is preaching a series of sermons on Sabbath evening before some secret oath-bound fraternity like the Masons. He admitted that there were too many secret societies in these days. He thought they ought to be cut down to about three. But to have as many as ten secret orders in one congregation was not best. I suggested that secret societies are taking the funds that should go to the church. But he insisted on their right to their share. One remark, that perhaps they had no right to exist, seemed to freeze the stream of our conversation, and I slid out on the ice. The fact is, secret societies are riveting their shackles on the churches, and the preachers are beginning to find that they must either be slaves or take their leave. There are many who choose to be slaves. A few would rather be ecclesiastical tramps.

Sabbath morning I preached in the Presbyterian church of Hamilton, and in the evening in the U. P. church. They have 243 members. Hamilton has 20,000 people. It is the home of Governor Campbell, who belongs to the Presbyterian church. This is also the home of Congressman Morey. J. M. FOSTER.

KEEP UP THE DISCUSSION OF LODGE PAGANISM.

MONANGO, N. Dak.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Some influential contributors to the Cynosure have lately stated that it is probably a mistake to show up to the world the evil teaching of the lodge in regard to religion, stating in substance that "as the Masonic lodge taught a false system of religion, infidels would thereby be attracted to the lodge and become its supporters."

It has been evident to me for the last fifteen years, at least, that when certain characters become cognizant of the fact that Masonry positively offers salvation by works, independent of Christ or the Bible, and even without repentance or the forsaking of sins, that many of them would embrace it and become its ardent supporters.

It was equally evident then, as it is now, that other characters will be attracted to the Masonic lodge when it is known that they will be shielded from the grip of the law by virtue of their connection with the order, when plotting to engage in unlawful deeds. We might with equal propriety affirm that when the evils of Masonry to the state were shown, it would attract large numbers to the lodge, because they wished to be protected when they violated the law.

Should we then cease to expose and oppose any of the primary evils of Masonry for fear the evil-disposed will embrace it? Nay, verily! But let us be instant in season and out of season to show the evils of Masonry, not only to the state, but with equal zeal to show its detriment to the church and cause of Christ.

So let the discussion of the lodge evils go on and on, and while the evil-disposed are embracing the lodge and becoming its supporters, the good people of the land are deterred from entering.

Not only this, but these discussions are causing some of the best members to secede from the lodge and to become its most effective opponents. It is reasonable, too, to conclude that the number of good men kept out of the Masonic lodge by showing up its antagonism to Christianity is equal, at least, to the number of bad men who take up with the lodge on account of its infidelity to Christ.

It is important to keep the infidelity of the lodge prominently before the people, if we are thereby enabled to keep even one good Christian out of the lodge for every ten wicked men who go into it. I imagine when the lodge power in this country is deposed it will contain a great preponderance of bad men. The sooner it embraces the great bulk of the worst element in our country, the sooner it is likely to become a power of the past.

Separation is what is needed. The good people of the land ought to separate themselves from the workers of iniquity. The distribution of anti-secret literature and public discussions should go on as in the days of anti-slavery agitation, until it once more becomes a national issue and until the defenders of these dark orders shall themselves, through some rash act, inaugurate the means of destruction of their pet institution, as did the slavers of the South inaugurate the destruction of slavery. C. G. FAIT.

PITH AND POINT.

A HARD FIELD AND A FAITHFUL PASTOR.

Rum, Romanism and Secretism are regnant here. Surely the work to be accomplished is great, but our sufficiency is of God. I ask your prayers for us, that we may have wisdom from on high to rightly divide the truth, and yet be true to our honest convictions. "Jehovah Nissi" is our motto and in the name of our God we will set up this banner. I must keep abreast of your grand movement against the bulwarks of Satan. Send me the battering ram again; I cannot get along without it. I discontinued the Cynosure because I could not afford to take it. I must afford it. I need the encouragement it affords, and in addition to that I can loan it to some whom I think will give it candid perusal, and may thereby be led out of darkness into light and break the chains and cords with which they are holden. When the opportunity comes to speak from the pulpit on the anti-Christian character of it, I shall in the fear of God and for his glory bear testimony against this Octopus.—Spring Valley, Ill.

THE CYNOSURE SURPASSES.

I cannot, until I need money more than I now do, dispense with the weekly visits of the Cynosure, though I already have other papers of which I am equally fond, and could hardly do without. But the Cynosure has a mission distinctively ITS OWN, and is, as I firmly believe, without a rival in its particular line of reformatory work, while it certainly is the champion or advocate of more social, political and religious reforms than any equally ably edited journal in the country.—DEMPSTER TOWER, Millville, N. J.

FROM AN EVANGELIST IN THE CHEROKEE NATION.

I am in heartiest sympathy with the anti-secret movement, and hope that the forthcoming convention will be productive of much good. In the Indian Territory we are cursed with the lodge demon. Even in the various denominations the lodge is used to bring into the fold a mass of unconverted rubbish, from the ranks of Indians and whites. It is a splendid thing for Judaizing teachers. They work Masonry and Odd-fellowship for all it is worth, putting men in a fair way for heaven on the basis of good works, instead of by "the way of the blood." I think the Cynosure grows better and better, and I look with interest for each successive copy that comes from your press. Yours against the Secret Empire.—J. E. WOLFE, Vinita, I. T.

CONTRARY TO THE WORD.

Most cordially I sign the "Call for a Christian Conference on the Secret Lodge System" which you have sent to my address, because I heartily endorse the different propositions that are contained in the "Call." To my mind they are all founded in truth and uprightness, so much so that they cannot be successfully gainsaid or invalidated. They are fully sustained as to their truthfulness, in the history of our country, as seen from a correct standpoint. The "system" itself is inimical to the plain teaching of the Word of God, which is at once the only infallible rule of faith and practice; hence should govern men in all of life's relations. God's Word is an open, candid and honest system of truth for the blessing and benefit of all men without respect of persons. It in no way connives at any secret system of intrigue or darkness, but only encourages that which is of itself in harmony with light, purity and love. In that Word there is no darkness at all. It is full of light, as the "entrance of thy Word giveth light." Most surely any secret system, as such, contravenes the spirit and letter of the Book Divine. Hence the man who loves that book should not be in any friendly connection with the dark worldly orders which so much abound in our country in this age. He should let his light so shine before men that they may see his good works and glorify his Father which is in heaven. He should have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Strange indeed that so many are running so eagerly after the orders which are only of the spirit of the world in its darkness and guilt. This is true of many persons from whom we ought to expect better things indeed.

To every Christian God's Word should be a "lamp unto his feet and a light to his path," to guide and govern in all his public walks and also private ways, that he may be able to observe the apostle's injuction—to do all, whether in word or deed, in the name of the Lord Jesus. Hence a plain inference would be, what we cannot do in his name should not be done at all, which would at once end all secret systems of darkness.—(Rev.) E. THOMPSON, Senecaville, O.

LITERATURE.

Our Day opens with an able and exhaustive discus sion of the African slave-trade in its present condition by Frederic Perry Noble of the Newberry Library, Chicago. The writer, without enumerating the dreary horrors of this evil, with which the public are reasonably familiar, addresses himself to the discussion of remedies. He regards the responsibility of England and Germany, the Christian nations most interested in African colonization, as paramount in this question. In the Congo Free State all the great Powers are responsible. Had they been faithful to their agreements the trade would have been much curtailed. He urges that Portugal should be expelled from the East coast, and that the armed crusade preached by the Jesuit Lavigerie will make matters worse. He is hopeful that Mohammedanism may be won to anti-slavery ideas, though his argument does not impress us with its force. The influence of railways and Negro colonists from America he justly holds to be of vast importance to African civilization. Rev. W. F. Crafts repeats his hundred questions on current reforms and reports the vote of fifty Oberlin students. Better late than never, a timid question on secret societies is added after the Oberlin vote. This list can be had of Mr. Crafts at No. 102 Nassau St., New York, for 50 cents per 100 copies. The Monday lecture of this number is "The Pope's Veto in American Politics," a question which Mr. Cook discusses with patriotic indignation struggling with the dispassionate view of a philosopher. His editorial notes are good, as also is the answer by Mrs. S. T. Kinney, president of the Connecticut Indian Association, to the question, "What has been the Success of the Connecticut Scheme of helping Indians to help themselves?"

The California series in the Century this month takes up the Fremont explorations, first with a brief paper giving a resume of the five explorations; second, with a paper by Mrs. Fremont on the "Origin of the Fremont Explorations;" and third, with a posthumous narrative of the terrible experiences of the fourth expedition under the title of "Rough Times in Rough Places," it being a personal record of Micajah McGehee of Mississippi. The frontispiece of the number is a new portrait of the poet Bryant, from an old daguerreotype, and is printed in connection with a historical and illustrated article on the old and well-known Century Club of New York City. "General Crook in the Indian Country," by Captain John G. Bourke, is a paper that derives a special and timely interest from the late Indian troubles. It has been profusely illustrated by Frederic Remington with pictures typical of soldier life in the Indian country. Lieutenant Horace Carpenter of New Orleans, in his entertaining article on "Plain Living at Johnson's Island," describes the hardships, from the point of view of a Confederate prisoner, of a sojourn in the war prison in Lake Erie, near Sandusky. The second article on "The Anglo-Saxon in the Southern Hemisphere" is devoted to Australian cities, their advantages and their unusual problems. The third installment of the famous Talleyrand Memoirs deals with Napoleon Bonaparte, Josephine, and the Emperor Alexander.

Vick's Magazine for the month gives first attention to small parks in villages or private grounds. The "Winter Aspect of Trees" is freely illustrated and suggests what may be done next Arbor day to render our homes and landscapes more beautiful and agreeable.

In the March St. Nicholas older children will appreciate "A Polar Bear for a Jailer," by Edmund Collins; "Out of Childhood," by Helen Thayer Hutcheson; Mr. Welles's interesting account of his "Autograph Book;" Miss Elizabeth Bisland's "Alligators' Funeral;" "The Midnight Sun;" and the second part of little Miss Ellsworth's "Diary in the East," which has some beautiful views of Athens.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

Its Oaths of Fealty.

THE VOWS OF A MASON.

FIRST DEGREE.

I, ——, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saint Johns, do hereby and hereon (Master presses his gavel or hand on candidate's head,) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the hidden mysteries of Freemasonry which may have been heretofore, shall be at this time or any future period, communicated to me as such, to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason, or in a regular constituted lodge of Masons; nor unto him, nor them, until by strict trial, due examination or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself. I furthermore promise and swear that I will not write, print, paint, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark, or engrave them, nor cause the same to be done, on anything movable or immovable, capable of receiving the least impression of a word, syllable, letter or character, whereby the same may become legible or intelligible to any person or persons under the canopy of heaven, and the secrets of Freemasonry unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness.

All this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any hesitation, mental reservation or secret evasion of mind whatever; binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its roots, and buried in the rough sands of the sea, at law-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, should I ever knowingly violate this, my Entered Apprentice obligation. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

SECOND DEGREE.

I, ——, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saint Johns, do hereby and hereon (Master places his hand on hand of candidate,) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal, any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the Fellow Craft's degree, to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, or in a regular constituted lodge of Fellow Crafts; nor unto him nor them until, by strict trial, due examination, or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

I further promise and swear, that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Fellow Craft's degree as far as the same shall come to my knowledge.

Further, that I will answer and obey all due signs and summonses sent to me from a lodge of Fellow Crafts, or given me by a brother of this degree, if within the length of my cable-tow.

Further, that I will aid and assist all poor, destitute, worthy Fellow Crafts, knowing them to be such, as far as their necessities may require and my ability permit, without material injury to myself.

Further, that I will not cheat, wrong, nor defraud a brother of this degree knowingly, nor supplant him in any of his lawful works.

All this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any hesitation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my breast torn open, my heart plucked out and placed on the highest pinnacle of the temple, to be devoured by the vultures of the air, should I ever knowingly violate this, my Fellow Craft's obligation. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

THIRD DEGREE.

I, ——, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saint Johns, do hereby and hereon (Master places his hand on candidate's hands, on the Bible,) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the Master Mason's degree to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, or in a regular constituted lodge of Master Masons, nor unto him nor them, until by strict trial, due examination, or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

I further promise and swear, that I will stand to and abide by all the laws rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree, and of the lodge of which I shall be a member, as far as the same shall come to my knowledge; and that I will ever maintain and support the constitution, laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge under which the same shall be held.

Further, that I will answer and obey all due signs and summonses sent to me from a Master Mason's lodge, or given me by a brother of this degree, if within the length of my cable-tow.

Further, that I will aid and assist all poor, destitute, worthy Master Masons, their widows and orphans, knowing them to be such, as far as their necessities may require, and my ability permit, without material injury to myself or family.

Further, that I will keep a worthy brother Master Mason's secret inviolate, when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted.

Further, that I will not aid nor be present at the initiation, passing or raising of a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man in his nonage, an atheist, a madman, nor a fool, knowing them to be such.

Further, that I will not sit in a lodge of clandestine Masons, nor converse upon the subject of Masonry with a clandestine Mason, nor with one who has been expelled or suspended from a lodge, while under that sentence, knowing him or them to be such.

Further, that I will not cheat, wrong nor defraud a Master Mason's lodge, nor a brother of this degree knowingly, nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings, but will give him due and timely notice, that he may ward off approaching danger.

Further, that I will not knowingly strike a brother Master Mason, nor otherwise do him personal violence in anger, except in the necessary defense of myself, family, or property.

Further, that I will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, his mother, sister, or daughter, nor suffer the same to be done by others, if in my power to prevent.

Further, that I will not give the grand Masonic word in any other manner or form than that in which I shall receive it, and then in low breath.

Further, that I will not give the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, except in circumstances of the most imminent danger, in a just and legal lodge, or for the purpose of instruction; and if ever I should see or hear it given by a worthy brother in distress, I will fly to his relief if there is a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own.

All this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any hesitation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, that no more remembrance might be had of so vile a wretch as I should be, should I ever knowingly violate this, my Master Mason's obligation. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, Associate Editor and Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1891.

The Farm, Field and Stockman for March 7th contains the valedictory of the singular person who has written the "Farm Politics" of that paper for "nearly five months," though he says he "had fully expected to remain a year." We are amazed that the proprietors of so good a farmers' paper should have retained him so long. Mr. Haaf says he is now lecturing for the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association and forming lodges for that secret order. The result will doubtless be similar to the fate of the grange, which went down with forty or fifty thousand dollars in its treasury in Illinois alone, which this same person said at Wheaton went "no one knew where!"—was stolen, in short. Is is possible that the farmers of Illinois can never learn wisdom from the incessant swindling of secret lodges?

PRESBYTERIANISM DRY-DOCKED.

Ten years after Luther nailed his anti-papal theses to the door of the great church of Wittemberg, which was in 1517, the principles of the Reformation, which were the echoes of his hammer, had penetrated Scotland. The king and priests resisted, but the Scottish nobles favored Luther's doctrines, and sided with the people.

In 1574 Andrew Melville got Presbyterianism established and popery driven out of Scotland without a martyr or a drop of blood shed. Knox wrote the Confession of Faith. Charles II., the meanest of the Stuarts, who lived a hypocrite and died a papist, undertook to force prelacy upon Scotland. But old Jenney Geddes rose, in a crowded church, threw her stool at the bishop's head, exclaiming, "Villain! will ye say mass at my lug." The priest dropped his service book and fled, and with him prelacy left Scotland. In 1688 England and Scotland were consolidated by the Prince of Orange, with Presbytery in Scotland and prelacy in England. Thus Presbyterianism was born of popular liberty and prelacy was the child of monarchy.

Presbyterianism lived one hundred years in this country without a General Assembly. The first body of that name was formed in 1788, and met in Philadelphia next year, 1789. That year the Constitution of the United States went into operation. This General Assembly has been of doubtful utility. Before its organization, in "The Great Awakening," under Edwards, Whitefield and the Tennents, Presbyterian churches bore a distinguished part. But in 1741, "The Great Schism" occurred and lasted seventeen years. It was healed in 1758.

Another split occurred which was after some years healed. And again in 1837 the General Assembly "exscinded" four large Synods and (50,000) fifty thousand Presbyterian people. The The writer heard the debates. The pretence for schism was Old and New School doctrines. But the cause of the split was slavery and the lodge. Geo. Baxter, D. D., who had been New School, said in his speech, on his return to Virginia, giving his reasons for joining the Old School: "I felt the pulse of the Old School on the slavery question and found they had only two Abolitionists, while a majority of the New School were Abolitionists." And Dr. Plummer, of Richmond, Va., giving reasons for cutting off the four synods, said, their ministers were Anti-masons. This spit lasted from 1837 to 1871, thirty-four years, and when they re-united neither party confessed any error.

Thus this great, learned, and most excellent body of men was "dry-docked" for stopping its leaks and repairing its breaches, during the time of the great agony of the country caused by slavery. And even after slavery fell in 1863, the General Assembly refused to pass a resolution of thanks to God for the "fall of slavery and preservation of popular government." There are now three Presbyterian Assemblies, Northern, Southern and Cumberland. The last sprang from the labors of Rev. Jas. McCready, and a great and wide-spread revival of religion in which he was prominent. The General Assembly interfered to correct some irregularities; and their Commission passed a resolution silencing some twelve or fifteen ministers "till they shall submit to our jurisdiction." This was done in 1805, at Gaspar River, Logan county, Ky. The Cumberland Presbytery threw off the jurisdiction of the General Assembly and formed one of its own, which, twenty years ago, had twenty-four Synods, 100 Presbyteries, and one hundred thousand communicants. These three assemblies are now negotiating to get together. Will it be to split again?

These Presbyterians have taken their general ideas of Bible doctrine from "The Westminster Confession of Faith," formed by a body of one hundred learned and pious divines called together by Cromwell's Parliament in June, 1643. Six years before they cut off their monarch's head for treason against the Commonwealth. They were "men of all shades of opinions." Luther had freed mind from the Pope and his Inquisition; Henry VIII. had made kings of England popes; and Cromwell had deposed both kings and bishops. His Parliament called the "Wesminster Assembly" and ordered them "to deliver their opinions and advice, as shall be most agreeable to the Word of God." There had been yet no time to settle down into sects; and never perhaps, on earth, were minds left so free as theirs to declare the meaning of the Bible. And no mere human uninspired writing ever contained more truth and less error than their Confession and catechisms. Millions have had cause for gratitude to them for this single utterance: "The souls of believers at their death do immediately pass into glory." These three great bodies of Presbyterians in the United States are not, and never were, on earth excelled by an equal number of people in sound Bible doctrine, general intelligence, piety, learning, and goodness of character. And now that slavery is fallen and the deluge of secret orders excels Christ's churches more than three to one, the devil is again putting Presbyterians into dry-dock to keep them from bringing their learning and piety to bear on the false worships of the lodge, by which, in the words of Edward Beecher, "Christ is dethroned and Satan is exalted."

A dry-dock is a place into which ships are run, and the water drained off, to repair their breaches and stop their leaks. This vast army of pious and learned Presbyterians are now called by their ambitious and worldly leaders to "revise" that Westminster Confession. This will give them "an excellent appearance of doing something" while in reality doing nothing. They have long been accustomed to allow their ministers to take that Westminster Confession "for substance of doctrine;" and this allows liberty of conscience to reject those fag-ends of doctrine which no one believes, but which have crept into the Confession through controversy, bad English and false inferences from Bible truths.

This "Revision" will result in many confessions instead of uniting all in one. But it will afford time-serving, non-committal leaders a chance to display their learning on points of doctrine, while they shun to declare the counsel of God on questions which God brings up, and which their churches are paying them to investigate, and with which they are struggling. The whole Presbyterian body, with a few exceptions like Albert Barnes, was thus dry-docked and kept tinkering its creeds while God was calling it to the discussion of slavery. Albert Barnes said truly: "There is no power on earth, out of the church, which could sustain slavery an hour if it was not allowed in the church." So is it now with the deism and idolatry of the lodge. May God save the church from being dry-docked.

*DEATH IN THE FOUNTAIN.

A Pennsylvania town was decimated by the typhus plague a few years since, because the mountain stream from which the people drank had become contaminated with the disease germs. The case fitly illustrates the moral effect upon our nation which must be expected and is already felt as the result of secret societies in our colleges. These institutions are our fountains of influence, for "knowledge is power." But when knowledge is permeated with the devious morality of secretism, its power is sure to be exercised with an unsteady judgment, and it will guide into seductive paths that end in social darkness and spiritual death.

We need not argue whether secret societies are an evil. If they are not wrong nothing is wrong, as Lincoln said of slavery; and they are a moral evil which is peculiarly seductive to young men and boys just away from home restraint, and thrown for the first time in their lives into a society composed almost wholly of their equals in age, inexperience and spirit.

The discussion which was conducted in this paper last fall fairly considered the arguments for and against the college secret fraternities. There could be but one conclusion from the able presentation of the case from a score of eminent educators. We do not need, therefore, to spend time to refute the vindication of these orders attempted in Mr. Baird's volume. We certainly believe his conclusions to be far wide of the facts; and that these fraternities, instead of fostering those elements of character in the educated young men and women of the country which shall help them to be strong pillars for civil liberty, for public morality and for the Christian religion, render them partial, prejudiced, self-seeking and luke-warm toward the humility and faith of a Christian life.

Mr. Baird's preface is itself an evidence of the character of secretism among students. An inductive reasoning would trace such obliquities as the following to their source, and give him no choice but to condemn the lodge system as a dangerous adjunct to the American college:

"Many well-informed Fraternity men, too, seemed unwilling to state facts without opinions or conclusions, and some declined to furnish any information whatever, unless the writer would agree to print it as received, or to suppress, or vary, statements supposed to be unfavorable to their respective societies. The author was solicited to omit mention of Chapters which had proven to be failures, or to suppress well-founded allegations of discreditable circumstances in the history of various societies, or to add opinions concerning the standing of Chapters unwarranted by the facts. Each Chapter that had escaped bankruptcy for five years desired to be especially mentioned as 'prosperous;' each Chapter renting or owning a house for the accommodation of its members desired to have it stated that it occupied 'a magnificent Chapter-house and possessed an enviable social position;' each Fraternity desired to have itself 'noted for the loyalty of its Alumni,' and when small in point of numbers affected to regard that as a virtue and wished to be classified as 'select;' each Fraternity whose Chapters were widely distributed sought to appropriate the adjective 'national,' as its exclusive property, while there was a constant, not to say violent, strife, to have it noted that one or another Fraternity was first to adopt some peculiar feature of administration or symbolism, and nearly every account submitted to the writer for his information was embellished by numerous adjectives of commendation."

That such a deceptive dealing with facts is not the exception, when a secret lodge is to be defended or advertised, there is abundant evidence. The evil begins with Masonry, the mother of modern secret orders, when every initiate swears at the first step to "ever conceal and never reveal" the lodge proceedings. Albert Pike, who stands first in the Masonic order in the world, says that Masonry "intentionally" misleads the initiate "by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them." See his "Morals and Dogma of Freemasonry," p. 819. In the same line of proof is the following from the latest history of Freemasonry in England, by Leo Hyneman, an eminent Masonic writer and editor, who says respecting the earliest record of speculative Masonry, by which our Masonic grandees and orators have sworn for a century:

"Anderson was one of the originators of the London Grand Lodge, and as a man of strong prejudices he was biassed in all his inditings, evidences of which are seen throughout his two publications on every possible occasion, in the omission of historical facts, or giving a contrary construction to, and diverting attention in cases reflecting unfavorably upon the new Grand Lodge. The books of Anderson, however, are almost universally accepted by the Masonic fraternity as containing a true history of Freemasonry, at least from the time our review commences, and the Ancient Charges, especially those contained in the 1723 edition, are as generally adopted as the fundamental law and basis of Masonic principles. But notwithstanding Anderson's Books of Constitutions were published by order of the London Grand Lodge, with its approval and sanction, yet no more untrustworthy, unreliable books were ever printed under the direction of any organized association. We affirm that Anderson is not to be credited. The Books of Constitutions were written purposely to deceive, to mislead and misrepresent facts as they existed; and if his reports of Grand Lodge Proceedings are true copies of Grand Lodge Records, then the records were corrupted with the design to mislead the reader. That such was the case will be seen hereafter."

This is enough for a single characteristic of the secret society system. Mr. Baird seems to have struggled manfully with the difficulties that attended his work in this respect, but did not fully overcome them. Thus he writes as if he were having to do only with secret societies, but his index shows that he has included a considerable number which are not secret, and their true character is only discovered after careful examination. He also includes in the frequent lists of eminent men which are used the bolster up the character of these secret orders, the names of men who are well known for their opposition to all secret societies. Thus we find the names of Drs. Howard Crosby, Richard S. Storrs, Justin D. Fulton, David Gregg, Charles S. Robinson, E. R. Montfort, Presidents Scovil, of Wooster University and McFarland of Iowa Wesleyan University, Hon. Horace Maynard and Benjamin Harrison, our President, who wrote that he belonged to no secret society but the G. A. R. These names and many others we might quote are given as supporters of college secretism, contrary to the fact.

Insubordination is another characteristic of these college societies. Mr. Baird says (page 15): "In the West, in the smaller colleges, the student must feel at times that his fraternity is a much more powerful institution than his college, and regard it accordingly." And on pages 36–7 he speaks of the chapter houses and club-life of the societies as promising to develop into established systems employing their own instructors, endowing professors, and taking from the hands of the college officers "the entire control of the discipline of the students." There are many college officers who can tell him that the secret fraternities are often attempting to do this very thing, and that there is nothing more destructive of wholesome discipline, without which an institution drops into the state of rabblement.

We have not space to speak of single institutions mentioned in this volume; as Purdue University, whose case is dismissed in a few lines and grossly misrepresented; or Monmouth, which at one time seems to have been beset with a legion of lodge devils; but must dismiss the subject for the present by saying for the encouragement of faculties and students who are battling these college pests, that Mr. Baird states frequently that this and that society died because of "anti-fraternity legislation." We believe that an earnest, brave and systematic effort would banish these societies and purify our American colleges from their pernicious influence.

—The offer of the Everitt Cultivator is corrected this week. A club of twelve new subscribers gets the single-wheel machine; a club of fifteen, the complete double-wheeler. Hundreds of our friends want the machine, and will find that it will pay for itself in one season.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman reached the Cynosure office Monday on a mission for the industrial department of Berea College. He is encouraged with promises of help immediately secured. Rev. L. G. Jordan, the eloquent prohibition lecturer, also called on his way to Evanston, where he spoke in one of the churches the same evening.

—The letters of Bro. J. P. Stoddard from Boston and C. G. Fait from Dakota both mention an important fact in connection with our reform: that the men who are going into the lodge are not giving it character, and without character it will either die off or become a rendezvous for criminals and "a cage of unclean birds." As Col. Clark defines them, the lodges are the binding of men in bundles for the final day, as spoken by our Lord in his parable.

—The students of Northwestern University were preparing last week with a serious and brave earnestness for President C. A. Blanchard's address on the college fraternity system Monday evening. He was advertised as one of the best-known speakers against the secret-society system in the country. An editorial in the last Northwestern World (non-fraternity) says with a touch of irony: "We regret that there are a large number in our ranks who have a low opinion of fraternity men. A man who sells his self-respect to get a bid from a fraternity; who blows in the hard-earned paternal dollar in fraternity pins and fraternity dues; who imagines that submission to the personal indignities incumbent on initiation into a frat raises him above the great mass of his fellow-students; who sacrifices his individuality and catholicity to a clique, is certainly not the highest type of student. But at the same time those Massasoits who look down on these students are equally to be censured. Here at college we meet as equals."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A New England Mecca.—Buddhism gaining ground in America.—Colored Odd-fellows.—Criminal Slang.—A new and very remarkable Benefit Order.—Dracut again for license.

New England has a good many Meccas, religious, political and historic; and not the least interesting among them is the quaint old Presbyterian church at Newburyport, which goes by the name of the "Old South," for beneath its pulpit lie the bones of George Whitefield, that wonderful evangelist of the eighteenth century, already so dim and far off to us who are standing on the threshold of the twentieth. In an age when the religious press could not be said to have any existence, and the secular was limited to a few small weeklies, we can scarcely estimate the eagerness with which men and women thronged to hear the eloquent revivalist from across the water; and therefore no comparison between the evangelists of the past and present can be considered adequate which does not take into consideration the fact that there was comparatively nothing then to divide the public attention, but everything now; so that Moody, whose immense audiences do not flock to hear him for want of other attractions, may well stand on the same platform with Whitefield—which he almost literally did last week when he occupied this same old church in Newburyport, and even selected for his text, the one from which Whitefield preached his last sermon within its venerable precincts, "Examine yourselves." But as Whittier sings in his poem, "The Preacher:"

> "Never was saint so good and great
> As to give no chance at St. Peter's gate
> For the plea of the devil's advocate."

The slave trade was then as popular as the lodge is now, and they who advocated its abolition fully as small and despised a remnant. But Whitefield, although his personal convictions were all on the right side, in his fiery zeal for evangelizing America, compromised with this "sum of all villainies," at least so far as to hold his peace about it, and even accept the money gained in this terrible business, as so many churches accept the money of millionaire brewers, to carry on his work and found his mission school. But it is well known that his labors at the South were singularly void of any enduring fruit, for the upas tree of slavery was then, as it has always been since, a blight on revival work.

Is not here a lesson for those evangelists who fear to denounce the lodge, and "daub with untempered mortar?" The infidelity which is now beating in such strong currents against the church will easily undermine and sweep away the revival work that ignores any part of God's truth to please men. For what saith the Scriptures? "It shall fall; there shall be an overwhelming shower.....and a stormy wind shall rend it."

There is something ominous in such a lecture as was recently delivered at the Cooper Institute, New York, on the "Influence of some Hindoo Ideas on Modern Thought," in which the lecturer boldly stated that "the doctrines of the Buddhists and Brahmas are much more reasonable and trustworthy than anything which has been evolved by Christianity," and that the societies which have been formed in all our large cities to teach this new old religion of the East—Theosophy, as we of the Occident have christened it—"through the circulation of its magazines and papers are bringing to the homes of the people the true 'peace on earth, good will towards men' which the church for centuries has failed to give." If it be true that this heathen religion is actually gaining a foothold on our shores, how is the church to battle against it with any hope of success when she tolerates in her very bosom false worships that originated in a religion of a much lower and sensual type than Buddhism?

It may not be generally known that last Sunday (March 1st) was thanksgiving day among colored Odd-fellows, and in Boston a large number, including members of the "Household of Ruth," the name they have adopted instead of "Rebecca" for the ladies' degree, celebrated it by gathering in the African M. E. church on Charles St., and listening to a sermon by Dr. Hurley, in which he gave some interesting information that may be new to many. The founder of colored Odd-fellowship was a certain Peter Ogden, who tried to get into a New York lodge, but being refused on account of the hue of his skin, went to England, and found the English Odd-fellows more brotherly, as they not only admitted him but gave him authority to set up lodges among his own people on this side of the water. The first colored lodge was established in 1843, but they called themselves the "Grand United" instead of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. They grew very rapidly, and in acknowledgment Ogden appointed the first Sunday in March as a Thanksgiving day to be observed by all colored members of the fraternity throughout the United States, which at least shows him to have been possessed of the religious turn of mind characteristic of his race.

On the same evening Rev. Hugh Montgomery, well known throughout New England for his temperance lectures, invited the Odd-fellows of Woburn to attend the recently completed M. E. church of that place in a body and listen to an eloquent eulogy on their order. And so the work of daubing with untempered mortar goes on.

Miss Willard said, among other good and true things in her address at the late woman's Council, that "it has taken sixty years so to dignify and individualize woman as to make of words, accepted once, epithets that refined natures now discard." This was in allusion to the word "female" applied to women who speak in public; but I believe the influence of this "dignifying" and "individualizing" can and will go farther, and eventually extend to all the race, till terms that class human beings with animals shall be everywhere discarded. I do not remember who it was that said he should refuse to give the title of Christian to any man who spelled Negro with two gs, but isn't it time that every person should be considered outside the pale of Christianity (and I regret to say that this would include some high government officials) who persist in writing or speaking of the Indians as "bucks" and "squaws." This is one of the instances where slang is criminal, but its general prevalence, even when it is only a sin against taste instead of morals, always seemed to me one of the signs of national degeneracy.

Decidedly the latest thing out in the way of "Benefit orders" is the one which an exchange states is now being organized in Wisconsin by a Roman Catholic priest. It is called "The Deliverance Society," and all the funds paid in are to be devoted to the celebration of masses for the souls of its deceased members, the whole thing being organized and conducted on the same plan as other endowment and benefit orders, requiring like them a membership fee, contributions and assessments. If the order takes there is no reason why it will not soon reach New England, and figure with others of that ilk in the secret lodge column of the Traveler. It is just a trifle ghastly to think of the members getting up banquets and dances and masquerades, but it is not likely they will be repelled from doing so by any sense of incongruity. Here is a chance for the Romish priests to enrich themselves by starting such fraternities all over the land, and the only wonder is that they have never thought of it before.

The spring elections have passed with, on the whole, gratifying gains for prohibition; but I notice that Dracut has not profited by her dismal experience of last year. It will be remembered that she voted to license a single saloon, and was subjected thereby to such a reign of terror from the rowdy element which poured in from Lowell that even the keeper of this one bar-room gave up his business in disgust. And yet so much does filthy lucre blind the eyes that she has again voted for license, 172 against 102!

THE HOME.

MY KINGDOM AND MY QUEEN.

My kingdom has no dazzling throne,
No palace grand upon it,
Yet 'tis as bright as e'er was known,
Or sung in loyal sonnet.
I've traveled East, I've traveled West,
'Mid scenes of wealth and splendor,
But this one spot I love the best,
With all its joys so tender;
No place so dear I've ever seen
For peace reigns here, and Love is queen.

Two subjects in my kingdom dwell,
One has an eye of azure,
And smiles upon her fair face tell
Of pure and perfect pleasure;
And one has hair of raven hue
And eyes of hazel beauty,
And whate'er he may strive to do
He always does his duty;
And faithful they have ever been
To her who is my household queen.

And as life yields me newer joy
And hope divine and human,
I see one now no more a boy,
And one almost a woman.
The bright days come, the bright days go,
And each brings some new pleasure,
And no spot on the earth I know
Is richer with heart-treasure,
For happier subjects ne'er were seen
Than in my home where Love is queen.

By no high-sounding, royal name
Or title they address her,
As cheerily—their hearts aflame
With love—they kiss and bless her;
But with a voice of gentle tone
Which joy gives to each other,
They call her by one name alone—
The hallowed name of mother!
A name the sweetest known to man
Since time and love their course began.

THE GIRL WITHOUT A TALENT.

The sermon that day had been about service—"Go work to-day in my vineyard"—and here Dora found herself trying to settle down to a Sabbath afternoon nap on the parlor sofa, with these words persistently ringing in her ears. She shut her eyes, and waited patiently for a drowse. It could not be induced even with favoring conditions.

"If it isn't just like a minister to get one all stirred up, and then not tell them what to do! I surely can't be a missionary, and never yet succeeded in holding a Sabbath-school class. Here I am peering through the pickets into the vineyard, much as Adam and Eve might have peered into Paradise. Deary me!" and she rose from the sofa and took a seat on the little uncomfortable haircloth stool by way of penance. She resolutely settled down to a meditation.

"I know!" she declared to herself, "I'll just ask him what to do!" And she did that very evening. To him she announced in her frank way:

"It's a stubborn fact that all this afternoon I have lighted a candle and searched diligently, and can't find a single available gift of grace; so, please, sir, if you want me to go to work, you must find some spot in the vineyard that doesn't require talent."

The minister grew thoughtful. "I want an organist for the mission Sabbath-school," he said after a little.

"Just as I thought," moaned this would-be laborer. "I don't know the difference between a scale and a key-board."

"Do you sing?"

"Occasionally. In fact, I fill the room, and then empty it. Cousin John says it isn't quite so uplifting as the yell of a Comanche Indian. He has lived on the plains, you know."

"You can't visit the sick for me—" began the pastor, and then hesitated. Dora was lame, and could not get about easily.

"I would be sure to say the wrong thing, even f I could get there," answered Dora. "I always do. When auntie was sick I read the horror column of the newspaper to her, and left her with Taylor's work on 'Dying.' After this do preach your text, "Go work to-day in my vineyard—if you are equipped with talents. None others need apply."

"What is your specialty?" inquired the minister "We all have some specialty, you know."

"It really isn't worth mentioning."

"Perhaps I shall differ with you."

"Well, it's the care of plants. Only this, and nothing more. They will always blossom for me. I love even to pot and weed them, and the quantity of geraniums I slip for my friends is something incredible."

The minister did not reply at once. Indeed, not until Dora rose to go.

"Wait a bit—or, better yet, call to-morrow. I will let the sun rise on my plan first."

Dora went the next day. The pastor was a man of few words. "My plan is this," said he, "that you shall give each child in my mission Sabbath-school a potted plant, with such instructions as you know how to give. In three months hold a flower show. I will furnish prizes for you to bestow on the best-cared-for plant, for best collection of plants, for the prettiest bouquet of wild flowers. It is no longer art for art's sake, but art for humanity's sake."

He waited for her approval.

"All very pleasant—but—is it Christian work?"

"Yes, it's the vineyard, though perhaps a byway instead of a highway. It will work variously. Think of a tenement house with windows full of bloom. Think of the soul culture that comes from the care of flowers. Think of the additions to our Sabbath-school. The fact is, think in any line, and it means a blessed service with a definite result."

"Enough," answered Dora, rising at once to action. "I will go to work to-day."

If you have ever potted seventy-five geraniums, begging jars here and there, you will know how tired Dora was when she had arranged and prepared her rows of plants; how tried and how happy, for it was really a blessed service. She liked to think how they would look in wretched homes, if they could get courage enough to bloom amid such uncongenial surroundings. They were her message to tempted, sorrowful, barren human lives, and they were living things. She relieved the backache and general feeling of collapse by long continued gazing at the rows of plants. She met the school on an appointed day, gave the simple instructions, and dwelt enthusiastically on the flower show. A merry little company left the mission school that day, each one hugging a plant jar.

To tell all that came from cultivating that byway in the vineyard would take too long. Some of the little plants froze, which called attention loudly to the little human plants and their slim chances of escaping a like fate—so loudly, indeed, that a relief commission investigated the places, and brought health and warmth. Flowers blossomed in windows forever unused to beauty. Cleaner rooms and dresses and faces and lives became the accompaniments and were the direct results of blooming windows. "The flower show," Dora declared, "came to the girl without a talent

'Like the benediction
That follows after prayer.'"

One poor little forlorn plant with only three disconsolate leaves, and they looked as if about to give up the life struggle, brought out the fact that the owner had kept it alive in a basement by dint of the tenderest care. Oh, it told a whole story, that little pitiful, half-dead plant, and Dora saw to it that a prize was awarded to the sad little owner, for "evidence of culture under difficulties." It was actually said that the child would give it an airing every pleasant day, taking it to walk with her in a most companionable spirit, which probably had kept the breath of life in it. I can't stop to tell of the profusion of wild flowers, or the display of healthy plants, or the delight of the children when gala day came. Sufficient to say that because one girl cultivated her specialty, not despising its littleness, but consecrating it to Christian service, influences of heavenly origin, taking hold of the future far beyond human ken, reached down and lifted up to better living and brighter hopes the poor and halt and maimed and blind.—Christian Union.

When a young woman behaves to her parent in a manner particularly tender and respectful—I mean from principle as well as nature—there is nothing good and gentle that may not be expected from her, in whatever condition she is placed. Of this I am so thoroughly persuaded that were I to advise any friend of mine as to his choice of a wife, I know not whether my first counsel would not be: "Look out for one distinguished by her attention and sweetness to her parents."—Ex.

THE SENSIBLE GIRL.

The sensible young woman is self-reliant. She is not merely a doll to be petted, nor a bird to be supported; but though she may be blessed with a father able and willing to care for her every want, she cultivates her capabilities, she seeks to prepare herself for possibilities, and though she may not need to, she qualifies herself to feed and clothe herself, so that if left alone, she can stand upon her own feet, dependent upon no human being. With the multiplied ways of honest toil now open for young women, it seems quite excuseless for any one of them to be helpless. There are few nobler sights than that of a young woman who, though she may have a good home, with father and mother that are willing to indulge her to the uttermost, realizing the limitation of their means and their hard self-denial, says, "Father shall not be burdened by me; I will be self-reliant and myself; yes, I will help him to educate the younger children." Such a one is a thousand times superior to the pale-fingered, befrizzled, bejeweled substitutes for young women, who are good for nothing but to spend a father's hard-earned money. The sensible young woman is brave. Heroism is not most seen upon great occasions, but in little things. The strength of life is in the power of each little, common act. Bravery is best exhibited, not in enduring things we cannot help, but in the small matters one might help. In such a little thing as dress is a field of heroism—in willingness to be neat and not fashionable, in daring to wear last winter's cloak, or last spring's bonnet, until you can afford to have another—in being superior to the law of style. Some young women who would be willing to die for the flag of their country, will almost die, in another sense, for the want of a little ribbon.

The sensible young woman makes the best of everything. What we want and what we need makes life miserable. A sensible young woman treats herself as she does her plants. She gives them all the sunshine there is. If there is but one little window in her room, she gives them the benefit of that; and if the sun comes round to them but once a day, she gives them the benefit of that. She does not lock them up in her closet, and stifle what life they have because they are so small, but she makes all the more of them because of their smallness. So the sensible young woman lets all the light there is come into her heart, pushes back her tears, and throws out her smiles, and thus her life grows in contentment and gladness.

Lastly. The sensible young woman is reverential. Somehow, it seems more unnatural for a young woman not to be a Christian than it does for a young man to reject Christ. Such a young woman is like a flower refusing the sunbeams which draw forth its beauty. It is by faith in Christ that her true self-reliance comes, and she is made brave and calm, and her life incarnate sunshine, bursting at last into the eternal fulness of the heavenly world. Such sensibleness wins the admiration of men and the approbation of God.—Ex.

GIRLS, LEARN TO BE HOUSEKEEPERS.

Begin with your own possessions. Reform your upper bureau drawer; relieve your closet-pegs of their accumulations of garments out of use a month or two ago. Institute a clear and careful order in the midst of which you can daily move, and learn to keep it so that it will be a part of your toilet to dress your own room and its arrangements while you dress yourself, leaving the draperies you take off as lightly and artistically hung, or as delicately folded and placed, as the skirts you loop carefully to wear or the ribbon and lace you put with a soft neatness about your throat. Cherish your instincts of taste and fitness in every little thing you have about you. This will not make you "fussy;" it is the other thing that does that—the not knowing, except by fidgety experiment, what is harmony and the intangible grace of relation.

Take upon yourself gradually—for the sake of getting them in hand in like manner, if for no other need—all the cares that belong to your own small territory of home. Have your little wash cloths, and your sponges for bits of cleaning; your furniture brush, and your leather-duster, and your light little broom, and your whisk and pan; your bottle of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine and piece of flannel, to preserve the polish or restore the gloss where dark wood grows dim or gets spotted. Find out, by following your surely-growing sense of thoroughness and niceness, the best and readiest ways of keeping all fresh about you. Invent your own processes; they will come to you. When you have made yourself wholly mistress of what you can learn and do in your own apartment, so that it is easier and more natural for you to do it than to let it alone, then you have learned to keep a whole house, so far as its cleanly ordering is concerned. St. Nicholas.

SECRETS AND GIRLS.

Secrets are things many girls delight in. Experience has shown that the fewer secrets and mysteries girls have, the safer and more comfortable they feel. No girl should agree to keep a secret that she will have to withhold from her mother. If it is important and necessary that it should not be communicated to a third party, then she had better refuse to hear it at all. A great deal of unhappiness and misery has been done through small secrets, leading on from one wrong to another, until a web of deceit has been woven so complete and intricate that it is nearly impossible to get disentangled from it. Your mothers, dear girls, are the wisest and best confidents you can have. Their love, you may be sure, will guide and counsel you aright, and although you make many mistakes and blunders, you can never go very far astray if you tell your mother everything. A girl whose first thought is that mother mustn't know of this, is standing on very unsafe ground. Hide nothing from your mothers. If you do wrong, go to them and own it; don't wait for some one else to tell them, and thus shake their confidence and trust in you. Concealment and deceit should never be tolerated in your intercourse and association with other girls; shun those who take pleasure in them and seek the companionship of those with whom there need be no mysteries.—Sel.

CAGED GIRLS.

Here in America it is the small boy who is sometimes threatened, by his super-sensitive elders, and quite unjustly, we think, with being confined in a cask and fed through the bunghole. But it seems from the report of United States Consul Griffin, stationed at Sydney, that in New Britain another class of society actually suffers imprisonment. He says: "The inhabitants, it is said by Wallace, have a peculiar custom of confining their girls in cages until they are old enough to be married. This custom is said to be peculiar to the people of New Britain. The cages are made of twigs of the palm tree, and the girls are put into them when only two or three years of age. The Rev. George Brown established a Wesleyan mission in New Britain in 1876, and I learn from him that these cages are built inside of the houses, and that the girls are never allowed to leave the house under any circumstances. The houses are closely fenced in with a sort of wicker work made of reeds. Ventilation under the circumstances is rendered very difficult. The girls are said to grow up healthful and strong in spite of these disadvantages."—Golden Rule.

Out of 600 prisoners in the State's Prison at Auburn, N. Y., confined there for committing crimes while under the influence of drink, some 500 testified that they were led into intemperance by using tobacco.

The military commission of the Austrian army has established a law that the offense of intoxication should be punished the first time by a public reprimand. The second offense by several day's imprisonment in the guard house. The third offense is evidence that the victim is suffering from a chronic disease, and he is placed under constant surveillance. His pay is taken out of his hands and every means used to prevent him from getting money to secure spirits.

TEMPERANCE.

HIGH LICENSE IN MINNESOTA.

The Republican party, in its platform declared that high license is the best and most efficient method of dealing with the evils attending the liquor traffic which has yet been devised, as shown by the results which have followed. Some of these results, in this State, are shown by a report just published in the "Brewer's Hand Book." From this it appears that in Minnesota the sale of beer has increased from 313,074 barrels in the year ending April 30, 1889, to 326,819 barrels in the year ending April 30, 1890. The Republican ideal of an "efficient method" of dealing with the drink evil seems to be a method which will be efficient to increase the sale of drink. As to States that have tried a method other than high license, namely, prohibition, we learn from the same reliable authority, that in Kansas, which has a much larger population than Minnesota, the sale of beer decreased in the corresponding years, from 9,700 to 2,700 barrels, while Iowa reports a decrease of 24,204 barrels. Upon these undisputed facts, and other facts corroborative of them, it must be concluded that the Republican party either treats this whole subject in dense ignorance of the truth, or deliberately advocates a policy which increases the sale of liquor, as against a policy which is known to decrease such sale. In either case that party forfeits its claim to the support of voters who believe that the saloon power should be crushed and the drink evil curtailed. Austin Willey.

A CALL TO WORKINGMEN.

Addressing a meeting in England lately, Alderman White said: "With all due respect to the valuable and practical suggestions thrown out by General Booth, to whom they owed a debt of gratitude, he felt sure he could from a temperance platform propound remedies which would give more speedy effect on society than those of General Booth. He did not think there would be a man unemployed if their public-houses were closed. In a brewery not far from their town the profits last year amounted to £14,931, and only £5,068 was paid in wages, or less than a third of the profits of the company. If he had made the same profit in his own trade, instead of paying £5,068 for salaries and wages, he should have expended £89,586, and 3,000 men would have been employed. In Fitt's brewery, Notts., last year, £46,440 was realized as profits with an expenditure of £14,244 for salaries and wages. In his business he calculated that he should have paid about £270,000 wage money to make the same return as profits on the year. That would show the people of the country that their money passed into channels which produced next to nothing to the working men. They could settle the temperance question if they were in earnest, and he felt the present time was one of the greatest importance.

DRUNKENNESS IN RUSSIA.

Syn Otetchestva, a St. Petersburg daily, opines that if the Russians are accused of drunkenness the accusation is but partly true, and reflects more on the higher classes of society than on the common people. According to the excise statistics only about two gallons of spirituous drinks a year are sold to every Russian. The wealthy people, who take their drinks regularly, become accustomed to the spirits and are not subject to intoxication. But the poor, who get their drinks only once or twice in a month, get intoxicated and their failing becomes apparent. The consequence is that the wealthy drink more than the poor and get no blame for it. At a recent meeting of the temperance society it was shown, moreover, that if the peasant promises not to drink brandy he keeps his promise, while the nobleman seldom remains true to such a pledge. In the government of Vladimir a whole village made a pledge never to drink any liquor. The peasants closed up their saloons and not one of them has tasted a drop of liquor for the last five years. But the owner of that village who made the pledge with them goes to the city every day and gets beastly drunk. Once he was shamed for breaking his word and excused himself on the ground that he got drunk on champagne, while when he had taken the pledge with his peasants he had abjured only brandy.

DEAD, YET SPEAKETH.

The sudden death of Secretary Windom brings to mind his strong speech at Woodstock, Conn., July 4, 1887, in which he uttered these words: "How to curtail and finally destroy this evil is the great problem of the hour. Its solution is next on the world's calendar of progress. It has been called for trial and cannot be dismissed or postponed. . . . The time has therefore come when this issue must be met. Political parties can no longer dodge it if they would. Private citizens must take sides openly, for or against the saloon with its methods and results. 'Neutrality is henceforth impossible; indifference is a betrayal of the sacred trust reposed in citizenship.' The saloon system is itself a league of law-breakers, whose example affords a most powerful stimulus to disorder of all kinds. It openly proclaims its purpose to disobey all laws which interfere with its supreme purpose to make money in its own way and at whatever sacrifice. By what right does the saloon exist? I know of none."

TENNESSEE LEGISLATION.

A bill has been introduced in the Tennessee Legislature extending the provisions of the four-mile law to cities with a population of 3,000 and less. The passage of this law would obviate the necessity of repealing the charters of such cities desiring Prohibition and would place at least 75 of the 96 counties under a prohibitory law. The bill has passed second reading and now sleeps in the Committee on Incorporations, from which there is little hope that it will be resurrected, although petitions from various parts of the State will be presented for its passage. The bill calling for a Constitutional Convention is being bitterly fought by the whisky men who are afraid to trust the farmer legislators.

The annual report of the Iowa State School Superintendent states that definite instruction upon the "effects of stimulants and narcotics" is given in 15,097 of the district schools of the State. The number of schools reporting, graded and ungraded, is 15,762, so that scientific temperance instruction is given in all but 665. The law providing for such instruction was passed only four years ago.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Thirty-four young women have been in attendance upon the first term of Mr. Moody's Training School at Northfield, Mass., which aims to equip them for practical missionary work in the great cities.

—Rev. W. T. Campbell of the United Presbyterian church, Kansas City, is about to take a trip to Europe and the Holy Land.

—The will of William Shaw, of Pittsburg, gives $800,000 to Presbyterian missions and benevolence.

—Dr. Harper, of Yale, has been giving his expositions of the prophets, which were heard with such interest in Chicago not long since, as a series of Sunday night sermons in New York.

—The China Inland Mission sent out no less than 59 missionaries in 1890, of whom 32 were unmarried women. The number sent the year before was 55. These toilers represent various societies, such as the Swedish, the Norwegian, the German Alliance, and the Bible Christian missions.

—The number of missionary stations in Africa now exceeds 500. There are 400,000 converts, and the number is increasing at the rate of about 25,000 a year. Within five years more than 200 natives have suffered martyrdom for their faith.

—Rev. J. A. MacDonald, a Wesleyan missionary in Bengal, says that in India, idolatrous practices are coming into disrepute. He thinks that the reign of false gods is drawing to a close.

—A collector of Bombay has among his curiosities a Chinese god marked "Heathen Idol," and next to it is a gold piece marked "Christian Idol."

—Along the West African coast thirty-five languages, or dialects, have been mastered, and portions of the Scripture and various religious and educational books and tracts have been translated and printed, reaching thus about 8,000,000 people.

—The Methodist Episcopal church, North, with its 2,236,000 members, contributed last year for home, foreign, and freedmen's missions, $1,799,000. But though this sum is large it yet represents an average of but eighty cents per member, while the Congregationalists, with a membership of only 492,000, gave to similar objects $1,877,000, or at the rate of $3.81. In all its foreign work this great and active church reports a gratifying growth. The largest gains were made in North India, where in a single district last year 2,677 were baptized, of whom 1,020 were adults. The total increase in all the fields was 5,553, or nine per cent. The Methodis Episcopal Epworth League, though but two years old, has 300,000 members.

—The ninth General Conference of the World's Evangelical Alliance meets next month, April 4–12, in Florence, Italy. It is of interest that this Conference is to take place in the city where some of the earliest successes of the Alliance were won in behalf of religious liberty, and on the very spot where Savonarola suffered martyrdom. The subjects proposed for addresses are "Italy and the Reformation," "The Spread of the Gospel," "The Authority of Scripture," "Christianity and Social Questions," "Home and Foreign Missions," "Christian Faith and Christian Testimony." Prayer will be offered throughout Christendom that this meeting may be for the signal furtherance of the redemption of the earth.

—A glorious Gospel work is in progress at Fairport, New York. Four churches are united in it, Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Free Baptist. Probably not less than one hundred have professed conversion. Several of the hardest cases have been converted, and many heads of families. The pastors are assisted by Mrs. Caroline Talbot, an evangelist of the Society of Friends.

—Very successful revival meetings have been held in East Boston under the lead of evangelist E. E. Davidson, a young man who has been much blessed in revival work in other places, mostly in the Middle States.

—A large missionary boat, in connection with the McAll mission, is, it seems, to be anchored in the Seine. Daily services will be conducted in the cabin, which contains nearly two hundred persons.

—The announcement of the Missionary Training Institute for the Northwest at Minneapolis, shows that a comprehensive course of study has been laid out for the present year. The school is supported entirely by voluntary gifts, which may be sent to F. E. Bryant, treasurer, 464 Fairview avenue, St. Paul.

—Though Roman Catholic missionaries have been in Korea for two hundred years, the statement is made that they have never issued the Bible in the native language. They have translated the whole of the New Testament, but have not put it in print, and the only copies, made by hand, cost from $10 to $20 each. This is the way that Roman Catholicism sheds abroad the light of Gospel truth. The fact is, that were it not for Protestant Christianity the Word of God would be to-day a sealed book to the millions of the earth.

—The Young Men's Christian Association is pushing the junior work. A State conference of a notable sort, the first of its kind, was recently held at Everett, Mass., and it is to be held again next year. The boys' Gospel meeting Sunday afternoon at Englewood, Ill., is attended by eighty. The junior department at Evanston seems to be the main department. Capture the boys, and, naturally enough, the young men will be all right. Spurgeon says that Jesus "rested by doing. He obtained refreshment for his weakness by getting on with his work." The Y. M. C. A. organization seem to have set before them no less high example than this. They are going on constantly to new work. The college work is especially encouraging. The extension of the society to heathen lands is particularly noteworthy. R. S. Miller, of New York, passed through Chicago recently to Tokio, Japan, where he is to be assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. society in that city.

—The students of William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., have raised $500 to support one of their number as a missionary in Brazil; he will sail in May.

—At Park College, Parkville, Mo., there are forty-five students who are volunteers for foreign missions.

—The Amherst College Y. M. C. Association recently published a statement, showing that 70 per cent of the seniors are church members, 70 per cent of the juniors, 71 of the sophomores and 68 per cent of the freshmen.

—News comes from India that Dr. Pentecost has been much blessed in the welcome given him, and in many openings for his work. Believing as we do in the spiritual life and the power of godliness, we look with prayerful interest to this work, and await its results with expectancy. We believe many missionaries, as well as home workers, daub with untempered mortar. The Christian world should not give to the heathen world anything but a pure type of Christ's Gospel. Missionaries who use tobacco and wine, who are fond of dress, wearing jewelry and expensive clothing, and who mingle at Masonic and other secret society altars with the worshipers of Baal, are not specially fitted to show forth the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. There are heroic and true workers all along the lines, both at home and abroad, but if anywhere we need purity, and mating of faith and practice, it is when we take religious life to a heathen people, whose only knowledge of Christianity for many years to come must be from the mission fields and labors. We believe that Dr. Pentecost presents a pure type of the Christian life.—Bible Standard.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Benhadad's plans miscarry.—vs. 8–12. The life of the king of Syria had once with mistaken clemency been saved by Ahab, but he had very poorly requited the favor by keeping up a kind of intermitent warfare with his successor. Sometimes the man who refuses to give up some vile habit like the use of tobacco may seem to escape any bad consequences, while his children suffer in mind and body from his weak indulgence. So when a nation compromises with any great evil, as our government once did with slavery, and is now doing with the rum traffic, it may enjoy a temporary peace for which another generation will have to pay dearly. The king of Syria returned evil for good in trying to capture the son of the man who had spared his life; while Elisha, though his sovereign had wronged and slighted him, returns good for evil. By this sign we may discern between the children of God and the children of the wicked one. Satan is always trying to capture souls in his net. If one plan fails he tries another. But we need not be ignorant of his devices, for God has told us in his Word how many and how various they are. What if the king of Israel had not believed Elisha! Yet how many a young man has gone to destruction, body and soul, because he would not believe that a serpent lurks in the wine cup. Weak and foolish as Jehoram was, he was not so foolish as the boy who thinks that he can smoke cigarettes and not be hurt by them, in spite of all the warnings of age and experience. One of the most successful, because most cunningly contrived, of Satan's traps to catch souls, is the secret lodge; yet so many good and wise men have raised warning voices all over the land against this snare, that though multitudes are caught in it, the day is past when ignorance can be pleaded as an excuse. We have here a grand lesson of encouragement in warring against evil. The plans of the wicked are always frustrated in the end, even though they may seem to succeed for the time being. However desperate the battle waged by unbelief against the church of Christ, we have the promise that "no weapon formed against her shall prosper."

2. The invisible defense.—vs. 13–17. Benhadad now turns his attention to capturing Elisha; and having found out that he was at Dothan, famous as the place where Joseph was sold by his brethren into Egypt, "he sent thither horses and chariots and a great host." All this mighty force against one solitary man! for though Elisha's servant seems to have been truly attached to his master, his want of faith left him practically alone at this crisis. So Paul stood alone when he made his defense before Nero; so Luther before the Diet at Worms. Every generation has its prophets, but they are always one, like Elijah on Mt. Carmel, while the prophets of Baal are many. The servant could see the army which compassed the city to take Elisha, but not until his eyes were opened could he see the far mightier host sent to defend him. He is the type of the average Christian, living far below his privileges, and thus liable at every untoward turn of earthly fortune to be thrown into perplexity and doubt. We ought not to be satisfied with just enough faith to keep our own souls from sinking in the mire, but we ought to strive and pray for a faith so mighty that like Elisha's it can lift another on its eagle wings. Human unbelief and despair always cries, "Alas! what shall we do?" instead of waiting to see what God will do. In Rom. 8:13, we find a wonderful commentary on Elisha's answer: "If God be for us who can be against us." The "Fear nots" of Scripture ought to be studied more and personally appropriated. Then there would not be so many weak believers, but there would be more Elishas. His prayer the second time is a reversing of the first one. He does not pray that the eyes of the Syrian army may be opened, but that even their natural senses may fail to serve them. It was not literal blindness, but an hallucination sent upon them, so that they could not distinguish where they were. It is one of the sorest punishments for wilfully embracing error, "that God will send on them strong delusion that they should believe a lie." The sophistry used to support a bad cause comes in time to be sincerely believed. The persistent and deliberate opposers of the Gospel seldom have their eyes spiritually enlightened to see against whom they are fighting, but more often they are smitten with a strange blindness that makes them seem incapable of using even their ordinary human reason.

The fact that there are three lodges for every church in our large cities should cause every one knowing their evil, to support the organ of the Association opposed to them so far as they are able. Pittsburg and Allegheny have manifested their continued interest by giving over $50 in Cynosure subscriptions in the few days I have had to call on friends there. Lectures will probably soon be arranged for Allegheny and other points near. As I have an excursion ticket good for ten days, I hope to use it in return.

I spent Sabbath with Rev. Pollock, Elizabeth, Pa., and addressed his people in the evening. Nearly all who took our paper last year renewed. Several new names were also added. Wife writes that several papers have been sent in from points where I have spoken. Its a sure sign of life where there is agitation. The truth invites it, for it has nothing to fear. W. B. STODDARD —King Humbert has expressed a cordial interest in the conference of the Evangelical Alliance, to be opened in Florence April 4, being the first held in Italy.

—The Germans are collecting funds for a large Protestant church to be erected in the city of Rome; 38,000 marks having already been received. Pastor Terlinden of Duisberg, is the leading spirit of the movement.

—"Buddhism," said Rev. Dr. Rankin, President of Howard University, in a sermon replying to a recently published assault on Christianity, "ante-dates Christianity six centuries. What has it done for humanity at large? Buddhism has none of the characteristics of a universal religion which belong to Christianity. It has always been limited to Oriental civilization; has always remained ethnic. The religion which will eventually fill the world is the religion of the triumphing civilization. Christianity has no nationality, is affixed to no locality. Jerusalem is no more to it than London or Washington. It touches the earth as the light of the sun in the morning, only to illuminate it."

—R. A. Torrey, superintendent of the Bible Institute (Moody's school), Chicago, is said to be one of the best informed men on the contents of Scripture in the country. He is able to cite passages of Scripture to fit almost any case if not every case brought before him. The evangelist Yatman has this same power to a large degree. When closing his meetings some years ago at Evanston he stood and quoted for a long time without pause verse after verse of the Bible, giving chapter and verse without referring to the place. Dr. Brooks, of St. Louis, when speaking on the platform is wont to quote from memory one verse after the other, giving the entire reading, including the place where it is to be found. It is a rare and valuable gift for the Christian worker.

—The Protestant Episcopal church in the United States profess this in their creed, Art. 39: "Of a Christian man's oath. As we confess that vain and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ, and James his apostle, so we judge that Christian religion doth not prohibit, but that a man may swear when the magistrate requireth, in a cause of faith and charity, so it be done according to the prophet's teaching, in justice, judgment and truth." But this does not admit of an oath administered by the Master of a Masonic, or any other lodge. When a man swears to keep secrets of which he knows nothing, and binds his oath with a penalty of the most revolting character, no less than a forfeiture of his own life by the most cruel torture imaginable, we are forced to believe that such swearing is "rash," and "forbidden by our Lord Jesus Christ, and James his apostle." An oath is a solemn appeal to God to witness our entering upon an obligation which is binding upon our conscience. There is no secret society under the sun but which imposes such an obligation, and is, according to the creed above named, forbidden.—Bible Standard.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President on Wednesday signed the copyright bill with a pen made from the quill of an American eagle.

President Harrison signed the bill for the erection of a mint at Philadelphia on the one hundredth anniversary of the day on which President Washington signed the bill establishing the mint in that city.

The following is an approximate statement of appropriations made at both sessions of the LIst congress as prepared by the clerk of the Senate committee on appropriations: Amount of regular bills, including deficiencies and miscellaneous appropriations for the first session, $361,700,000; amount of regular bills, including deficiencies and miscellaneous appropriations for the second session, $405,000,000; permanent appropriations for the first session about $101,000,000, and permanent appropriations for 1892 estimated at $122,000,000; grand total, $989,700,000.

COUNTRY.

Severe snowstorms raged throughout Nebraska, South Dakota and western Iowa, accompanied with high winds. In Kansas the snow averaged six inches in depth.

Four and a quarter inches of rain fell at Vicksburg Saturday and city streets and bridges were damaged. The Vicksburg & Meridian railroad bed was badly washed out in places and the trains were abandoned. Much apprehension is felt for the safety of the lower Mississippi levees. At Elton, La., the protection levee gave way, seriously endangering the new and uncompleted levee.

Tacoma experienced a distinct earthquake shock Saturday evening. The shock was also felt at Seattle, Ellensburg and other points. No damage was done.

The beginning of March found 28,000 men in western Pennsylvania on a strike. The coke troubles are responsible for the idleness of 13,000 of these, and those of the river coal miners add 15,000. The loss in wages has amounted to $1,125,-

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

COMPOUND EXTRACT OF — TRADE MARK —

The importance of purifying the blood cannot be overestimated, for without pure blood you cannot enjoy good health.

At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is worthy your confidence. It is peculiar in that it strengthens and builds up the system, creates an appetite, and tones the digestion, while it eradicates disease. Give it a trial.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold by all druggists. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Let every enfeebled woman know it! There's a medicine that'll cure her, and the proof's positive!

Here's the proof—if it doesn't do you good within reasonable time, report the fact to its makers and get your money back without a word—but you won't do it!

The remedy is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—and it has proved itself the right remedy in nearly every case of female weakness. It is not a miracle. It won't cure everything—but it has done more to build-up tired, enfeebled and broken-down women than any other medicine known.

Where's the woman who's not ready for it? All that we've to to is to get the news to her. The medicine will do the rest.

Wanted—Women. First to know it. Second to use it. Third to be cured by it. The one comes of the other.

The seat of sick headache is not in the brain. Regulate the stomach and you cure it. Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the Little Regulators. Only 25 cents a vial.

Lodge Notes.

A general congress of German Freemasons in this country and Europe is in preparation.

The London Freemason says that the new Archbishop of York, Dr. Magee, is a Freemason. We are assured that he is the only Bishop on the English bench who belongs to the pagan lodge.

Americans, mark this! The Masonic Temple at Caracas, the capital of the Republic of Venezuela, was built and furnished out of the funds of the State. The President is the "Protector" of the Grand Lodge.

In some Masonic jurisdictions, especially in the Western States, the initiation fee is as low as $20, while in some of the cities of the East it ranges as high as $200. The same difference exists in regard to the annual dues, which vary from $3 to $15.

A new secret order, known as the "Veiled Prophets," has been introduced, says the Masonic Chronicle. "While this is not a legitimate Masonic body, yet it is interesting to Masons to know that it only takes for its members those who have passed a clear ballot in Masonic bodies."

King Kalakaua, of the Hawaiian Islands, who died in San Francisco January 20th, was a Thirty-third Degree Mason, Knight Templar and Shriner. Only six days before his death he had the last named degree conferred upon him in Islam Temple of San Francisco. He was Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the Hawaiian Islands. No wonder the Islanders were lapsing into idolatry.

The Grand Master of Masons in Kentucky has rendered two important decisions: first, that there is no Masonic obligation to assist a Mason's widow who has married again, and whose second husband, a profane, has deserted her, on the ground that she has voluntarily abandoned the state of Masonic widowhood; and second, that a Master Mason must obey a lawful summons issued by any Master Mason's lodge, even if unaffiliated.

The English Freemasons' Chronicle says that "The Prince of Wales is in the seventeenth year of his Grand Mastership, and is as popular as ever he was among the mystic brotherhood. His brother, the Duke of Connaught, has been at the head of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Sussex since 1886; while early in the present month he was elected to the honorary rank of Past Grand Master of England. Now the Masons have the eldest son of the Prince of Wales as ruler of Berkshire."

The Masonic editor of the Baltimore Telegram says: "The Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine is not very old in the United States. It was in 1871 that Walter M. Fleming, the present most illustrious Grand Potentate of the Mystic Shrine, came into possession of the detached and mutilated sections of the translation of the ritual of the Arabic and Egyptian Order of the Mystic Shrine, brought to America by one of the foreign members and representatives through the hands of Oswald Marie D' Arbique, Thirty-second Degree. It was exceedingly imperfect and incomplete, and to a great extent badly translated and filled with unintelligible symbolisms. Another portion was brought from Oriental Europe by William J. Florence, and some of the vague history and ritualistic sections were brought from Cairo, Egypt, by Sherwood B. Campbell.

Deserving Confidence.—There is no article which so richly deserves the entire confidence of the community as Brown's Bronchial Troches. Those suffering from Asthmatic and Bronchial Diseases, Coughs and Colds should try them. They are universally considered superior to all other articles used for similar purposes. The late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher said of them: "I have never changed my mind respecting them from the first, except I think yet better of that which I began by thinking well of. I have also commended them to friends, and they have proved extremely serviceable."

are the months in which to purify the Blood. The medicine to take is AYER'S Sarsaparilla. This remedy stands alone as SUPERIOR in combination, proportion, and appearance, and SUPERIOR in all that goes to strengthen and build up the system weakened by disease and pain.

"For several years, in the spring months, I was troubled with a drowsy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so bad, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least sudden motion causing me severe distress. Occasionally, a rash covered my body, the skin apparently becoming thickened, accompanied by intense itching. Frequently, boils would break out on various parts of the body. By the advice of my family physician, I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my system was completely eradicated. I believe that everybody would be benefited by taking a bottle or two of Ayer's Sarsaparilla each spring." — L. W. English, Montgomery City, Mo.

"Every spring for the last nine years, I have been in the habit of taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I can truly say that I never used any medicine that did me so much good. I am convinced that it is the best medicine of the kind in the market, and recommend it to all in need of a reliable and effective blood-purifier." — J. A. Shepard, 246 Pearl st., New York City.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

'It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

A WONDERFUL COW.

D. Fuller Appleton of Ipswich, Mass., owns a great butter producer, the famous Essex cow Eurotisania, a most intelligent member of the Jersey family. She is six years old and her number in the herd book is 29,668. Her pedigree is from Rioter II and Alphia, having with it many characteristics of Eurotus, who in less than a year produced 778 pounds and 1 ounce of butter, and dropped a calf within the year. The test with Eurotisania began April 21, 1889, and ended with April 21, 1890. In this time her milk produced 945 pounds and 9 ounces of butter. Unfortunately the cow got at and ate a quantity of sour apples which caused a falling off in her butter production from 22 1-2 pounds a week to 17 pounds a week, and though he quickly recovered her health, she did not increase in either milk or butter to the previous average weekly product. In October, 1889, six months after the test was begun, the cow weighed 820 pounds. She received twenty-four pounds of grain daily—one-third each of cornmeal, ground oats and bran—with pasture, ensilage and hay according to the season. But for the sour-apple episode it is believed that this wonderful cow would have reached fully 1,000 pounds of butter in the year. Eurotisania carried a calf during five months of the year. Her record eclipses that made by Landseer's Fanny, the famous cow of Colonel W. A. Webster, of Columbia, Tenn., in 1886, by eight pounds ten and one-half ounces. Mr. Appleton has the Breeders' Association silver prize cup awarded Eurotisania as the champion butter producer of the world. The achievement of Eurotisania was best measured, as Col. Waring stated, by the fact that the average cow's butter production for one year was but 145 pounds.—New York Tribune, Sept., 1890.

"SCRUB" CARE OF DAIRY STOCK.

It has been demonstrated that a good common cow, treated as the choice Jerseys are, will give better return than a finely-bred but neglected Jersey. This discovery has had the effect of bringing down the price of Jerseys to a point which places them within reach of ordinary dairymen. The editor of a Vermont journal is credited with being the owner of a "stub-tailed, one-horned 'yaller' cow, with no pedigree," which last year, besides furnishing the milk for a family of ten persons, supplied more than $100 worth, sold to the editor's neighbors who had the misfortune to own cows with long pedigrees. Whatever exaggeration there may be in the tale as told, it is certainly true that good feeding and care will do wonders in developing latent bovine powers. By crossing the "scrubs" with better blood, and treating the offspring as if they were thousand-dollar stock, a vast improvement should be effected in the character of the ordinary dairy stock and in the profits of the dairyman. But even without the crossing, good feeding and care will greatly increase the supply and improve the quality of the milk of most cows of the ordinary breeds.—The Examiner.

In response to an urgent demand, Congress provided that the 1890 census should contain the mortgage indebtedness statistics of the whole country. The mortgages for the past decade have been taken from the records, and the census office reports a total of over $850,000,000. The investigation into the purposes for which mortgages were incurred shows that about three-fourths of them were for purchase money or for improvements, and that one-tenth was for business uses. The total sum, though an immense one, is not alarming, considering the main causes for which it was assumed.

The total sum is very much less than what was supposed. Two years ago some mortgage statistics were going the rounds of the press that placed the farm mortgage indebtedness of Illinois alone at $1,000,000,000. And the farm, not the total mortgages, of Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin were estimated to be over $4,500,000,000. At that time it was shown that these figures were largely the result of loose guesswork, and our readers were warned that no reliance could be placed on them or on any political arguments based on them. Mortgages are grievous burdens, but the census returns show that they are not nearly as great as deppicted.—Farm and Fireside.

HOME WITHOUT A MOTHER.

The room's in disorder,
The cat's on the table,
The flower-stand upset, and the mischief to pay:
And Johnny is screaming
As loud as he's able,
For nothing goes right when mamma's away.

What a scene of discomfort and confusion home would be if mamma did not return. If your wife is slowly breaking down, from a combination of domestic cares and female disorders, make it your first business to restore her health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a peer as a remedy for feeble and debilitated women, and is the only medicine for the class of maladies known as female diseases which is sold under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction, in every case, or the money will be refunded. It is a positive cure for the most complicated cases. It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, and a soothing and strengthening nervine, imparting tone and vigor to the whole system. It's a legitimate medicine, too—carefully compounded by an experienced physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. For all the chronic weaknesses, functional derangements, and painful disorders peculiar to the sex, it is an unfailing remedy. It's because it is unfailing that it can be sold under a positive guarantee.

If it fails to give satisfaction, in any case for which it's recommended, the money paid for it will be promptly returned.

It is a legitimate medicine—not a beverage. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to sour or ferment in the stomach and cause distress. As peculiar in its marvelous, remedial results as in its composition.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels. One a dose. Sold by druggists.

all over the country, its sales far exceeding those of all other sarsaparillas and blood purifiers. The people have been quick to recognize in Hood's Sarsaparilla an honest medicine at an honest price, honestly recommended for those troubles which it honestly cures. This is the secret of its marvellous success, and this is why "Words of Praise" for Hood's Sarsaparilla are heard on every hand.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

000 since the troubles began, and many poor people are in actual want. In the window glass trade, thirty-two factories have closed and it is probable that others will follow.

The long strike of the coal miners of the Monongahela Valley has ended in a complete victory for the men. The operators decided to concede the demands of the strikers for an advance in the mining rate of ½ cent per bushel, and resumed work Monday. The strike was one of the longest and most determined ever known in this section. It lasted ten weeks, and the 6,000 men lost in wages alone over $1,000,000

The Kansas House Monday passed the Senate bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the State, and providing that all lands held by aliens at the end of seven years shall revert to the State. The bill now goes to the Governor.

The Australian ballot bill was signed by the Governor of Nebraska Wednesday and it is now a law, having passed with an emergency clause.

The Arkansas House passed a bill to make murder in the first degree punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary from fifteen to twenty-five years, optional with the jury. It virtually abolishes capital punishment.

The Kansas House by a heavy vote passed the bill abolishing the State board of pardons. Mr. Duncan, chairman of the committee on penal institutions, declared that his investigations had proved conclusively that "the board was in the habit of pardoning the rich devils out and leaving the poor devils to sweat it out."

William P. Wells, the senior member of the law faculty of Michigan University, dropped dead Wednesday morning in a court-room at Detroit. He had been connected with the university sixteen consecutive years in the capacity of lecturer in the law department.

The cattle for the beef issue of the Cheyenne Agency which was to be made this month consisted of cattle shipped from the East, and were of such inferior quality that the agent to-day refused to accept them, and to bring up the average the contractor was obliged to throw out a large number and purchase cattle raised on the ceded Sioux lands. These cattle have had no feed or care this winter, but are in excellent condition.

At Pittsburg, Pa., President Rae, Master Workman Wise, and others of the United Mine Workers, were arrested, charged with conspiracy, riot, and assault, for their connection with the coke strike.

The race question is said to be assuming a serious phase in Oklahoma Territory, and fighting between black and white people is reported to be eminent.

Seven laborers working on the Great Northern extension, in Montana, were frozen to death. The bodies of five were recovered on Tuesday.

The coroner has issued warrants for the officers and directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, who have been held responsible by the coroner's jury for the death of the victims of the Harlem river tunnel disaster. Chauncey M. Depew appeared at the coroner's office and furnished a bond of $25,000.

There is alarm in Chautauqua county, Kan., over the rapid spread of small-pox among the farmers. The roads are all under guard and a strict quarantine is being enforced against the country people. The number of deaths during the last few days is said to be alarming.

A special to the Richmond Dispatch says that in the terrible gale which swept the lower James river Feb. 26 last twenty-four oystermen, mostly colored, were drowned at points about the mouth of the Warwick river.

Reports from Clifton, Ariz., state that a Mexican woman and her five children drowned at Solomonville while endeavoring to cross the Gila river on a raft.

Louis E. Pfeiffer, George F. Work and James S. Dungan, the wreckers of the Bank of America and American Life Insurance Company, at Philadelphia, have been sentenced respectively to two, three and four years in the penitentiary.

Carelessness of miners caused an explosion Wednesday in the Nottingham Colliery at Plymouth, Pa. One man was killed, two were mortally injured, and two others seriously burned.

Two students at the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, Isadore H. Frauenthal and Ernest Sallinger, committed suicide with the same revolver Wednesday.

FOREIGN.

March 2 being the one hundredth anniversary of the death of John Wesley, a statue erected in his honor was unveiled in the presence of a large concourse of people, in front of the City Road Chapel, London, the headquarters of the Wesleyans. Archdeacon Farrar, of Westminster, took part in the ceremonies.

The Paris Figaro, in reference to the visit of the Empress Frederick to Paris, says that at one moment the situation was most critical. Those who are in the best position to know what was occurring, assert that had the empress been hissed or the slightest insult offered to her as she was leaving the French capital her son, the German Emperor, would soon have found an excuse for declaring war.

By his personal influence the Emperor William has succeeded in preventing the defeat in the Reichstag of the government on the proposed addition to the navy, but this has only been done by inducing some of the members to abstain from voting.

News of a horrible massacre comes from Madagascar. Ramiasatra, Governor of the Province of Belanond, resenting a petition from the populace to the government to defend them from cruelties, massacred 278 persons, including men, women and children belonging to the leading families. The slaughter continued for several days.

Don't trifle with a cold when a 25 cent bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will cure it.

For wounds, cuts and bruises use Salvation Oil, the great pain-destroyer. Price 25 cents.

Dr. E. T. Miller, of Cross Plains, Wis., has expressed the opinion that, for obstinate cases of syphilis and scrofula, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is unquestionably the most effective remedy known to pharmacy. Wonderful cures have resulted from its use.

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

St. Vitus Dance Cured!

SAN ANDREAS, CAL. Co., Cal., Febr. 1889.
My boy, 13 years old, was so affected by it, that he could not go to school for 2 years. Two bottles of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic restored his natural health, and he is now attending school again.
MICHAEL O'CONNEL.

Extract From a Letter of the Rev. W. C. Kampmeier, Lowell Wash. Co. O.
After the second dose of the Nerve Tonic which I ordered for my little son upon the advice of Rev. E. Koenig, the spasms disappeared and no symptoms shown since four weeks, although the attacks came from 15 to 20 times each day before—The child was so delicate that it could hardly stand or walk, now it is playing in the yard and has gained 3½ lbs. in weight. Although the Rev. Koenig had expressed but little hope that the Nerve Tonic would help, I thank God, that I followed his advice and shall recommend the remedy to all sufferers,

Our Pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.
This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for the past ten years, and is now prepared under his direction by the

The Parnell fight has broken out again. The deposed Irish leader disgusts all decent people with his self-vindication while continuing his visits to his mistress. Yet he has so strong a following in Ireland and this country that he may yet rout his Irish opponents. He will never, at least, have the support of Gladstone in any way whatever, nor of the self-respecting members of the English Liberal party. Both factions of the Home Rulers have sent their emissaries again to this country, and their cry is Money!—forever Money! As if we were made of gold and Ireland the most needy and worthy of paupers.

But our Nebraska farmers are telling us with some good reason that American charity ought to begin at home. Thirty counties in that State have made application for aid, and the estimate of supplies needed, made by the general manager of the State Relief Commission, is as follows: Corn, $225,000; wheat, $195,000; oats, $133,000; potatoes, $40,000; coal $9,000; flour, $72,000; rice, $39,000; beans, $45,000; total $758,000. No estimate is made for seed corn, cane, millet or garden seeds; the cost of which will swell the amount to above $800,000. The need of these our neighbors and friends is pressing. We are glad to note that an organized effort by responsible men in Chicago, is being made to succor them.

The Chicago labor lodges are singularly inconsistent. In the first place it is a folly for them to keep up their secret societies. They are expensive for the members, give demagogues an opportunity for mischief, and are filling the minds of their members with false ideas respecting social, religious, and economic questions. In the next instance they met last Sabbath to condemn the massacre of Italians in New Orleans, when a few weeks ago they were ready to do the same thing, if the Italian laborers in Jackson Park had resisted the men who came to drive them away. They have also forced upon the World's Fair managers an agreement that may be costly. Eight hours is to be a day's work, and no laborer is to be employed who is not an American citizen, or has taken out papers declaring his intention to become such. The effect of this will be to crowd our courts with ignorant and indifferent foreigners, who want work, but do not care a fig for American principles or institutions; and will know and care just as much for them after they have been naturalized as now, unless they keep out of the secret socialistic lodges.

Secretary Dickinson of the World's Fair Directory in this city, reports that he has received 639 different petitions for the Sunday closing of the Exposition. They are from almost every State and Territory and probably represent millions of people, for many of them are the unanimous vote of union meetings representing all the churches of a community. Mrs. Bateham, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Sabbath Observance, writes to the Union Signal, that the petition of 12,000 persons had been placed before Congress before adjournment, requesting action on this important matter. The first week in April has been set apart by the W. C. T. U., for special prayer for the Sabbath. Let it be everywhere remembered. It seems there is a combination of exhibitors said to number 4,000 already, which has been formed to control the Sabbath question in the Fair by a constant threat of withdrawing, if it is not open seven days in the week.

An English magazine of large circulation in this country, and conducted with intelligence, speaks in a late number with the calmness and confidence of personal knowledge of the avalanches that occur in the muddy and level streets of Chicago. We can return the compliment after the sharp experiences of our English friends early last week. A blizzard that would have done justice to our northern mountain regions swept the south of England. The dispatches say that in Kent and Sussex the railroads were completely blockaded; the neighboring country being deep with snow. The hurricane which accompanied the snow-storm piled snow-drifts on all sides, stopping all traffic upon the railway lines and upon the country roads. Two trains full of passengers in the Midlands were snowed up and the passengers, not rescued until morning, suffered terribly from cold, owing to the unheated condition of the cars. In Somersetshire, Dorsetshire, Hampshire and Gloucestershire, there were snow-drifts everywhere many feet deep, rendering field work impossible. In these counties the mail service was completely stopped, and the farmers will suffer immense loss among the cattle and sheep flocks with which their farms are stocked. Verily, nature has her compensations. This is the second severe storm that has swept England this winter; while Chicago with its avalanches has had an open, pleasant winter, and not more than three inches of snow at any time. Our English friends will visit us soon and admire our climate, as we have long been taught to do theirs.

One of the chimerical schemes which got so far as to be presented to the Senate of the Fifty-first Congress was a "National Guarantee, Loan and Development Company." The objects of this corporation, as set forth by Senator Stockbridge, who introduced the bill for its establishment, were "the amelioration of the condition of the poor; the development of unoccupied farming and mineral lands by furnishing the necessary means to cultivate and operate them; the development of natural resources that may conduce to the National wealth; the establishment of industries on the co-operative plan; the construction and maintenance of non-sectarian schools, colleges, hospitals, asylums, etc." A company for the promotion of such objects is very near to being a goverment in itself. Like the Masonic system, which provides all the social recreation, knowledge of sciences, business assistance, political promotion and religious sentiment, which some men ask for, and verily, as says Sickels, leaves nothing that the soul of man requires, this national aid society presumes altogether too much for itself, if it can banish poverty, ignorance and the ills that flesh is heir to. The trouble with these Utopian schemes is, they carefully shut their eyes to the fact that men are lazy and wicked, and do not naturally resist the temptations of the devil, and something beside human theories is needed to help them overcome these conditions.

PROF. TOWNSEND'S ANTI-JESUIT LOGIC.

BY REV. J. P. STODDARD.

The investigation of Romanism continues in Boston with unabated interest. This many-sided system of ecclesiasticism is assailed, and what is done in secret chambers proclaimed upon the house-top by some of the foremost clergymen of our land. In not a few instances this exposure has been made by converted priests and nuns, regardless of oaths or vows, assumed never to disclose, but ever to conceal the confessional secrets. If, in a single instance the right and duty of these seceders to disregard their solemn vows and disclose immoral and shameful practices has been questioned by a single Protestant, it has not come to my knowledge. I do not believe a single protest has been made; but on the other hand commendation and laudation are heard on every hand for the men and women who defy papal power and incur persecution by disclosing the shameless deeds of a licentious priest-hood.

One is led to ask, Why should not this rule apply to those who expose other corrupt systems? Why eulogize "Father" Chiniquy for leaving and denouncing Romanism, and condemn Charles G. Finney as a perjurer, because he did precisely the same thing, and for similar reasons, with Masonry? Is Masonry so much superior or more holy than Romanism as to be entitled to such preference?

Prof. L. D. Townsend, D. D., one of Boston's clearest thinkers and favorite orators, gave his third lecture on his explorations among Roman institutions in Mexico, at Music Hall lately. It is quite evident that he has penetrated the "Mystic Shrine" and uncovered the cess-pools of Jesuit iniquity, as he spoke of what he saw and heard for himself in that priest-ridden land.

His special topic was the heartlessness and corruption of Roman Catholicism, which he demonstrated by many instances in detail, enforced by the keenest wit and the most scathing sarcasm, rendering his assaults perfectly irresistible. For more than an hour every eye was fastened upon him while he held the attention, and I may say, the sympathy of 1,500 or two thousand listeners, whose approval found frequent expression in hearty applause.

After giving repeated instances of heartlessness, Prof. T. approached a part of his theme with the remark, "If any of you think I am going too far, hold up your hand or cry 'Hold, enough!'" No signal appeared and he proceeded to the very verge of propriety, leaving the things that are done, of which it is a shame to speak, to be inferred from what he had given.

Referring to the relations of popery and Freemasonry in Mexico, he said, "They fraternize in most instances, but there are exceptions." "I can take you to a lodge where the four principal officers are Jesuits."

He told of an instance where a Catholic Mason went to confessional and the priest demanded his lodge secrets before granting absolution. The Mason refused and the priest became angry, vowing speedy vengeance and a "raid" on the lodge rival of his own secret inquisition. His threat was not executed, however, and for the very forcible reason that the priest was assassinated before the lodge met again. It was a simple "slugging match" between Jesuit Sullivan and Masonic Kilrain, in which the Masonic assassin "got in his work first."

He insisted that the fundamental principles of the Roman system were identical in Mexico and Boston, and argued with great force in support of his position. Environments modified the actions, but never change the real character of an institution. It is the same in Spain, in Italy, in Mexico and the United States; and this is the boast of Freemasonry that its landmarks are unchangeable. Its environments may prevent open assassinations, in Massachusetts, as Romanism is restrained by an outside pressure. But is the institution of Freemasonry, which deliberately planned and mercilessly compassed the murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan in western New York, and assassinates priests in Mexico to-day, a benevolent, patriotic, humane, or safe institution in Boston? Is the assassin's dagger any less horrid in the hand of a Mason than in the hand of a Jesuit? And is the order that produces and then shields the one in his crime, less deserving our abhorrence than the other?

Let the investigation of Romanism go on until its lowest depths are explored and exposed, but let not the twin sister of Masonic iniquity and intrigue be spared. Let each receive its just mead of attention and then shall our Divine Lord and King be glorified in the plucking up of these noxious plants, which our Heavenly Father hath not planted.

Hotel Howland, Boston.

FROM THE FOOT OF THE ROCKIES.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

I feel moved this beautiful morning to write you a letter from this great center of oath-bound secrecy, where the lodge has control of almost everything, the pulpit not excepted; where one can feel when they sit with God's people to commemorate a Saviour's love, that some of those who bear the vessels of the Lord, and therefore should have clean hands, minister also at other altars. One certainly, as Worthy Prelate for the Masonic order, whatever that means. But our city is fair and growing, with a large element of order-loving and God-fearing people among its inhabitants, while the vicious element is active and malignant. Only three murder trials in progress at this time, one case here by change of venue. And while the churches are full on the Lord's day, so are the concert halls, and places where labor organizations plot and plan; and where socialism gives vent to its pent-up malignity and covetousness; and where the young are lured to spend the sacred hours in dancing and frivolity, if nothing worse. And here, as elsewhere, alcohol, the spirit of the pit, is never at rest; and is active and aggressive in proportion to the efforts made by "the seed of the woman," to bruise his ugly head. So you see that the forces of Christ are brought face to face with the forces of anti-Christ, who it seems may gain a temporary victory. But God is not asleep, or gone on a journey; and when the time is ripe, he will answer by fire so hot that even the filled trenches shall be licked dry, and that for which men have bartered their souls shall be as fuel till all shall be ashes. "But because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil."

I was extremely pleased to read something of the life-work of President Blanchard as given by himself at the celebration of his eightieth anniversary. A beautiful record! and one can almost hear the words of the Master saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And when he alludes to the companion of his life, and of her translation from the mountain, the passage is the most tenderly pathetic of anything I have met with for many a day. I would like to add my congratulations, with the hope that he may be spared many days, his natural force not being abated.

I read with amused interest Miss Flagg's letter to the Rev. Fletcher, containing her pathetic plea in behalf of the sisterhood. Surely Miss Flagg must have heard of the Rebekahs of Odd-fellowship, who are supposed to know all the mysteries which the feminine mind can grasp or retain. And does she not know how the ancient and most worshipful, most worthy, and most grand order of free and accepted Masons have most chivalrously instituted a shining order known as the "Order of the Eastern Star!" and that the wives of Masons are so much pleased with this little bone thrown to them, that they feel quite flushed with the knowledge and dignity which has been conferred upon them, and that they are quite as alert as their lords, in defence of the institution, and especially that the grace of that charity which thinketh no evil abounds, so though the father and husband remains at the lodge till after midnight, on a Saturday night, it is quite right, and no questions asked. A most beautiful and unselfish arrangement on the part of the Royal Grands. What would Miss Flagg desire more? I am greatly amused when I consider the whole thing, knowing so well what it all means, as I have been initiated into the order with due propriety. I never attended a meeting after; though there was nothing objectionable in the ceremony, of course not! But it is wonderful how it has promoted the growth and the domestic comfort of the order of the most worshipfuls!

An evangelist, said to be quite young, accompanied by a lady to sing the Gospel, is laboring in the Methodist churches, calling large congregations, with what results I do not know. I may be wrong, but it seems to me an imbecile confession of weakness and failure, when men thoroughly furnished for their work, step aside and give place to some youth who has supplied himself with a bundle of stories, to use for illustrations, and then with self-confidence, and a sledge-hammer method, goes at the people, saying very many things, true enough, that the minister would not risk his popularity by saying. Would it not be better to preach a full round Gospel steadily, not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men will hear or forbear, instead of choosing a phrase from some text as a Scriptural foundation, on which to build a pretty and agreeable sermon, helpful to many, comforting to more, and somehow entertaining to all; while nobody goes home silent and thoughtful under conviction of sin, ready to cry out, "What shall I do to be saved?" Would it not be better to correct the preaching, and let the evangelist go his way and fit himself for steady work in caring for some hungry flock?

Denver.

IS THIS A TURN IN THE TIDE?

Have we reached a turning point in history? "The whole trend of modern civilization," said Henry Maine, a few years since, "has been from status to contract." Slavery is a state; so is feudalism. The patriarchal system and family dependence also come under the head of status. The wage system rests upon contract. This system has taken possession of the whole field of labor. As Mr. Maine also remarks, individual obligation has been gradually substituted for family dependence. The individual has more and more become the unit of which civil laws take account. The result in the most progressive States is that the race has been almost completely individualized. But the question is, Has a reaction set in? Has history begun to turn back upon itself? Are we losing faith in the individual? For centuries the sentiment of progress has been that the all-important thing was to give the individual a chance; and with each successive liberation from bondage, and enlargement of his personality and power, we thought the millennium was drawing nearer. But now that we have reached the high limit of the individual's rights and privileges, are we beginning to doubt his power of success?

It would be rash to give an explicit answer to this question. But the indications are that in the industrial and commercial world the individual is losing his place. Combinations are the order of the day. Men are massing. Even great houses no longer feel able to stand alone, or at least do not consider it to their interest to stand alone. Here are great manufacturing firms whose business runs into the millions, and whose employes are numbered by the thousand, and yet they plead the weakness of independence, and come together under the shelter of a common roof and form a family of interests, with a plutocrat for patriarch and all the favored sons in "on the ground floor." Railroad magnates seem large enough to the common eye, but in their own eyes, too small to get on alone. Hence we are promised a combination which will cover land and sea, and make it possible for these individuals to stand up together and face the difficulties of the situation. There was a time when a man could kill an ox and sell the beef to his neighbors; but now everything that wears a hoof and does as it pleases about chewing the cud, if it is to be killed at all, must be sent to some vast four-headed establishment, and after paying toll to the lords of millions, is permitted to go back to feed the neighbor of the man who raised it, if not the man himself. Feudalism was nothing compared with it.

The wage earners also are massing. The individual counts for nothing. Trades' unions and organizations are everything. The contractor no longer deals with the individual, but with the trade. In a city like this hardly a brick is laid or a nail driven through simple contract with the individual. The organization which stands behind him makes the compact for time and wages. In other words, while the contract system still prevails the individual has almost ceased to be a factor in it. In social affairs there is the same drift. The individual is losing himself, or rather trying to supplement himself, through fraternities, societies, guilds. Never was there such a tendency among men to prop themselves up and buttress themselves about and take on importance through the fellowship, the regalia and the pomp and circumstance of an order or guild as at the present time. If for ages the tendency of civilization was to swing the individual man away from family dependence, it is now tossing him back into the lodge where he finds at least an artificial shelter for his weakness and a retreat for his loneliness.

Political tendencies reveal the same fact. Farmers' Alliances mean that the individual farmer can no longer stand up to the plow alone. It takes an organization to help him out. Socialism is a stronger and much more general drift in the same direction. The increasing demand for paternalism in government indicates that whole classes of men are tired of fighting the battle of life alone.

How far the reform will carry us remains to be seen. But some of the evil effects are already apparent. The tendency of trusts is to reduce the many to dependence upon the few, to give to the strong the prerogative of apportioning the products of labor. How much they will keep for themselves, and how much they will give to the toilers cannot but be determined somewhat as it was in the days of slavery, that is, by their greed or generosity. The tendency of labor organizations is to substitute the power of numbers for the worth of the individual. When a lazy man can keep his place and draw his wages because he is backed by an organization, there is not much encouragement for an energetic and industrious man to do his best. Therefore what is gained through the strength of numbers is in danger of being lost through the deterioration of the individual.—Advance.

KNIGHTS OF RECIPROCITY.

Washington correspondence New York Sun: The organization known as the "Knights of Reciprocity," which sprouted from the soil of Kansas soon after the election last fall as a counter-irritant to the Farmers' Alliance, is about to blossom forth all over the country.

One of the founders of the new order is the Hon. Samuel R. Peters, the outgoing predecessor of Jerry Simpson, as Representative of the Seventh Kansas District. Mr. Peters to-day packed up his traps, bade good-by to his friends, and boarded a train for his home at Newton, Kan. Before leaving he communicated this bit of interesting news:

"Application has been sent," said he, "from Washington for the establishment of a lodge of the Knights of Reciprocity here. Applications have also been received at the Central Office, so I am informed to-day by letter of the Hon. Jesse Taylor, of Garden City, Kan., Supreme Judge of the order, from every State and Territory in the Union.

"The new order is taking prodigious strides. It is a secret organization, and, therefore, the public has not been made aware of its wonderfully rapid growth and development. We started the organization out in Kansas after the election.

"It has the same social features as the Farmers' Alliance, and its object is to embrace eventually all those who believe in certain well-defined principles. These articles of faith and allegiance are: 1. A desire for the perpetuity of the Union; advocacy of liberal pensions to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war; the protection of American industry; reciprocity between all friendly nations or fair trade, especially with those nations on the American continent; reciprocity, also between all classes in our nation, including a community of interest, which should exist between producers and consumers, manufacturers and operatives, between common carriers and shippers; a fair and honest ballot, and, lastly, the disfranchisement of every person offering or accepting bribes or attempting improperly to influence the ballot.

"Belief in these," said Mr. Peters, "is the fundamental requisite to membership. Knights of Reciprocity are not confined to any political organization, and are not subjected to political tests. Every citizen of the United States over 18 years of age, male and female, is eligible to membership. The officers are: Supreme Judge, Treasurer, Marshal, Supreme Clerk, Supreme Treasurer, and Supreme Outer and Inner Bailiff. The sub-lodges have their similar local officers. The first lodge was instituted on Nov. 26 at Garden City, Kan. Now there are in the neighborhood of 500 lodges, principally in Kansas, but scattered also through Nebraska, Missouri, and Colorado. The organization is friendly to Mr. Blaine, of course, in so far as his ideas on reciprocity agree with those of the organization. But this is no side show for any individual. When we formed the organization in Kansas it was intended simply as a State society, and its founders had no idea that it would extend beyond the limits of the State; but the attractive name, Knights of Reciprocity, together with the treaty of Brazil recently made, and the prospects of further treaties with other South American nations, has given the organization a national boom. The leaders in the movement in Kansas are mostly Republicans. They are advanced thinkers, and such, you know, belong chiefly to the Republican party. But a member of any party who is in favor of reciprocity, and is not an absolute free trader, is eligible. There is nothing in our rules or by-laws requiring political action."

SECRET SOCIETIES IN POLITICS.

It is not an encouraging sign of the times to witness secret and semi-secret societies springing up in all parts of the country with the avowed object of controlling, so far as possible, political issues. The latest accession to these societies is known as the "Knights of Reciprocity," a social-political organization which is working in opposition to the Farmers' Alliance in some of the Western States. This new society had its birth in Kansas shortly after the great political triumph of the farmers at the polls. Like most mushroom movements, its growth has been phenomenally rapid. Its principles are practically the same as those of the Farmers' Alliance, with special prominence given to the advocacy of commercial reciprocity between all friendly nations and between all classes in this nation.

The multiplication of political and semi-political societies is not in itself necessarily an evil. It is the incorporation of secrecy as the basis of many of these societies that bodes evil for the institutions of the Republic. Speaking generally, it may truthfully be said that political societies of the secret kind are a menace to the free institutions of the country. It is amazing that in this day of enlightenment those who profess to be political reformers, such as the agriculturists, should pattern after the medieval societies of political plotters in their methods. The glory of real republicanism is the freedom of political discussion and the powerlessness of secret rings or cabals to influence the will of the people.

American cities have long been cursed by rings of political plotters whose methods shun the daylight. Naturally the people look to the voters of the agricultural districts to set an example of wholesomeness in their political methods. It is a disappointment to find the agriculturists themselves adopting the methods of Tammany Hall in their modern crusade for reform.—Chicago Daily News.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT C. A. BLANCHARD BEFORE THE STUDENTS OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY.

Gentlemen of the Massasoit Club:—I am grateful for the compliment implied in your invitation. You have not invited me to affirm the undisputed, nor to exchange unmeaning congratulations over battles won by men who are dead and gone. In our age we have many descendants of those who built tombs to the prophets and stoned those who were sent to them. We do not lack for men to glorify Washington but we sadly need men of his exalted patriotism. Politicians who quarrel at the tax-payers' expense, in order to secure some partisan advantage, are always willing to glorify the Puritans. If they should meet one they would break a whisky-bottle over his head and damn him for a "Sunday-school politician."

If I am correctly informed, your purpose is not to exalt a sect or a party, but to secure for yourselves and guarantee to others fair play in the friendly and honorable competitions of college life. In order to this end you antagonize secret associations, and I am invited to discuss before you the fraternity question.

This is a live topic. We live in an age of lodges. There are secret societies ostensibly to promote faith in God, hope of immortality and charity toward all mankind. There are others to extend the domain of friendship, love and truth. There are others to foster patriotism, and a few years since there were many to advance the rebellion. The friends of the liquor trade have their organizations, and certain temperance people have lodges to antagonize the traffic in strong drink. We find a swarm of orders, all of them with some little secrecy, to secure relief for families of members in case of death; and just now our farmers are being parcelled out among various lodges, and are to be taxed certain small sums for the guidance and direction which they receive from the Grand lodges, assemblies, or what not, of these orders.

Of course a movement so world wide could not omit our colleges and universities. In these schools are being trained the leaders of thought for the hundred years to come. As the schools are, so the future must be, and hence the same spirit which divides communities into clans and cliques, finds its way into our centers of learning and seeks to fit men there for the lodge work to be done thereafter. Members of the same institution,—yes, of the same class, are to be divided into little mutually-excluding circles. Each one is to be pledged to conceal certain things from others and to aid and forward its own members' interests.

You of the Massasoits do not believe this fraternity movement among students to be consistent with the highest interests of the university. You believe that open organizations are better adapted to the purposes designed, so far as they are legitimate; and knowing me to sympathize with you in this opinion, you have requested me to give some reasons for our common faith. This it is a pleasure for me to do; and while I cannot promise that the discussion shall be satisfactory to you, or those differing in judgment who may be with us, I do declare that truth shall be the objective point throughout our talk this evening, and that if we wander it shall be after an honest attempt to find the right road.

And 1st. It has always seemed strange to me that students in a free land should desire secret organizations. It is easy to see why burglars, operating together, should have words or signs by which they might recognize one another at a distance, or in the dark. It can be understood why counterfeiters or illicit whisky distillers should provide against detection by officers of the law. If a firm should engage in adulteration of foods or drinks, it is plain that they should not wish their practices to come to the public knowledge. If assassins should plan the removal of an adversary traitors, or the overthrow of a government, it is easy to see that they would wish for secrecy, first as a means of success and afterward as a protection from the vengeance of law or the contempt of their fellows. One who loves liberty does not find it difficult to understand why the students in Russian universities, as their minds expand and the beauties of liberty become apparent, should unite in those secret societies which have been the death of so many noble spirits in the prisons, on the scaffold and in the mines.

But here in America, where men who are law-abiding are almost as free as air; where speech is free, the press untrammeled, religion unconstrained; where an honest man can walk from ocean to ocean, or from lakes to gulf with no one to say, What doest thou? Where every noble act is applauded and every base act condemned, —in such a land as this, what need is there for secret societies? And if some men of weak minds, and barbaric tastes, are caught by the sonorous titles and regalias, of lodges, why should students, men devoted to a free search for truth, men who seek for all the light of the past, and struggle to gain yet other truths from regions now shadowed in darkness,—what need have such men for grips, signs, pass-words, rituals, and obligations to secrecy? Is it not a marvel that so much as one scholarly man, can endure for so long as one day, the childish, unmeaning and foolish babble of a lodge?

2d. Passing the fact that such organizations are needless; that all their alleged objects can be secured by free and open methods, observe in the second place that, at their very best, secret societies must weaken college men. Assume for the moment that the element of secrecy covers nothing of actual evil. Suppose that initiations are mere pleasantries, that the obligations are harmless, that the banquets do not degenerate into debauches, that in the attempt to forward the interests of members, no base means are used, still it would remain true that such societies most weaken the men who compose them.

The law of competition is: "Let every man have a fair chance; let him contend on equal terms and let the best man win." If only we can be sure that these terms are fulfilled, there is inspiration in victory and honor in defeat. But the rule in secret societies is: "Stand by one man and put him in whether he be deserving or otherwise." If this be not true, what advantage is there in membership? If after the man has paid his money, passed his initiation and entered on his secret society life, he is compelled to compete for his place and earn the support of his society or do without it, he might as well be a barbarian so far as honors are concerned. But if his lodge can make a deal with the other lodges, which shall insure the election of a man from each, how soon is greatness thrust upon those who would never in the ordinary conflicts of school life attain it.

We are often told that the members of certain orders are noted for ability, and the proof offered is the fact that they have taken certain honors which should indicate large native talent or great industry. The trouble with this test is that one of the first principles of secretism is, to secure by some means, offices and honors for brothers irrespective of qualification. Instances are so numerous as to be fairly embarrassing; perhaps as cogent a one as any, is to be found in case of the mayor of our neighbor city. If the office were itself an end; if the post or the pay were an object to be desired without reference to the means by which they are secured, the case would be different. But the fact is, that men are injured by the possibility of obtaining the prominence which they desire, without the integrity and labor which only should secure them. If the son who wrote to his father, a chronic office-seeker, "Pap, come down here right off, mighty mean men get office down here;" if this young man wrote the truth, then you may be sure that the race of mighty mean men in that region was to be perpetuated. Many men, ambitious of seeming worthy and great, will, in a measure at least, become so, if this be the only path to the end desired.

But on the other hand, if such men can secure the support of a faction by initiation fees, dues and secret obligations, and if this faction can "lay pipes," "pull wires," and "log roll" with other factions for the advancement of other men seeking promotion, by similar means, the result is an injury to all concerned. Instead of patience, industry, frankness, endurance, he is led to cultivate the sly, plotting, scheming, underhanded ways of the politician. The result, if the fraternities succeed, is injustice to the faithful student, who openly contends for honors, and injury to those who gain by craft the rewards belonging to merit alone.

It may appear that I assert the invariable inferiority of fraternity men. I do not so do, but affirm the tendency of the system, which is, I think, invariable and injurious. It also should be said that it must be occasion of regret to the really able and worthy men, who sometimes reach distinguished positions through the fraternities that the mere fact of their lodge membership must always raise the question, whether they are elected because of their ability and excellence or because they belong to some brotherhood which seeks to promote its members, whether deserving or not.

But aside from the fact that secret societies are needless and naturally diminish effort, the only source of excellence, it is also true that such orders are the natural instruments of evil doers. When I asked Wendell Phillips his opinion of secret orders, he quietly said: "Secret societies are needful for no good purpose, and may be used for any bad one." Let us attend to the latter proposition for a little time. Is it true that secrecy is the natural agent of evil doers? If men planning any violation of law were to come to this city, would they naturally form a secret combination to carry it forward?

Begin and end where you please. Take burglars, counterfeiters, pickpockets, prostitutes, gamblers, sneakthieves,—would persons, desiring to prosecute any of these callings, operate with secret obligations, signs and tokens, or without them? And on the other hand, how would merchants, ministers, lawyers, physicians, wage-workers, architects, contractors, artists, bridge-builders or other honorable toilers among men, carry on their occupations? Understand me, I do not say that fraternity men are actuated by base motives in forming their lodge alliances. I do not believe that they usually are. Curiosity, love of titles, a desire to know something that some one else does not know, desire for promotion coupled with doubt about securing it in open competition,—these are probably the worst motives consciously present in the minds of most young men, when they apply for membership in a secret order.

The fact, however, remains that secret combination is the instinct of lawlessness, as openness is the instinct of honor. It follows that though the motives leading to fraternity life are childish rather than dangerous, the order, when it is formed, becomes the natural instrument of those of its members who need such an arrangement. Take the champagne suppers which have been the starting points in the downward careers of so many educated men; the hazings, which have resulted sometimes in sport of a low, coarse kind, sometimes in idiocy, sometimes in death; or those immoralities which all honorable college men so deeply regret, of which they so seldom speak,—consider all these in their relation to fraternity life, and he is a bold man who will affirm that open, literary societies would probably have wrought the same havoc among the same men.

The tendency to evil in the human heart is sufficiently strong without the suggestion that if one enter on iniquitous courses, there are companions pledged to conceal his downward steps. Many a man who will walk aright if subjected to the restraints of publicity, will go down like lead in the waters if he be removed from that place in which God has put him, to the chapter-house of some fraternity, where the seductions of evil are re-inforced by the hope of concealment and the pretence of social or literary improvement.

A young man from an institution where fraternities abound, was recently asked what advantage was secured by them. He replied: "Why, the president of our last year's class could not have graduated but for his fraternity. When he came back from the city drunk, one of his society would always take charge of him, get him home and see that he didn't get out until he was sober." This suggests a number of questions; e. g.: Was he a drunkard before he joined the fraternity? If not, did he become one because of that relation? Was he elected president of his class because he was a Greek? Did aiding him to remain class president lessen the probability of his continuing a drunkard, until death should end in tragedy what should have closed in triumph?

But once more. Secret societies do not cultivate, so far as they are secret, the nobler faculties of man. Piety toward God and good will toward our fellows, are the two tables of the law. Piety includes reverence, loyalty to duty, teachableness, a habit of looking after the lofty and enduring. Good will toward man carries with it as part and parcel of itself, a tender sympathy, a steadfast fidelity to one's friends, to one's word, a justice that can praise an adversary who does well, or condemn one's friend or oneself who does ill. These are the qualities that make those noble men, lowly yet lofty, who become powers working for righteousness, embassadors from the heavenly kingdom to this revolted province in the empire of God, the Abrahams, Elijahs, the Samuels, the Pauls, the Savonarolas, the Luthers, the Cromwells, the Lincolns, the Sumners of history.

Now, does initiation into a lodge; the servile submission symbolized in bandaged eyes; the resting of fraternity not on character, but on membership in a secret order; the expressed or implied obligation to sustain brothers, however worthless, and to antagonize others, however excellent; the pretence of some valuable mysteries, which so generally covers what is outrageous blasphemy or puerile folly,—do any or all of these tend to develop the nobler qualities in man? Are slyness, secretiveness, cunning, the elements out of which manly characters are builded? If not, the whole lodge system is at the very best a stupendous mistake. That which elevates man improves the world: that which renders him dependent, vain, proud, selfish, unjust, irreverent, is evil, only evil, and that continually. It may be gilded with specious names and bedecked with sophistical tinsel, but it is evil. It may profess charity while excluding all the unfortunate; it may boast of fraternity while denying the brotherhood of man; it may talk of honor while plotting in secret for unfair personal advantage, but it is a poor fraud and will work out evil for all concerned; most evil for those who use it and think themselves smart, when the fact is, that they are only mean.

Poisons are generated in sewers; sunshine and air are essential to moral, as well as to physical health. Vegetables growing in cellars are puny, watery, weak. Bring the same plants out into the day and how marvelous the change! Leaves take on their deep green, stems are strengthened, and fruit is born. Is it not so with all the nobler qualities of man? Are they not born of the day? Can any man affirm that piety, reverence, honor, integrity, industry, benevolence, or any other excellence of character, are promoted by membership in a secret society?

Another objection to the fraternities is, that they increase temptations to disorder. This is included in the proposition, that such organizations naturally lend themselves to evil. But I speak now not of the trangressions of law; I have in mind the many petty departures from the line of right action, which, while in themselves trifling, in their tendencies are most important. The ten thousand barbarisms, which were formerly considered part and parcel of student life, how did they come to be? And how did it come about that young men,—who personally would neither lie, nor steal, nor be brutal—so frequently would in their collective capacity be all these together?

Is it recorded that any open college society ever plotted the mutilation of college property, the unhinging of gates, the overturning of sidewalks, the stealing of private property, or removing it so as to inconvenience the owner? Is it true that the tendency to such "fooling" is increased by the principle of secret combination? Is it not true that many a man has taken part in some such enterprises because the boys of his secret society had planned them, who would never have been able even to laugh at them but for his fraternity drill?

It may seem that such things are too trifling for serious mention. The trouble is, that while they are trifles to their authors, they are not trifles to their victims or to the college authorities. Consider, for example, the vandalism of those young men who recently daubed with red paint the John Harvard Bronze, and the many cases of like kind, which come to the memory of college men. Strike out the principle of secret organization, and would not such vandalisms come to a sudden pause?

But still further, those two beautiful traits of character, honor and generosity, are endangered by the fraternity system. I put the question to you, gentlemen, Is it easy to say: "Well done?" Is it easy to applaud a good play by the adverse nine on the ball field? Is it easy to applaud a beautiful or forceful piece of writing, when it is from the representative of the other society in contest? Is it not much more agreeble to cheer our man, when he does a noble deed, than to cheer the other fellows' man, when he does the same thing? And is not this streak of meanness so hateful to us, that we long to be rid of it with our whole hearts? It is native to man to boast of his own and to depreciate that which belongs to others. This dishonorable, ungenerous feeling haunts us to the very house of God, and, unless we conquer it, transforms us into sectarians. It follows us to the ballot box, and transforms us from patriots into partisans. It perpetuates the unholy alliance between our nation and the saloon. It justifies the infamies of our Indian policy, and makes our elections a race for a purse.

Now, as already intimated, this principle is part of our fallen nature. Party spirit in religion or politics, is an evil spirit, which taints everything which it touches. It is protean in form and would deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. In the fraternity system, this baleful spirit seems to have undisputed control. "All the fraternity men are better than any of the non-fraternity men." "Everybody that amounts to anything, joins the Greeks." "Men that do not favor secret societies are sore-heads; they tried to join and were blackballed." "All the best men belong to our fraternity. All the second best men belong to the other fraternities. All the men, who do not amount to anything, are the Barbarians." Are not these fair specimens of the talk of many men, who have been elected to secret societies, simply because their parents furnish them with money so that they can give "spreads" to their companions from time to time? And does not every man, conversant with the facts, know that such talk is either idiocy, or lying?

But it may be said that this ungenerous, dishonorable, partisan temper is incident to all organizations, and that it is not just to speak of it as a special result of the fraternity system. If it were stated that this evil was the result of lodge organization alone and was found only in connection with it, the answer would be sufficient; but this is not the case. We simply affirm that secret societies seem to develop this sectism to an unusual degree, and that the very attempt to organize a handful of men into a clique, with provisions for secret combinations, would naturally tend to this end. Persons should determine their social relations not by a grip, sign, or pass-word, but by perceived excellence of character or evident need. That is, we should desire to associate with those whom we can help, or with those who can help us. We should praise those who merit praise; not those who praise us, or who belong to our party. We should vote for men who are worthy of our suffrages; not for those who belong to our sect, party, club, or lodge. Open societies may endanger this high standard of manly action; secret societies destroy it.

THE ADDRESS AT EVANSTON.

The invitation of the Massasoit Society of Northwestern University to Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, was responded to by him last week in an address on the college fraternities. The students' paper, the Northwestern World, publishes an abstract of the address, which is prefaced with a brief report of the meeting which seems to have been full of enthusiasm. The World says:

"Pres. Blanchard, escorted by Pres. March, of the Massasoits, entered the hall amid loud applause. Mr. March, with his usual happy humor, thus introduced the speaker of the evening. 'For several weeks the braves of the Massasoits have looked forward to the coming of a great spirit. We have all eagerly anticipated the rich intellectual treat of this evening. Let me introduce to you President Blanchard, of Wheaton College.' At the close of the address Mr. Fraser moved that a vote of thanks be extended to Pres. Blanchard, and that he be elected an honorary member of the Massasoits. A dozen members sprang up in different parts of the hall to second the motion, but Mr. Leach was recognized and it went through with enthusiasm. Pres. Blanchard was extremely sorry that he could not stay to meet the students personally, but family duties compelled his taking the 9:14 train. After three cheers and a tiger for Pres. Blanchard, the boys separated expressing great satisfaction with the address and with new determination to press forward in their fight for fair play and equal rights."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Springtime thoughts—Dr. Gregg in his old pulpit—"Backslid" or "upslid"—A mistake corrected—The N. H. W. C. T. U. all right—Other matters—An important legal decision.

Though the earth has not yet dispensed with her snow shroud, and the raw, chilly winds make the warmth of one's fireside as acceptable as ever, there is a nameless something in the air, a spring feel—call it instinct rather—which makes the heart more light, and the step more buoyant. The inhabitants of countries where there is no spring must miss something besides the mere animal delight which all creation shares, of welcoming her slow footsteps over the hills; and herein I can see a reason why the doctrine of the resurrection has always had its strongest hold on northern races. How carefully Nature buries the seed of all this upspringing, jubilant life in millions of unknown graves, sure that none of them will be forgotten when the voice of the south wind is heard outside their sepulchres. So the endless cycle goes on—death from life, and life from death; and so our world is always young because she is always renewing herself by a process of physical regeneration—dying to the old life that she may live to the new.

"Then goes to sleep in snow wreaths dim,"

Dr. David Gregg was welcomed back to his former place of ministry last Sunday, and preached one of his searching sermons on "The Chaff and the Wheat," from which I cull a few of many pregnant thoughts. "The bread of yesterday is the myriad-hued, many-sided life of to-day. There is no such future for the chaff. It is not food but rubbish. . . . Build into your lives the idea of divine sovereignty, and make yourself an Elijah; make Paul's idea of faith yours—be a Paul; make James' idea of the necessity of good works yours—be a James. Fall in with the idea of John about the importance of love and be a John." There is a spiritual as well as an intellectual sense in which we can make ourselves what we will, which is little thought of and certainly very seldom so clearly and beautifully expressed. Dr. Gregg is reported as saying that "Brooklyn is much more orthodox than Boston." This is not strange as the one is the "City of Churches," and the other was never famous for its orthodoxy anyway. I wonder what the early Puritans would have said if they could have seen all the "isms" that were to trouble their descendants; all the new lights of the liberal school, Channing, Parker and Savage,—ending off with perhaps a peep at the annual convention of Theosophists which is to meet in Boston April 26, at which a learned Hindoo, Swami Bhaskara Nand Sarasuati, by name, is expected to be present as the exponent and apostle of the new "fad." Think of Brahminism being publicly taught in Boston—by a Brahmin, too, right from India! Imagination can no farther go; but I feel sure that if Gov. Endicott could have been visited by such a vision at the time he was haling men and women to prison and slavery for their religious heresies, Cassandra Southwick would have felt herself sweetly avenged.

Here is a good thing from Worcester's Salvation Army paper, the Herald: "How are you getting along? Have you backslid?" inquired the major of the corps of a boy who had been converted at one of their meetings. "No," was the quick reply; "I have upslid if anything." How many of us have "upslid," and stand to-day a little nearer Jesus, and a little farther removed from our old selves than we were yesterday?

Apropos to this, let me say that the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. have not "backslid," as a statement in a recent letter—which I have learned since to be entirely erroneous—might have led the Cynosure readers to infer. No money has been accepted by them even indirectly from Frank Jones, but the $100 in question given to the Mercy Home at Manchester, was the gift of his wife from her own private property. I learn from authentic sources that she is a devoted Christian woman, thoroughly opposed to her husband's business; and though unsuccessful in inducing him to give it up, like Mary of old "she hath done what she could," by giving her money and her influence on the side of the temperance cause. I sincerely regret that this unintentional injustice was done the New Hampshire W. C. T. U., and therefore take proportionate pleasure in stating, as a proof that they have not compromised an iota of their principles, but stand as strong as their own granite hills under the brave leadership of their president, Mrs. Knox, the fact that when the Mercy Home was offered financial aid from a leading hotel keeper—who with curious inconsistency devotes the proceeds of his bar to benevolent causes—his money was promptly refused.

I am glad to see that Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, so well known to our New England workers, has been appointed Superintendent of the Department of Peace and Arbitration, which the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. has recently taken up among its lines of work. None who have heard her pungent, racy talks on "Tobacco and Narcotics" will doubt that they have chosen the right woman for the right place, and one who will waken an interest in this important subject wherever she is given an opportunity to present it.

The bill to forbid the entertainment of members of the Legislature by parties having an axe to grind thereby, has been defeated in the House by a very large majority. To be sure if the bill had passed it would not have prevented a wealthy corporation like the West End from using other ways and means to reach the legislative ear, but it would prevent such a public scandal as the famous Algonquin dinner. Still, if the voters of Massachusetts will send men to represent her who can be best approached through their stomachs, who is to blame? Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage when he was hungry, and his name has gone down through all the centuries with the stigma on it; but a legislator who will sell the public good and his own honor for terrapin and champagne seems to me to be several degrees more contemptible than even poor Esau.

The Supreme Court has granted an injunction restraining the city of Brockton from building a Memorial Hall for the use of the Grand Army, on the ground that said building is not for public purposes. Probably the city contains a more or less number among its property holders of those who are conscientiously opposed to secret societies. This is reason enough why their money should not be appropriated to any such use. The Grand Army has no more right to ask the taxpayers of Brockton to build their Memorial Hall than have the Masons or Odd-fellows; for the fact that they are a secret society puts it in the same line with parochial schools and other institutions which are designed for a certain class and not for the good of the public in general. It is a matter for congratulation that so mischievous a precedent has not been established.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., March 11, 1891.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker has been informed by the Canadian postal authorities that they were in sympathy with our law excluding all matter pertaining to lotteries from the mails, and requesting information as to the legal status of the Louisiana Lottery company, which has established an office at Montreal. It is feared, under the Canadian law, which instead of excluding all lotteries from the mails, as our recently enacted law does, only forbids the use of the mails by illegal and fraudulent lotteries, it will be difficult if not impossible to stop this gambling concern which, to the shame of the State of Louisiana, does business under a charter issued by the legislature of that State. However, our postal officials are confident of succeeding, now that they have been assured of the good will and assistance of the Canadian authorities, in preventing the evasion of the law intended by the Louisiana company in mailing their advertising matter and tickets from Canada.

There is considerable feeling and some quite sharp criticism expressed in religious and temperance circles because one of the local churches has sold a piece of ground to a brewer to be used for brewing purposes. It does not look well, and it seems to me that if the church was compelled to sell this property, which, if my information is correct, it was not, it might have afforded to have accepted a much smaller price from some purchaser who would have put the property to a better use. Such things as this sale do the cause of religion and temperance incalculable harm by furnishing their opponents the basis for argument

CORRESPONDENCE.

IOWA DESPOTISM.

Avalon, Mo.

Editor Cynosure:—I copied the following sentences from a Masonic Grand Lodge Report of old Iowa, to-wit:

"It is true that the rule of the Grand Master is despotic, and that the Grand Mastership is a despotism. It is true that no despot that ever swayed the sceptre of his authority could be more despotic than the Grand Master, but there are circumstances that ameliorate the despotism of the Masonic Grand Master."

"The Grand Master is despotic in the power he possesses. He has no peer,—there is none that has the right to question his rule. Once in his seat, there is no power that can displace him,—there is no tongue that can ask him, What doest thou? There is no arm that can reach him that has the prerogative of doing him harm. And the propriety of this absolute despot is clear."

"The Grand Master looks upon the members of his jurisdiction as a father looks upon his children. Over them he exercises unlimited control. The right is not reserved in the Masonic compact to question his authority, nor to dispute his will."

"Never was there an act contemplated that had in it more of the power of the despot, or the affection of the fondest father. It was an act that plunged the knife of the father into the heart of the child."

"Such a patriarchate as that of the family of Abraham, is the brotherhood of Masonry."

And such is the argument for enforcing Masonic authority and inflicting its barbarous penalties.

But I wish to add another quotation on the Masonic oath:

"Upon the question as to whether a candidate who entertains conscientious scruples about swearing, but is willing to affirm, is thereby stopped from taking the degrees of Masonry; your committee are of opinion that so far as the legal aspect of the matter is concerned, that an affirmation made under the same solemn forms in which an oath is administered, is just as binding on the conscience as an oath, but the decision of the Most Worshipful Grand Master is based upon the ground that our ritual does not permit the substitution of the word affirm for the word 'swear.'"—Texas Masonic Grand Lodge Report for 1879. Also Missouri Report, 1880.

I am revising all my Anti-masonic "Bulletins," hoping to issue them as an "American Handbook and Citizen's Manual" for handy reference and a perpetual campaigner for all patriots and Christians.

DISGUSTED FARMERS.

Hickman, Ill., March 8th, 1891.

The F. M. B. A. lodge seems to be the new "fad" here and now in the lodge line. This new lodge "craze," like the measles or other epidemic, has the run, and all who are not guarding themselves against it are more or less liable to catch the fever. This new lodge phase is not allowed to spread among any but farmers; other professions or trades are "quarantined" or barred from entering it.

The common farmers, as a class, are not adepts in keeping lodge secrets. In fact, they can't keep, as a rule, the secrets of lodgery, but easily "give themselves away." Two of my neighbors were induced to send up their names for membership. One fellow they only got through the first degree. They hoodwinked and pinched him so that he told them in his honest, farmer-like simplicity that was all he wanted of that lodge. He said he was hoodwinked and tied so that he could not see or defend himself, or perhaps he would have knocked some of them over, but he was at their mercy till they put him through the first degree. Being a large and determined man, they saw they had "caught a tartar," and were glad to let him off with that one degree that night. To quiet him, they even gave him his 50 cents back that he had invested for degrees. This man now tells all about the initiation.

Another neighbor who is about 80 years old they put through the three degrees, but he is so disgusted with the whole thing he left them at once. They got 50 cents from him for the three degrees, and he promised them 25 cents more, but he considers himself so completely gulled and swindled that he refused to pay the balance of the money on the trick. He is gray-headed, and told me how they tricked him by tying and hoodwinking, punching him and leading him over blocks, etc. They wanted to know if he could sit on some hackle teeth which they pointed out to him (they raised his hoodwink long enough for him to see the teeth). He told them he thought he could, but as he was brave enough to answer in that style, they let him off. I presume they were teeth made of rubber that looked savage, but to sit on would be harmless.

For exposing them the lodge expelled him Here is a copy of the expulsion which the man pulled out of his pocket and allowed me to copy. He had just received it through the mail. This is a literal copy:

"Goodwine, Ill., Feb. 23, '91.

Mr. Isaac Van Dorn,

Sir: You Have been Elpelled from the f m b a Lodg No. 5091, at the last meeting.

Yours Resp.

(Signed by Secretary)..... .....Sec."

So you see men will try to learn lodgery before they learn to properly capitalize or spell. They often meet until away in the night, and then away after midnight pull for their homes in the country, to stir up all the dogs on their way home, and wake up the family long before day to have their wives open their doors to let them in. These lodges can't last long, but some of the members will have gotten enough of lodgery to be easily roped into the Masons, O. F. or K. P.'s.

J. S. Hickman.

WHERE DO THE PASTORS LEAD?

Dear Editor:—Through the kindness of a dear friend I am in receipt of a copy of the Christian Cynosure.

These secret societies, our little and large towns swarm with them, and that they are detrimental to the interest and advancement of the church, few will deny. For we cannot help but notice, that if members attend the meetings and pay all levied dues or taxes, their time is taken, and their pocket-books lightened.

It has also been my observation, that the meetings of secret orders, their arrangements, etc., are the one important requirement, and after them comes the church. I say it with sorrow, yet it is nevertheless true, that not only a large percentage of our church members, but ministers' names, appear upon the rolls of these houses with barred doors: and as ministers are looked upon by their various churches as patterns suitable to follow, until they lead the way out of assemblies with locked doors, we cannot in justice to our profession expect, or even ask, our members to forsake a pet lodge.

I would further contend (yet in all charity), that our ministry are (or ought to be) men called of God—out of the world, lights set upon a hill;" who, having "put on Christ," should be able to say with the great Apostle, "For I am determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." I pray God for such a ministry, hoping and trusting the prayer may be answered to his name's honor and glory; and that the time may speedily come when we, as preachers, may think more of Christ and less of ourselves. Yours as a sinner saved by grace,

H. Berkley, (Pastor Baptist Church.)

STATE ENDORSEMENT OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—The Senate of the Indiana Legislature on the 7th of March passed a bill to this effect: That it should be unlawful for any person to wear a badge of any secret society of which he was not a member.

Thus we have by that honored body a most emphatic endorsement of the secret clans, be they Clan-na-Gaels, Molly Maguires or Knights of the Bloody Nine. Hereafter let no Ronaynes or Stoddards venture into the State of Indiana and attempt to lecture against any secrect society displaying their paraphernalia.

First, we find government appealed to to protect the soldiers from imposition by persons not members of their organizations wearing their badges. Government grants them legal protection by enacting that it shall be unlawful for any person not a member of the society of the Grand Army of the Republic to wear its badge or insignia. The country at large has so much respect and sympathy for the soldier that to this they made no objections; for all felt that the honor, interest and whatever might be agreeable to the feelings of the soldier was allied to the interest of all. But now every citizen of the State of Indiana is called upon by its honorable senators, met to make laws to guide and govern us all, to render legal homage to every secret clan and society. We are startled in direct fear for our personal liberty, lest in some manner of ignorance we, admiring some gaudy button or jeweled ornament, or even some kid glove, or even boot top, that bears the badge and insignia of some secret lodge or clan, a mark that to the uninitiated has no meaning beyond ornamental use, but to learned knowing ones is an insignia of membership, may be condemned by this law, and be subject to the very unpleasant experience of a fine or imprisonment for such temerity.

Verily, the world moves. The societies find it inconvenient or themselves incompetent to protect themselves from any and everybody using the signs and emblems. Their secrets are so well known they cannot tell who belong or who do not belong to their lodge; and so they are compelled to lay under contribution the State authorities to help them to keep their orders from infringement. This is but the onward march to the fulfillment of that Scripture which says no man may buy or sell unless he has the mark of the beast or the number of his name; that is, his badge, or sign of his secret society.

An Indianian.

PITH AND POINT.

THE ST. LOUIS SERMON POPULAR.

I wish this address was printed in attractive form for popular circulation, so it could be distributed broadcast over the land. It seems to me Dr. Carradine presents the subject in such a way that most people would read it and feel the force of the reasoning, two very important points in its favor.—F. A. Armstrong, Kinney's Corners, N. Y.

DR. CARRADINE IN NEW ORLEANS.

Please send all of Dr. Carradine's sermon, which I think will prove to be one of the best productions on the secrecy question. Dr. Carradine was pastor of the Carondelet St. M. E. church, South, here for several years, and was very popular. He was at the head and front of the opposition to the infamous Louisiana State Lottery. —C. W. Sterry, New Orleans.

THE. ST. LOUIS SERMON FOR GENERAL CIRCULATION.

Let me make the suggestion that you publish in pamphlet form the sermon of Rev. Carradine, of St. Louis, for general circulation. For point and power of appeal to the heart it is almost unequalled. I could use a goodly number of them with effect, I think. I am sending Cook's address to the leaders in our high schools and to many of the clergymen; and shall soon need a new supply. The Cynosure and N. C. A. publications are doing more for reforms to-day, than any other agency in the United States. God bless the fearless corps of men engaged in it. My health is poor, and I am led to believe I shall change to a more congenial clime soon. "To me to live is Christ, to die is gain." To those only, to whom it is Christ to live, to them it is gain to die.—Nathan Callender, Montdale, Pa.

PERSEVERENCE GIVES SUCCESS.

I intend trying again this winter and spring to do some work for the Cynosure. The lodge is so thoroughly entrenched that it is very hard work to do anything here. I know the Lord is able to take care of his cause, and I know he works by instruments.—J. Cochrane, Spiceland, Ind.

ANOTHER MASON FOLLOWS THE POLE STAR.

Some one was kind enough to send me your paper. I did not like it at first, but it kept on coming and I kept on reading it, until I am almost a thorough convert. Now I want it another year. I get in it a class of reading that I get nowhere else. I am a Mason, but I have not attended lodge for five years, and its likely now I never will again.—(Rev.) A. H. D.

A REFORMER FROM HIS YOUTH.

I am in the 81st year of my age, and have been from my boyhood days anti-slavery; opposed to secret oath-bound societies from the days of Morgan's abduction, when nearly all Masonic lodges of New England were closed up; and a temperance man, both in regard to alcoholic liquors and tobacco. But I have been so sorely tried in relation to the cause of temperance. In my judgment that cause has been injured by its friends. The first was by taking it into secret societies where I and many others could not go, so that neutralized our influence; and then making a separate political party of it, and that party abusing those that did not agree with them. For that reason, in my opinion, several States have failed to have prohibition that might have had it. —Geo. W. Little, Farmington, Ill.

FROM AN EARNEST WOMAN.

We are taking other religious papers, but I would sooner part with any one than the dear old Cynosure. It exposes the secret lodges, which any sane person will admit are cursing our land. I saw an account some time ago of the death of Mr. Levi Tapley. He was of my county,—Lamar, Ala. The Masons claimed that he was killed and hid in the swamp. That was like a great many other statements of theirs,—false. The "great Grand" Master of this lodge is a member of the church, but never attends meeting, nor any religious services. My husband at first was a Royal Arch Mason, but he did not attend regularly, and now he never goes at all, and never will go into another lodge, knowing how evil they are. I never had any use for the secret lodges. God grant that every house in the land may be visited weekly by the Christian Cynosure. For one I shall use all my influence.—M. A. Hopson, Ellisville, Miss.

PROHIBITION IN THE NATIONAL CONSTITUTION.

I received a copy of the Cynosure and read it with interest, and send you an article on a most important subject. Is its position right and true? No man denies it or can. Then what? Certainly the great anti-liquor cause must be moved on to that bedrock. It has now but a feeble national basis. We concede that the Constitution is on the liquor side, and have petitioned nearly twenty years for an amendment in vain. If, then, the business is legitimate, Congress has no right to stop it, and the National Government is bound to protect it. Its whole mighty power and influence are surrendered, and hope is feeble. But why so blind? That whole power is ours if we will take it, and leave liquor naked as crime. The Prohibition party then will have a mighty national issue as we had on slavery, which will soon carry the conviction, patriotism and ballots of the people. Will you not aid?—A. Willey.

FOREVER OPPOSED.

I would like to say to all readers of the Cynosure, and to all the world besides, that I am decidedly opposed to all secret societies, especially Freemasonry. Sooner let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth and my right arm fall from my shoulder than take their blood-curdling oaths and slavish obligations upon me.—A. Walston, Williston, Vt.

LITERATURE.

The Education and Evangelization of the Masses is the subject of a paper read before the Methodist ministers of Minneapolis, Minn., by Rev. O. F. Burgess. Its value to the general public is in its independent and courageous rebuke of the worldly churches, and vindication of true Christian principles of humility and self-denial for the kingdom of heaven's sake. "The great work of the devil now is deception. In the role of an angel of light he is deceiving the very elect. The real piety of a church cannot be ascertained from the footings of its membership list, neither can the followers of our rejected Lord be numbered from a sectarian 'Year Book.' Apparent growth is a very different thing from real growth of the members of His body." The introduction by the publisher says very truly: "The time has come for radical talk and radical action. A stop must be put to the growing evil of churches seeking men for pastors who draw alone because of their intellectual and elocutionary abilities, but who in their characters and private habits are far from Christ-like. Then, as to officering the churches, more heed should be given to the Scriptural injunction to appoint 'men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom.'" It is published at the office of the "Illustrator," Minneapolis. Price 10 cents.

In the March number of the Bible Standard (Syracuse, N. Y.,) Rev. H. W. Johnston, the representative of the Wesleyan churches in Africa, writes more clearly and reasonable on the subject of the African fever and its relation to the mission work than we have ever seen elsewhere. He shows that a true faith in God will not be rash or presumptive, but may be exercised as really with the use of remedies that long experience has shown to be excellent, as without any. It seems to be as much a law of nature that African fever will kill a white man, as that fire will burn him. If one goes too near fire he does not expect ordinarily to be miraculously saved from its effect; nor should he expect any more a miracle to be wrought in respect to this disease. Bro. Johnston is now returning to his African work.

Sunday at Home, Leisure Hour, Boy's Own Paper, and Girl's Own Paper are the monthly magazines issued by the London Religious Tract Society, for which the F. H. Revell Co. of New York and Chicago are the sole agents in this country. All contain continued stories of religious or moral character, generally portraying scenes of English life and manners, and are fully and in some respects finely illustrated. In Sunday at Home the Sabbath is discussed from several standpoints, under "A Christian Festival," the various texts of the New Testament are brought to bear upon the obligations for solemnizing the Sabbath, while "A Family Delight" is a reply to the question, "From what must I Abstain?" "What must I Do?" While "Travancore and Christian Missions" tells of woman's place in the country of that name. A sketch from real life is "Neil M'Ara-Crofter," descriptive of peasant life in the interior of Scotland, the illustrations speaking volumes for the unrequited toil of these people. In Leisure Hour "Architecture and Pottery in Palestine" is discussed by Mr. Petrie, and Mr. Shrubsole. F. G. S. presents an able paper on "Microscopic Life." "The Life of De Quincy" is briefly told, while the lovers of figures will examine "The cost of a London Fog." "Yankee Dodges" is an excellent description of what Englishmen see in the mechanical ingenuity of Americans. The writer speaks as calmly of "Chicago Avalanches" as if they were as plenty on our level streets as on the sides of the Jungfrau. In "Girl's Own Paper those who love the Bible will pause over "The Difference between Bible Reading and Bible Study." "How to Furnish a Drawing Room" will be of service to those who are lovers of tidyness as well as economy, and the sedate will find topics for reflection in "Some Types of Girlhood." The younger should heed the advice given in "School girl Troubles, and How to Cope with Them."

In these times less than ten in a hundred of the novels written by women are ever printed, according to a publisher, who added: "We send back every month to authoresses piles of manuscript of novels that have been mailed to us. In looking over a catalogue of recent publications I notice that women are now giving us very many books that are not novels. Here among them in this catalogue are works of erudition and research, works in history and biography, in the physical sciences and the fine arts, in speculation and pure letters. Let us rejoice over these promises of the intellectual development of our race."

A movement is on foot to erect a simple memorial of some sort in honor of Miss Sewell, the author of "Black Beauty," in order that her work in behalf of the horse may not be speedily forgotten. Its author did not enjoy the fame the book won for her as she died soon after it appeared. Its success has been rapid and surprising. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in Boston and other cities, have used it as a missionary tract, distributing free copies of it among cabmen, truck drivers and others, and it has been adopted as a supplementary book of reading in the Boston grammar schools.

The report that the venerable poet John Greenleaf Whittier has finally decided to write no more, has been confirmed. His literary career will be closed by two pieces of verse (now in the hands of editors), oné of the poems being a sort of farewell to his friends and admirers. It is said that every year his publishers look to a sale of between fifty and sixty thousand volumes of his poems, and that they are never disappointed.

Last year:
Her eyes were rheumy, and weak and red,
Her breath—you could smell it afar,
She had ringing and dizziness oft in her head,
An the cause of it all was catarrh.

Take AYER'S Sarsaparilla and no other as a Spring Medicine during March, April, May.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

is the Superior Medicine. It gives tone to the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, and Bowels, quickens the Appetite, and imparts to the system a healthful feeling of Strength and Vigor, which cannot be obtained by using any other medicine. AYER'S Sarsaparilla is prepared from the true Honduras sarsaparilla root. It is combined with yellow dock, which is raised expressly for us. All other vegetable tonics and alteratives which enter into this preparation are the best of their kind, and are selected because of their well-known remedial qualities. The results obtained from the use of this medicine when taken for Scrofula, Catarrh, Rheumatism, or for any other disease originating in impure blood are positive, thorough, and lasting. Be sure to ask for AYER'S Sarsaparilla. Insist upon having it. Take only

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, Editor.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, Associate Editor and Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1891.

A long season has passed since the Cynosure has had the pleasure of printing an address from President C. A. Blanchard. His visit to Northwestern University last week gives us an opportunity to publish an address prepared for the non-fraternity students of that institution. It is an argument not only on college fraternities, but on the principle of secrecy in organization, which all our readers will wish to preserve; and funds having been specially contributed for that purpose, the address will be issued in pamphlet form. Copies can be supplied from this office for five cents each; ten for 40 cts.; thirty for $1.00.

Our Saviour gave both the twelve and the seventy disciples whom he sent out power to cast out devils from people, and the apostles abundantly warn and exhort all Christians to vigilance against unclean spirits to "resist the devil" and he will "flee from us."

Ordinary maniacs, whose brain and nervous system are shattered, and reason dethroned by delirum or fever, have no defence against the assaults of evil spirits; and as Satan is a "liar" and "accuser of the brethren," it commonly happens that people bereft of reason believe the falsehood that their best friends are their worst enemies. And so little instruction is given from the pulpit that Christians do not pray for the casting out of evil spirits. Nay, it is commonly supposed that none but wicked people are afflicted with demons, whereas the Bible tells us that the devil tempted Christ, "moved" David, and desired to "sift" Peter. In insane asylums it is no uncommon thing for patients who never swore a profane oath, to blaspheme when bereft of reason; and many gentle and mild dispositions have been seized with a desire to kill. Where do such horrible suggestions come from, unless from the devil, who is murderer as well as liar? Our churches need careful Scriptural instruction on this most afflicted class of people, that we may "watch and pray" intelligently, "looking unto Jesus," who is "stronger than the strong man armed," mightier than Satan.

THE SALVATION ARMY MOVEMENT.

We have attended some of its meetings; are reading its text-book, "Darkest England;" and are giving it our serious thought. Christ's followers took no military titles; wore no uniform or badges; used no drums or French horns to attract the crowd; and they needed none. Persecution gave them notoriety. Miracles established their claim of divine authority. Novelty riveted attention; and the Holy Spirit gave them the joy of salvation.

Things are now changed. Churches are popular now, and worldly people join them. Sects are formed and their competition disgusts sinners, and piety makes men prosperous, and the rich are hated by the poor. The ancient Israelites, by divine direction, used methods not unlike the idolaters of the surrounding nations. Regalia, parades, music and badges are used by the idolaters of to-day; and as Paul "became all things to all men that by all means he might save some," perhaps the parades and street music of the Salvationists may be allowable.

But as to the book "Darkest England," it is one of the most extraordinary productions we ever read. And if the "Army" had done nothing but circulate that volume, it has paid its cost. It gives the gage and dimensions of human misery as few other books do, and that in one of the leading nations of Christendom; and so puts the human mind on the pathway of Christ, who from the glory and riches of heaven, came to save our race, and took part with the poorest of the poor. No feeling mind can read Gen. Booth's book without an agonizing cry, for the salvation of our race, to God for whom nothing is "too hard," and with whom "all things are possible." This book concerns the "miserables" of a single nation; and proposes no remedy for the rest. But if it shall give rise to a million such movements, they may begin to make some impression on our globe, which must yet yield to Christ.

THE AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This great society was formed in 1826, by a fusion of local and State societies, the principal one of which was that of Massachusetts, formed ten years before, (1816).

Its monthly organ, the Home Missionary for March, has a most thrilling account of the Slavonic population of the United States, from the regions about the Black Sea. They already number a third of a million; about the same as the Scandinavians, to whom they are inferior, as they come from despotic countries. The Illinois auxiliary of this society, (Dr. Tompkins, Sec'y,) has sent Joseph Cook's address on "Disloyal Secret Oaths" to each of its missionaries. But, though offered without expense, the secretaries, (Clark and Kincaid) of the parent society, decline to send that truly national pamphlet to its 1,700 missionaries; and, as the religious papers shrink from giving the missionaries and their churches the needed information, our Home Missionary churches are kept in ignorance on this all-important subject. Yet the secret lodges of various names outnumber the United States churches three to one!—and the Vermont State Congregational Association lately declared the secret orders the worst obstruction to their church work. Unless a change is speedily effected, the grip of the lodge will fasten on the throat of our Home Missionary churches. The secretaries, Clark and Kincaid, are the more inexcusable, as Dr. Morehouse has furnished the eight hundred Baptist Home Missionaries with Mr. Cook's pamphlet, and the same has been done by Dr. Strieby for the five hundred missionaries of the American Missionary Association; and also to the teachers in Utah of the New West Commission by Secretary Bliss.

The contributions to the Illinois Auxiliary of the American Home Missionary Society, are from four to six thousand dollars a month; and the parent society receives and disburses over half a million annually. We hope the secretaries of this society will reconsider and recede from their non-commitalism on a question so fundamental to the life of their churches. Meantime, we exhort all our readers, who have access to it, to read the March number of the Home Missionary, and pray and give to the Illinois work, which testifies against the lodge.

In 1832 the American Home Missionary Society reported the number of total abstainers from liquor in the congregations aided as 53,746. At that time the cause of total abstinence was struggling in the home churches, and its recognition far from universal. But all were willing Home Mission churches should abstain from intoxicating drinks. How much more should this mother society of Home Mission churches encourage total abstinence from the organized deism of the lodge! The Bohemians, Poles and Slovaks not only need protection from their terrible enemy, the saloon, but also from Satan's substitutes for the churches of Christ, "the unfruitful works of darkness" which lead men "out of the way of understanding to abide in the congregation of the dead." (Prov. 21: 16.)

SWEDENBORGIAN MORMONISM.

We have lately received an offer, through the mail, of Emanuel Swedenborg's works free, without price except postage. These offers have been made to us once in a while for the last fifty years, ever since we entered the ministry. The books are given to clergymen,—no others. We purchased Swedenborg's volume on "Conjugal Love" at the Swedenborgian book store, No. 20, Cooper Union, New York city, to be sure of a genuine edition; and have published the proof from its pages that the books thus impudently offered to clergymen ought to be suppressed by Anthony Comstock as impure literature. But the power that sustains the harem literature of Mohammedanism keeps these foul prints in circulation, and they are offered free to clergymen to debauch their consciences and, through them, the churches of Christ.

Swedenborg was born 1688, some six centuries after Christianity broke up the worship of the northern heathen deities. In 1523, Gustavus Vasa became king of Sweden, and broke the power of the Romish priests. After years of struggle, Scandinavia became Lutheran, and Swedenborg was the son of a Lutheran State Bishop. He was educated at Upsal, knighted, and became a nobleman and drew a salary from the State till he died at 84 years of age.

He wrote and published incessantly as a civilian and philosopher, and these are some of his earlier teachings. "He held that matter is not resolvable into mole-atoms occupying space, but into points of dynamic force." (Johnson's Cyclopedia.) The article is written by Parsons, LL. D., an admirer of Swedenborg. His multifarious philosophy is thus founded on "points of force," invisible, intangible, and unknowable: a region where one thing can be asserted as well as another. And if evil has affected superior natures to ours, Satan can make such revelations as he chooses to minds wandering beyond human ken. And this seems to have happened to Swedenborg.

In the year 1745, he was 57 years old, accustomed to sumptuous fare and wine. In that year, he tells us that "he was called to a new and holy office by the Lord himself, who manifested himself to him in person, and opened his sight to a view of the spiritual world, and granted him the privilege of conversing with spirits and angels."

Now Christ said "there shall be false Christs." And Paul says "Satan transforms himself into an angel of light." And we have only to suppose that Swedenborg's "swimming fancies" proceeded from foul spirits to account for what follows in this article. His volume, "Delights and Wisdom of Conjugal Love," published by the General Conference of the New Jerusalem in the United States, at its publishing house, No. 20, Cooper Union, New York, says on page 32: "Chiefly the love of sex remains with those who come into heaven." . . . "Consequently there are marriages in the heavens." This contradicts the words of Christ: "Those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage." Luke 20:35.

On page 333, he writes: "The fornicatory love which precedes marriage is not meant; nor that which follows after the death of a consort; nor concubinage which is engaged in from legitimate, just, and sufficient causes."(!) This contradicts the Bible: "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."

Again, on page 367: "Concubinage, when it is engaged in from legitimate, just, and truly sufficient causes is not unlawful;" and on p. 369: "The vitiated states of mind which are just causes of separation from the bed, and from the house, are mania, frenzy, raving, actual foolishness and idiocy, loss of memory, and other like things. That these are just causes of concubinage, because they are just causes of separation, reason sees without a judge." And this strange mortal, who certainly seems demoniac, had already provided for his wedding parties in heaven, on page 10th of the same volume, thus: "When the repast was ended, the Patriarchs retired, and then were introduced sports and dances of virgins and young men." Nothing in Mormonism or Mohammedanism exceeds, if it equals, this. And if this is not "obscene literature," what is?

There is also Swedenborg necromancy. Marteville died. His widow asked Swedenborg to ask her dead husband for a certain important paper. He said he had seen Marteville and told him about the paper; and the result was the woman got the paper. So in Gottenburg in 1759, July 19th, Swedenborg told a company that a fire had broken out in Stockholm which was 300 miles away, and was spreading rapidly. He described its progress, and at eight o'clock that evening told them that the fire was extinguished.

Now since the Fox girls' rappings at Hydeville, Wayne Co., N. Y., these seeming supernaturalisms have steadily increased, and after forty years' discussion, they are so dexteriously managed that the public mind is unsettled on the question, What produces the phenomena? One scouts the idea that there is anything supernatural in them. Newnham attributes them to human magnetism; Mahan to the Odyle force of Von Reichenbach; others to the cunning of Mormons and the scoundrelism of priests. All the while, if there are any devils in them, they lie hid; while every earmark and shouldermark of Satanic influence is seen on these movements. However diverse, their moral nature is one. They weaken or destory belief in the supernaturalism of the Bible. For, do not the magicians do like wonders? Baalam at Baal Peor turned the host of Israel into a free love circle. These modern circles do the same. And their moon-struck marvels take the mind nowhere, and land it upon nothing.

Swedenborgianism began with its founder 200 years ago. It has had money, intelligence, and position in society. In all this time it has not produced a single New Testament revival or converted a soul to Christ; nor formed a temperance society; nor spoken as a church against slavery; or sent a missionary to the heathen. And while what they have not done is manifest, the teachings of their founder quoted in this article prove that the spirits with which their founder conversed were "unclean spirits," and identify the movement with all the systems of mysticism and enchantment from Baalam to Joseph Smith.

THE MAFIA MASSACRE.

The great trial of the murderers of Chief of Police Hennessy in New Orleans had an abortive ending last Friday. Nine Silicians were on trial. The jury acquitted six of them, and could not agree respecting the other three.

The verdict was received with popular indignation. A mass meeting was called to meet at the Clay statue at 10 A. M. next morning "to take steps to remedy the failure of justice" in the case. The call closed, "Come prepared for action,"—a word full of significance in the home of the White League, where failure of argument has often enough been supplied by the ready revolver.

The meeting was brief. It was addressed by two or three prominent men, but the crowd was almost too impatient to hear them through. The march to the prison began. Entrance was refused at the main door, but a side door was broken down, the mob rushed in, and the work of slaughter began. Nineteen Italians were in the city jail charged with complicity in the crime. Eleven of them were shot down, and two who had a little breath left in them were hung to tree and lamp-post. Their thirst for blood satisfied, the crowd dispersed, and the next day was quiet; and the popular sentiment, expressed in various ways, endorsed the massacre.

But the world outside looks on with horror at this shooting down of unarmed and uncondemned men. The Italians, through their representatives, appealed to their King at Rome, and Secretary Blaine addressed a letter to the Governor of Louisiana. Their excitement receives much sympathy from the foreign press; and no one who remembers the secret society uprising and murders of the White League in 1874, which was suppressed by the quick hand of Sheridan, but was vindicated by another powerful secret society—the Grand Commandery of the Knight Templar Freemasons of the United States—will view this outbreak in other than its true light.

Various opinions are given by individuals who are supposed to know the history of the whole affair. By some Hennessy is represented as at the head of a club with headquarters among the harlots of the city, and his murder was caused by rivals in politics and in the detective business, among whom there had been several assassinations. Most of the Italians claim there is no Mafia; that the society was suppressed in 1874. Others believe it to exist among the 12,000 Italians in New Orleans. Two or three years ago it was in good working condition in Chicago and several of its members were hung for a lodge execution which they had managed in their own horrible fashion.

Hennessy was murdered Oct. 13, 1890, while going from his office to his home about 11 o'clock at night. The Italians were immediately suspected and nineteen of them were arrested. For convenience only nine were put on trial, and one of these at least the court regarded as innocent. It is said that the Mafia had never been molested until Hennessy came into office. No chief of police dared arouse its vindictive spirit. The records show, according to the city clerk, that twenty-five murders have been committed by this secret society, and in no single case did the assassin pay the penalty of the law. Witnesses feared to testify; jurors dared not give a fatal verdict, and the police were powerless. The gleam of the stiletto flashed terror before all eyes. Major Manning, the city clerk, says that a man was once struck down in a public street in open day with a crowd of spectators near. The assassin gave the sign of the Mafia and not a man could be found to testify against him.

Thus reads another chapter in the history of secret societies in America.

—The Christian Conservator publishes Dr. Carradine's sermon in full, we presume from the revision made by Dr. C. especially for the Cynosure, though it is not so stated. This discourse is agreed by all to be one of the most remarkable of the year.

—Bartholomew Woodlock, Roman Bishop of Ardagh and Clonmacnois, Ireland, was preaching last week at Athlone. A Dublin dispatch said he exhorted his hearers to shun secret societies, as an immediate attempt was being made to entangle young men in the renewal of plottings which have been the curse of Ireland.

—A sophomorical Junior oration at the University of Missouri the other day, contained this statement: "Not long since Chicago was deluged with blood. Red-handed anarchists rose from every quarter, plundered buildings, and struck down sworn officers at their posts." We imagine the young man had been reading Ignatius Donnelly or Prof. Buchanan, until his head was turned. But the saloons and lodges of every large city are preparing us for just such deluges of blood and plundering of anarchists.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold of the River Mission, writes us last from Manchester, Ohio. Papers for distribution can be sent him at New Richmond, O. His pamphlet, "Stories of the Gods," yet has a wide circulation. A Methodist pastor at Buena Vista, O., lately wrote him after reading a copy: "I have been very much delighted by reading 'The Stories of the Gods.' I consider your argument most clear and satisfactory to an unprejudiced mind. Allow me to thank you for the benefit received from reading it; also for the Cynosure. I am well pleased with it."

—The appropriation of $375 for the N. C. A. Southern fund gives a grand impetus to our Southern work. This is from the bequest left by the philanthropist and friend of the colored race, Philo Carpenter, in the hands of his daughters, Mrs. Cheney of this city and Mrs. Hildreth of Los Angeles, which was to be used in promoting this reform. This gift enables us to send 300 copies of the Cynosure for a year to pastors of colored churches. We may never know here all the good resulting from this generous seed-sowing. In eternity we shall see it to be glorious.

—The representative of the Northwestern World, the organ of the Massasoit society at Northwestern University, before which Pres. C. A. Blanchard delivered the address which we print this week, visited Oberlin recently and writes with surprise and delight of the fine surroundings of the literary societies of that famous anti-secret institution. "One of the most beautiful buildings on the campus at Oberlin," he writes, "is owned by the ladies' literary societies, and is occupied solely by the halls of the three ladies' societies." And in another note he sets forth the disadvantages of the secret college societies thus:

Student (visiting at Oberlin): "Yes, all these buildings are very fine, but it is these elegant halls for the literary societies that take my eye." Senior (of Oberlin): "Don't your society halls equal these?" Visitor: "Well, hardly. The fact is, they are a disgrace to the institution." Oberlin senior: "But you have fraternities, I believe?" Visitor: "Yes, indeed, we have fraternities. You don't think those two facts have any connection, do you?" Senior (with a significant smile): "We think so here."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. Hawley is now working in Michigan, where he finds a number of readers for the Cynosure.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the N. C. A. college agent, has returned North, and is tarrying with friends at Quincy, Mich. His health was affected by the dampness of the Southern winter, and he returned earlier than he had anticipated.

—Rev. F. J. Davidson, our former agent in New Orleans, now pastor of St. Mathews Baptist church, was unanimously elected secretary of the First District Baptist Association of Louisiana, at its late annual meeting; and was also chosen member of the executive board. He contemplates making an extended tour through Mississippi and Louisiana, speaking in the churches.

—Prof. and Mrs. W. H. Fischer of Wheaton College, are deeply mourning the death of their oldest son, a beautiful, bright boy of some six years. After nearly three weeks' sickness, he died Saturday afternoon last. A large circle of friends sympathize deeply with the bereaved family.

—Rev. Wm. Moerdyke, formerly a member of the N. C. A. Board, and pastor of Dutch Reformed churches at Pella, Iowa, and near Pullman in this city, is now pastor at Muskegon, Michigan. The Christian World of Dayton says he has obtained leave of his classis to organize, out of his charge, an English Reformed church, which will soon be organized with a constituency of at least fifty parishioners.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, district secretary of the National Reform Association, lectured recently in Shenandoah, Iowa, on the "Dangers That Beset the Republic." The Post of that place speaks highly of the address: "As he is a profound thinker and a close observer, he always says something worth listening to and remembering. About two years ago, in a sermon in the M. E. church, this city, he foretold the revolution in politics that is now in progress in the Western States. He is not one of those who cannot see beyond their noses, and more than this, he has the courage of his convictions, and the frankness to express them manfully. He is no time-server; no political henchman or tool. Believing in free thought, free action, loving liberty and hating slavery, he is one of Christ's freemen whom earthly chains are powerless to bind. Would that we had more such ministers to teach the people the truth."

VOLUMES OF TESTIMONY.

FROM LETTERS RECEIVED FROM SIGNERS OF THE CALL.

Rev. C. M. Youngquist, Loomis, Neb.

I have signed the Call, with great sympathy for the good object of this Association.

Rev. George Baker (Cong'l), Kalama, Washington.

I expect to be in Chicago in May. If the convention is arranged for that month will endeavor to attend it. May God bless your undertaking.

Rev. John A. Landgren, Buxton, N. Dakota.

I was very glad to have the opportunity to sign the within call, and I will do what I can for the good work mentioned therein. I have not received the address delivered at your last conference by Joseph Cook, but I would be very glad to have it.

Rev. John Wenstrand, Keokuk, Iowa.

I am in favor of your Association, and will willingly do what I can for its promotion. In my congregation, as well as in the denomination to which I belong, we have not been bothered with secret societies, because our members have had too much to do with Christ and him crucified. I do not believe very much in a man who binds himself up by secret oaths (and with ungodly people, too) even if he should be a minister. You can not trust such a man; he is full of mischiefs. I can't promise to come to your convention; but I will try.

Campaigning for Sabbath Reform and Sabbath-schools.—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts is starting out on another extensive tour of Sabbath reform meetings, which, so far as yet arranged, are to be as follows: Mar. 15, Jamestown, N. Y.; Mar. 17, New Castle, Pa.; Mar. 22, Centralia, Ill.; Mar. 23, Alton, Ill.; Mar. 29 to Apr. 1 inclusive, St. Joseph, Mo.; Apr. 3, Clarinda, Iowa; Apr. 8, Winterset, Iowa; Apr. 13, Washington, Iowa; Apr. 14, Ainsworth, Iowa; Apr. 17, Albia, Iowa; Apr. 19, Keokuk, Iowa; Apr. 24, Knoxville, Ia; May 1, Cresco, Iowa; May 4, Manchester, Iowa; May 6, Waverly, Iowa; May 10, Marshalltown, Iowa; June 22, etc., Fremont Chautauqua, Neb.; July 21, etc., Monona Assembly, Wis.; Aug. 1, 2, Lakeside Assembly. His postoffice address is, care of Kerr & Barr, 189 LaSalle St., Chicago.

All Reformed Presbyterians who purpose to attend the anti-secret conference soon to be held in Chicago, can be furnished with credentials as delegates by notifying the undersigned. We hope many will find it convenient and see it their duty to attend. By order of Synod. J. S. T. Milligan,

THE HOME.

THE HOME OF THE RUMSELLER.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

I had a dream the other night
When all around was still;
I thought I saw my cottage white
On yonder flowery hill.
I saw the maples in a row
Beside the grassy lane;
I saw the gate still swinging low
Down by the ripening grain.

Between two chestnut trees the swing
Hung as in days of old;
The apple trees were laden deep
With fruit of red and gold.
Oh, happy dream! my feet still slipped
Upon the springing grass,
As in the long, sweet afternoon
The sunny shadows pass.

Once more with wild rush of the swing
My tresses back were blown;
I smelled again the spicy breath
Where the autumn leaves were strewn;
With careless hands I toss them high,
Where the grand old maples stand,
And the soft wind fans my fevered brow,
Like the touch of an angel's hand;

And I forget they all are gone
From that dear childhood's home,—
Some dwell in other lands, and some
Are sleeping in the tomb.
Beneath those maple trees, and down
Beside that grassy lane,
Where the apples lay in piles, I dreamed
I was a child again!

Change comes to all, the years sweep on,
That house is standing still:
I see it oft in fancy now
Upon yon flowery hill.
Oh, Rumseller! that cottage white,
That sin-cursed home of thine,
That pleasant home, that happy home,
That cottage once was mine!

IN THE ORE.

Geoffrey Haynes was a slow, awkward boy when I first knew him. I suspect that he was slow and awkward even as a baby, and when he was hungry only oozed out a few tears silently, and hence starved unnecessarily many a time.

But his brother, James Haynes, never went hungry. Be sure that his shrieks and kicks came pat to the occasion from the day of his birth. He was always a trig, sharp-eyed little fellow, nimble and ready in both body and brain; he was usually at the head of the class, while big Geoffrey, with his heavy, anxious face, kept near the foot.

The lesson, let us say, concerned Rome in the first century. Geoffrey was back in its streets, shouting for Augustus, hating Nero with every drop of his blood; but when a question came about a date he stammered like an idiot, while Jem struck in, fluent and self-possessed, with the half-page which he had crammed on the school-steps five minutes ago.

The teacher, a sharp little machine such as are cast by thousands in the public schools, read bewildered Geoffrey's compositions, which wandered on for a dozen pages. She knew that he had got none of these queer, childish ideas from her nor from his text books; she did not know what he meant, but she did know that both grammar and spelling were atrocious, and marked him below the other boys accordingly. Sometimes Jem seized on one of these rejected essays.

"Here's an idea that's not bad," he would say, patronizingly. "Do you mind if I use it, Geoff?"

He would proceed to hammer it out very thin, to translate it into school vernacular, and to decorate it with gaudy, fine writing, at which Geoffrey shouted with amusement.

"No matter; it will go now," Jem would say. And it did "go."

These essays were highly applauded, and gained Jem the reputation among the boys of being a most eloquent writer.

On the play-ground or at home, Jem played the same role as at school. His capacity for love or friendship might be small, but he knew how to work it to keep it always en evidence. He was ready with caresses, compliments and kind words. His father continually called attention to the alert, courteous boy of whom he was fond and proud. Geoffrey's "wool-gathering" and inefficiency he passed by in silence, because of the lad's natural stupidity. Yet Geoff's feeling for his father and the few people whom he loved were growths in his soul which even death would not kill; whereas, if fate one day had swept Jem away from his home forever he would have lighted upon his feet alert, polite and affectionate, ready to find new loves and friendships in any quarter of the globe.

The mother of the boy was perhaps the only human being who understood him. When the family gathered by the fire evenings Geoffrey was crouched close at her side, and as long as the big, clumsy fellow's hand was on hers they were both content.

James went into the ministry. His religious belief was as useful in his expert handling as his scholarship or his affections. He was a popular pulpit orator, an agreeable pastor and a shrewd organizer of church.

Geoffrey, James told me, had studied law, but after a few years' practice had given it up. "He was too weighty for our little country court," James said. "He would go back to William the Conqueror's day for the law about a stolen pig. He brought battering-rams to bear on grasshoppers. Juries did not understand him; he bored them. His clients fell off, and at last he was compelled to go to farming. He wrote a couple of books, a novel and a volume of essays. But they would not sell; they fell dead."

Yet a few people of Geoffrey's own kind, reading these books, felt their hearts wrenched by a strange power, the tear started from their eyes at some touch of wonderful pathos. They knew that it was the hand of a great leader which was groping for theirs in the darkness of life. A few critics, too, prophesied that the world would some time welcome this unknown genius who had manifested himself in these crude efforts.

But—the books did not sell. Geoffrey published nothing more.

James knew another chapter of his brother's history which he told to any stranger who asked for him with his usual airy epigrammatic sharpness.

"Geoff once fell in love with his usual blundering awkwardness. I remember the day he first met the girl. He declared that she was like a symphony of Beethoven. Perhaps she was. I don't want Beethoven for my breakfast, dinner, supper. She was too fine a strain for my taste. Geoff never managed to make her understand him, somehow; so, after a year or two she married another man. I always fancied, though, that she loved Geoffrey. Poor Geoff! It was once and forever with him."

"She was not the woman whom he did marry, then?"

"Oh dear, no! She was quite a different person. Pretty little girl, and wide awake from head to toe. You see, Geoff was a rich man for that section and Ally was poor—a governess. Her friends hinted that she had mistaken his kindness for love, and was deeply attached to him. Some of them carried this story to Geoff, and declared that her health was giving way. He knew that he had never been more than barely civil to the girl. But they talked of her pale face, her melancholy—consumption in her family. Oh, well! You know Geoff? Good stupid Geoff! He married her. And from the wedding day, Alethia—that is her name, took the reins in hand. She rules the house, the farm and him."

"Has he any children?"

"No; and that is a pity, too, for Geoff is one of those men who would sink his own life in that of his child and live in it again. Short-sighted policy, I think."

About this time a growing discontent with the rule of Eastern Virginia began to be felt in the western counties of that state. The brothers (whom I have here called Haynes) lived in the Valley. Geoffrey was one of the first men in the State to waken to the emergency. He freed his own slaves quietly, disregarding his wife's anger, bought land for them in Ohio and settled them upon it. He then set to work to convince his neighbors that the prosperity of Western Virginia depended upon free labor and free education. He wrote pamphlets, he visited every western county, he lectured, he persuaded, he argued. No man, probably, did so much as he to bring this section into accord with the free States, with which its interests lay.

His wife was unceasing in her efforts to balk him.

"You are mad!" she said to him one day when some friends were dining with them. "You have succeeded in establishing public schools, and what will be the result? We shall be ruled by the poor whites! As for yourself, you will be outlawed by the society of the county. You have disgraced me."

Geoffrey, clumsy and slow of speech as always, flushed painfully. "I never meant to hurt you," he said, "but this thing seems right to me. I must do it."

James, who was present, laughed. "Another good purblind Luther! 'Hier steh ich! Ich kann nicht anders.' Well, my dear boy, I have not a word to say except that you are making a fatal mistake. These abstract ideas of freedom and universal education are dreams. Virginia, as she is, is a glorious reality, and I owe my allegiance to her!"

James' little speech was vehemently applauded, while Geoffrey was regarded by his neighbors each day after that with darker suspicions.

The outbreak of the war suddenly brought this long smoldering heat into flame. Men converted by Geoffrey's quiet arguments took up arms to keep the western part of Virginia in the Union. His words and ideas were repeated in caucuses, at the head of regiments, in councils for the formation of a new and free State; but nobody took time to give credit for them to Geoffrey.

His brother James was at first a violent Secessionist; but after Fremont was actually placed in command of the Mountain Department (which included the county in which he lived) and James felt that the day was lost, he suddenly became a devout adherent of the Union. He was one of the members of the convention to organize a new government. His speeches were able and shrewd; he took a zealous part in choosing a name for the State, and, I think, has often held a seat in her legislature.

In the histories written of West Virginia, James (under his real name) is handed down to posterity as one of her heroic deliverers from ignorance and slavery.

Alethia was one of the most conspicuous women in the new capital. She wore her much-beaded, beplumed costumes with a semi-regal air, and talked of "our new State" as if it were a loaf of bread which she had just made with her own hands.

Some one expressed his surprise to her that Geoffrey, the first instigator of the movement, had no part in the official work of the government. Her handsome features betrayed a polite amazement.

"Ah! You think Mr. Haynes assisted in this great work? On the contrary. He has not attended a caucus nor has he made a single speech. There will be a mass meeting to celebrate our victory to-morrow, to which he was invited; but he is too busy looking after his crops." There was a curl of scorn on her lips as she turned away.

"A very superior woman," said James, who stood near. "Geoffrey is a heavy weight for her to drag through life. That fellow has no more ambition than a log. He had a chance in this upheaval to make himself a place and fame; but he stays on the plantation to look after his Negroes."

"There is great suffering among them, I hear," remarked a by-stander.

"Yes," said James, carelessly. "Two thousand refugees are quartered near him; they are in a starving condition, and typhoid has broken out in camp."

Nobody was surprised to hear that Geoffrey had taken command of this camp of idle, hungry, sick and dying Negroes. His quiet, sluggish manner, his kindness and good-humored love of fun always gave him power over their race. For a month he fed, controlled, nursed and doctored them, making flying visits occasionally to his home, where his old mother was. There was still the same absolute sympathy between them. "Geoff does not need to speak," his mother said. "I always know what he is thinking."

Now, there lived near the camp an old man who, before the war, had been known to be a trader who raised slaves for the Georgian market. In consequence he had been put under the ban by the white planters and was abhorred by the Negroes. In the camp now were several of his quondam slaves, a rough gang, to whom he had been brutally cruel. They plotted to go to the old man's house, to rob, and if necessary murder him.

A warning of their plans was brought to Geoffrey at midnight. Without waiting a moment to summon aid, he rode to the old man's house in time to meet the foremost of the gang making his entrance. There was a brief skirmish, the ruffians were put to flight, and the old man's life was saved; but Geoffrey Haynes received a wound which in a few hours proved mortal.

His wife and brother arrived after he died. Alethia was loud in her lamentations. James was really moved, for he loved his brother, according, that is, to his capacity for love. He looked upon the large figure lying in the coffin, and the features which had grown emphatic and noble in death, and the moisture gathered in his eyes.

"A queer, dear fellow," he said, as he turned away. "It was just like him, that, being an Abolitionist, he should die defending a slave-breeder from his slaves. Geoffrey had a certain strength, but he always missed his aim. Here is his life ended, and who knows what he has done?"

His old mother sat by the coffin, holding her dead boy's hand. She looked up at James. "God knows; and his life is not ended," she said, simply. "It is just begun—just begun"—and she stooped and kissed the dumb lips with a smile.—Selected.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

Edward Payson's memory is fragrant and strong. An exchange says:

"When I was in Portland, having an hour to spend, I sought out the sexton of the old church where Edward Payson preached, and said to him:

"'Where is the house in which Mr. Payson died?'

"'There are the remains of it,' he replied, pointing to a house partly torn down.

"'Is it true,' I asked, 'that they found the boards in the floor beside his bed worn by his knees where he had prayed?'

"The old sexton said, 'It is true.'

"Morning and evening the man of God prayed there, so long that the very boards felt the impress of his knees. When Payson lived, and when Payson died, he shook the State of Maine, and he shook New England. There was no man in all New England that had the power over men that he had."—Selected.

The Record of Christian Work, of this city, does not fear to speak faithfully of the explorer Stanley of his remissness while in Chicago: "Stanley was greeted by immense audiences in Chicago, but he disipated much of the glamour that has gathered about his name by accepting an invitation to a public banquet on Sunday evening, and by devoting the day to riding about the city. He did brave things in finding Livingstone and exploring Africa, but a cowardly thing in openly desecrating the Sabbath on his first appearance in Chicago. We feel like saying to Henry M. Stanley: 'Shame on you! You were brave and heroic in exploring Africa, and you led us to believe that you had found your strength in God, whom you trusted, but when you come to the Christian land that took you from poverty, and educated and equipped you for your great work, you had not courage enough to regard the Lord's Day. Shame on you for your moral cowardice.'"

Baring-Gould, in his "Legends of the Patriarchs," says, "The custom of saying 'God bless you!' when a person sneezes, dates from Jacob. The Rabbis say that before this time men sneezed once and that was the end of them—the shock slew them; but the patriarch, by his intercession, obtained a relaxation of this law, subject to the condition that in all nations a sneeze should be consecrated by a sacred aspiration."

It is never worth while to make rents in a garment for the sake of mending them, nor to create doubts in order to show how cleverly we can quiet them.—Spurgeon.

TEMPERANCE.

A TRUE SCOT.

At the last Burns anniversary in Philadelphia Rev. Alexander Allison was invited to speak. His declination is memorable in the history of the temperance reform. Let all our pastors catch its spirit and emulate its moral courage in dealing with all popular evils. Dr. Allison wrote:

I thank you most heartily for the honor you would confer upon me in permitting me to express myself on the occasion of the 132d anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns upon the inspiring theme, "Scotland." But I am exceedingly sorry that I am under the necessity of sending you a negative answer.

How gladly I would be with you and enjoy your annual dinner, but I regret that the presence of liquor on the table, as you state in your letter, shuts me out. Nor will you consider me narrow or cross-grained, I am sure, when I have taken the liberty of giving you, somewhat in detail or at length, my reason.

In this case it is not so much any antagonism to the liquor in itself, although my feelings in that direction are very strong; it is mainly because of the injury which liquor did to our national poet that I cannot "add insult to injury" by recognizing its presence in connection with the observance of his natal day.

When I remember that alcohol so completely enslaved the grandest genius of our native land as to expose him during that awful night to the damp and chilly air, in which he slept off his debauch in the snow drift, and which brought on his last and fatal illness, how can I consider with patience the presence of his greatest enemy upon an occasion when we meet to honor the poet's memory? What would the American people say if the admirers of our martyred President should convene from time to time and give a conspicuous place on the banqueting table to the revolver by which he was leveled to the dust? How much more loudly would our land protest if the contents of the weapon were to find a lodgment in every guest? There would soon be an end to such reunions. Nor is the difference in the results so very great. In many instances the same result is reached.

Who shall say that the instrument of Burn's destruction does not kill more, year by year, than that which brought to an untimely grave the body of Abraham Lincoln?

I think I might safely aver that the difference in the results is mainly a difference of time. But to proceed. When I bring to mind the fact that alcohol cut down in the strength of early manhood a mind whose superior, as a poet, the world has not seen, and thereby deprived his countrymen of numberless volumes of poetry and song upon their library shelves, which, even more than that he has bequeathed to us, would have immortalized not only this child of the muse himself, but the land and its sons and daughters of whom he sung, I cannot but enlist myself in the army of those who shall wage a perpetual warfare against the "gillstoup."

Oh, alcohol, alcohol! thou mighty fiend! Thy victims are legion, and thy sway is all but universal!

As a minister of Christ not only, but as a loyal Scot and an admirer of Robert Burns, through whose country of Ayrshire it was my privilege to carefully travel a year ago last summer, I must forever decline to join my countrymen in toasting his memory or that of our splendid country in the "flowing bowl."

I cannot do it! I will not do it!

I must not, I cannot, I will not forget its ravages in dear old Caledonia.

I was more than ever impressed in this direction when I was abroad a year ago. It is, indeed, "Auld Scotia's Bane." My hatred to whisky increases as my age advances.

The liquor traffic, in my opinion, is very much like Pat's wife, "all worse together."

Fourteen years ago, if you will pardon the personal allusion, I was asked to respond to a similar sentiment in an important city in Illinois. I declined for the same reason that I now most respectfully express my inability to accept your cordial invitation. The committee reconsidered; they decided to banish the liquor. Subsequently they expressed themselves as more than gratified with the result.

I accepted the invitation to address the assembly. Three years in succession I enjoyed the same great privilege.

The interest in the anniversary increased in that city. Native-born Americans claimed a share in the celebration upon the plea that Robert Burns was the poet not only of Scotland, but humanity. The 25th day of January became a noted date in that community, and the Burns anniversary the event of the season, with the elite of the town in attendance. So much for the banishment of liquor. Why should the American people have the opportunity of saying, as is frequently said, "Scotchmen cannot get together to celebrate anything in connection with their native land without the presence of whisky?"

Pardon me if I have seemed to express myself in the language of dictation. Such was not my intention. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." I am satisfied, however, that the larger portion of the real admirers of the Scottish poet will, when they give the matter serious thought, much prefer the absence of that which, to say the least, is dangerous in its use as well as fatal in its abuse.

It was Sir Walter Scott, when he was 50 years of age, who said—and Sir Walter as a youth was well familiar with the bacchanalian customs of his countrymen—"Lockhart, my man! depend upon it, of all vices, drinking is the most incompatible with greatness."

Who shall say then that Burns, had he been then alive, had not endorsed the sentiments of this later genius?

It is reasonable to suppose that Burns, had he been with us to-day, possessed as he was with such an intellect, had as gravely frowned upon, as he then indulged, the drinking customs of the times.

May I take the liberty of saying, in conclusion, let us, as Scotchmen, do honor to the memory of our gifted fellow-countryman by standing together against the encroachments of that terrible evil which, by its dreadful instrumentality, caused the death of Robert Burns at 37 years of age, and compels the civilized world to declare regarding him, and that with tearful eye, "His sun went down while it was yet day."

I shall be pleased that this letter be read at your "dinner" on Monday evening, and read as my reason for absence. I am desirous that my reasons should be fully known. With highest sentiments of regard and esteem, I remain, your

"Brither Scot."

SEVEN OUT OF TEN.

Rev. Samuel Hook, who preached a short time ago under the auspices of the Glasgow Abstainers' Union, said he understood that not less than 1,000 souls were lost every week through drink to the nation. As a guardian of the poor, he spoke from experience when he said that seven out of ten who filled the workhouses were there through drink. Referring to the "submerged tenth" and General Booth's scheme, he remarked that, admirable and good as that was, the drink traffic, if allowed to remain as it is, will manufacture more ruined lives than the scheme can possibly be the means of saving.

Ever since Emperor William's accession to the throne of Germany he has persistently demanded some restriction of the liquor traffic. For three years his Ministers have been collecting statistics and evidence concerning its effects; the decisions arrived at have been embodied in a bill that has been sanctioned by the Bundesrath. It decrees the withdrawal of saloon licenses, the fining of saloon-keepers who encourage drunkards to buy liquor, fines for drunkards if they are poor enough to have fines deter them from drinking, and imprisonment if they are rich enough not to feel the fine.—Union Signal.

The good people of Los Angeles are so pleased with the results of Sunday closing of saloons, there is a demand now to shut them up seven days in the week. A little closing is good, but a wholesale movement would be better.—Pacific Ensign.

against the great principles underlying religion and temperance.

But what can we expect when in the society columns of our daily newspapers we find the insidious liquor fiend dressed in such a fascinating mask as this, which is substantially as it appeared in two papers, that combined probably reach the family circle of four-fifths of the people residing in Washington: "At the first course were served oranges, hollowed out and filled with punch, which was taken through straws, two of which, tied with narrow pink ribbons, lay on one side of the cut-glass dish." What sort of an entertainment, think you, that this quotation was extracted from a description of? One given by a lady, who specially prides herself upon being highly cultured and educated. It was a luncheon given in honor of the daughter of a journalist of national reputation, and the guests, with one exception, were young girls. Just so long as society encourages and endorses the habitual use of intoxicating liquors at its entertainments the crop of male and female drunkards will continue to increase. It is but the certain outcome of the great natural law of cause and effect.

Rev. Edward Payson Hammond has begun a series of revival meetings here, which already give promise of being very successful. A notable feature is the children's meetings, which are held in the afternoon.

The Y. M. C. A. has leased a park, which it is fitting up for outdoor athletics, and it anticipates that it will be the means of largely increasing its membership. Many of our most prominent business men are taking a great interest in the matter and will use their influence to get their employes who are not already members to go into the Association; and there is no doubt that the pleasures of the park will induce many young men to join who now get their recreation in places that lack the moral and religious atmosphere of this organization.

The liquor dealers have employed the best legal talent in order to get a more favorable construction put upon the new law prohibiting the sale of liquor within one mile of the Soldiers' Home, but the temperance people are also on the alert to see that the law is properly enforced. *

STUDENTS IN MISSION WORK.

Until the close of the seminary year 1889 the four seminaries located in and around Chicago—the Methodist at Evanston, the Baptist at Morgan Park, the Congregational at Union Park and the Presbyterian on the North Side—were practically dead letters, so far as the evangelizing of this great city is concerned. In fact, it had come to a point where the seminary student was regarded as the least factor in the work. This lack of effort, however, had perhaps sufficient reasons. But the students in the McCormick Seminary determined to overcome difficulties and force their services on the public.

An organization was effected, and active work was commenced at the opening of the seminary year 1889–90. Committees were appointed to canvass the students to see who would work; to canvass the field to see where work could be done, and to engage speakers, fresh from the field, to enlist more effectually the interests of the students. The work developed with surprising rapidity. Instead of finding the students cold and indifferent, as might have been expected, they were found to be eager to do what they could. The consequence was that before the close of the year seventy-two of the one hundred and fifty then in the seminary were regularly engaged in city mission work. Their labor, of course, was gratuitous. They did not strike for the most promising quarters or the middle classes, but down they went into the most destitute and needy places of the city, where no Gospel light had ever shown. They covered all phases of Christian work, from preaching the Gospel under the most favorable circumstances to putting an arm of love around the dirtiest waif that could be found, and trying to teach him how to lead a better life.

As the investigations went on, of course, the need loomed up more and more, and there was a desire to have more men thus engaged. The committee reached out, therefore, to the sister seminaries above mentioned, to interest them. The time was set and a hearing obtained. A delegation from McCormick visited each of the other seminaries and presented the need as they, the students of the McCormick, had found them in their own private investigations.

They responded to the call. They were willing to do anything they could to advance the cause of Christ of help their fellow-men. This was late in the seminary term, so little was done by them save to form an organization and make ready for the coming year.

In the reports made by the seminaries a while since in the chapel of McCormick Seminary, Mr. Pruen, of the Methodist Seminary, stated that, being inspired toward the close of last year by a committee from McCormick, they organized in their seminary a "city board of missions," appointed the necessary committees, and set about the work of doing something for the need of the lower classes of the city. Though they had a distance of some miles to overcome, they did not allow that to daunt them, but like true men they put their shoulder to the wheel. The work grew in their hands till, at the opening of the present year, they had thirty-five men at work in the city at their own expense. They have since enlisted thirty more students, making sixty-five of their number, one hundred and eighty-nine, engaged in city mission work. It is proper to say also that they have some forty or more engaged in regular ministerial work, making at least one hundred and five actively engaged.

Mr. Brown, of the Congregational Seminary, reported the existence of an organization on city mission work. The visit of the committee of McCormick students served as a stimulus to a movement already begun. Their work has consisted chiefly in assistant pastoral work. Out of one hundred and eighty students now in the seminary there are one hundred at work. They spend half a day and one evening of the week in the city doing what they can find to do.

A full report of the work doing by the Baptist Seminary was not obtained, but it is understood that they have now sixteen men in the field, and have secured $100 to pay the expenses of their work.

McCormick reports one hundred and twenty men out of one hundred and seventy-four engaged in city mission work. As a result of their labors they have been able to turn over to the Presbytery of Chicago a church of some twenty members, well organized and ready to take up the work of evangelization for itself.—Exchange.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. W. T. Moffett has accepted the call of the College Springs, Iowa, United Presbyterian church, whose pulpit was so long and ably filled by the late Dr. Wm. Johnston.

—Rev. Dr. T. H. Hanna, of Monmouth, Ill., delivers the annual address at the closing exercises of Xenia, O., Theological Seminary on the 24 inst.

—The New York Presbytery lately discussed the question of the establishment of the office of deaconess in the Presbyterian church. The discussion was a prolonged one, and a vote on the question resulted 21 in favor of and 28 against the scheme, and 39 to 21 against the ordination of women as deaconesses.

—Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, is said to have bought fifteen acres of ground at Northfield adjoining Mr. Moody's seminary, on which he purposes to erect a cottage for his own use, and a House of Rest for missionaries who have come home to recuperate.

—In the new Japanese Parliament there are twelve professed Christian members, and the Christian churches have added about five thousand communicants in the last year, making a total adult native membership of 28,977. This is the product of twenty-seven missions and twenty-five years' teaching. While in China and India, where the missions have been established for nearly a hundred years, there are more churches and more communicants; in none of the mission fields have the missionaries from Europe and America seen such advancement and such promise as in Japan.

—Joseph Cook, in one of his latest Monday lectures, spoke at length on Prof. Briggs of Union Seminary, and the theories of "Higher Criticism" which he represents. "He invents," says Mr. Cook, "a Protestant purgatory, and denies, in contradiction to the Westminster Confession, that there is a probation in this life." Professor Briggs was further affirmed to hold, counter to the confession of his church, that evil habits are conquered after death. In inspiration he believes that there are trivial errors in the Bible, though not such as to affect its infallibility in religious matters, and in prophecy that exact predictions are not to be expected. Mr. Cook quoted regarding Prof. Briggs the recent utterance of one of the foremost theologians of the country, viz.: "His scholarship is crude, and he has no thorough training in systematic theology. He is a good Hebrew scholar, but is scattering firebrands and death in the communities which he reaches."

—Rev. Levi White of Plymouth, Ill., began meetings at Dallas City, Feb. 2, and continued them about two weeks. There were more than thirty conversions, and twenty-two united with the church.

—The ten days' meeting held in Marietta, O., by B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, was greatly successful. No auditorium was large enough to hold the crowds, many coming in by rail and steamer from the surrounding country. Many of the stores and schools were closed during the hours of service. The work has reached students, business men and all classes.

—A revival meeting at Hiawatha, Kansas, under Rev. Alex. Patterson of Chicago, is said to be the most marked of any ever experienced in that section. Some 1,500 people were present at the service March 1, and over a hundred rose for prayers. The whole city is being moved.

—At Garden City, Kansas, daily meetings have been kept up without flagging for nearly three months. All the churches joined. The meetings were carried on by the pastors until near the close, when Evangelist Veazie assisted them. About 150 were converted, young children and old men of seventy.

—A Presbyterian Theological Seminary is to be established at Omaha, Neb. It will commence work in the fall.

—It is stated that in forty-eight dioceses of the Episcopal church, including 3,627 churches, 2,861 have free pews, the expenses being provided for by voluntary offerings. The Sunday-School Times anticipates the time when selling or renting pews will be classed in church history with raising money by lotteries and buying rum with church funds for ordination services.

—Lum Foon, formerly a member of the Methodist Mission church, San Francisco, gave up a good business and returned to China to do missionary work at his own charges. He has built a mission property in foreign style of architecture, with preaching hall and schools. The building is one story higher than any other in the town, and commands a view of the surrounding towns and villages, and the "Jesus House" is the talk of the country. Lum Foon preaches the Gospel and teaches school, having about thirty pupils under his care.

—Rev. J. D. Snyder, of Waterloo, Ind., has been laboring in a very successful revival meeting with the United Brethren church of Sharpsbury, Pa. Over 120 conversions are reported as the glorious result.

—Among the encouraging reports from the United Presbyterian churches are those from the First church, Monmouth, Dr. T. H. Hanna, of 28 members at the late communion; of 24 to the Second church of the same city, Dr. W. T. Campbell, pastor; and of 35 to the First church of San Francisco of which Dr. M. M. Gibson is pastor. The young men of Dr. Gibson's church and also of the Second church, Rev. T. P. Stewart, pastor, hold street meetings every Sabbath.

—In the Sunday-school of the Clarendon Baptist church, in Boston, whose pastor is Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, is a class of one hundred native Chinese. They support three of their own countrymen as preachers in their own land.

—From mid-China comes the news of a remarkable revival. Great numbers are brought out of the darkness of heathenism. Rev George Clark has preached to audiences numbering four thousand. Even the intensely cold weather did not prevent the people from coming night after night. Stanly Smith reports two hundred and ten baptized at one time, and as many inquirers.

—A standing slander against the Chinese in the United States has been that they cannot be assimilated to our institutions or to our religion. Let facts disprove the charge. One thousand Chinamen, members of the Congregational church in California and Oregon, have sent two missionaries to their native land, organized a Foreign Missionary Society with $1,000 to start with, and have contributed $2,200 to home missions.

—The Chicago Presbytery adopted by a nearly unanimous vote, the report of a special committee opposing deaconesses in the church. The Presbytery met at the Fourth Presbyterian church, on Superior and Rush streets. Rev. Dr. Wallace acted as moderator. Dr. Patterson, the chairman of the committee, said that after a careful review of the Old and New Testaments and a search of sacred and profane history the committee had been unable to find one instance where the office of deaconness s mentioned, except in Scotland, where the church has provided for an order of deaconesses, but apparently only on the ground of expediency.

—England, Germany, Italy and Portugal, have signed an agreement for the reciprocal protection of missionaries of these four nationalities, who settle in Africa in regions according to their respective States, by the recent treaties. For liberty to exercise their ministry the missionaries must have a passport from the government to which they belong.

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Hood's Sarsaparilla Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad no other preparation ever attained so rapidly nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research has in medical science developed, To Itself with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. WASHINGTON.

Secretary Proctor issued a general order yesterday afternoon authorizing the enlistment in the army of not more than two thousand Indians.

Hon. J. W. Foster, ex-Minister to Spain, and James G. Blaine, Jr., started for Europe last Wednesday. The mission of the former is to Spain to further the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Cuba, through the mother country.

A bill to make Saturday afternoons, from June 15th to September 15th, a half holiday, is pending before the Legislature at Harrisburg.

The Arkansas Senate discussed the House bill leaving it discretionary with juries to inflict the death penalty or life imprisonment in cases of murder in the first degree. The bill was not passed, and so the effort to abolish captital punishment in the State was defeated. The House passed the bill to punish and prohibit prize fighting.

Seaboard for the current week says that Mr. Austin Corbin will establish the finest transatlantic steamship line between this country and Europe by building eight 12,000-ton steel, all-American steamships, capable of attaining a speed of twenty-four knots an hour, to run from Montauk Point, L. I., to Milford Haven, England, in five days.

CHICAGO.

The citizens' committee met at their headquarters last Tuesday and unanimously nominated Elmer Washburn for mayor of Chicago. The Republicans nominated Hempsted Washburne, a lawyer and son of the late Hon. E. B. Washburne. The Democrats are expected to take up Cregier again, and Carter Harrison in that case will be an independent candidate. The Personal Rights League and the liquor interests are rallying to his support.

The first steel vessel ever launched on Lake Michigan was dropped into the water at South Chicago Saturday. It is a fine propeller, 308 feet long.

COUNTRY.

Wednesday, at New York, James A. Simmons was found guilty of aiding in the wrecking of the Sixth National Bank, the specific count of the indictment being the embezzlement of $622,000.

Two hundred and fifty soldiers at Fort Omaha are down with the grip. The hospital is filled with sick men and the matter is becoming serious in the barracks.

Last Wednesday ex-Gov. Palmer, the Democratic candidate, was chosen Senator from Illinois to succeed C. B. Farwell, after a contest of over two months. The Legislature stood: 101 Democrats, 100 Republicans, and 3 members of the secret Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association. Two of the latter finally voted for Palmer, after holding out for the sake of their secret society pledges, at immense expense to the public.

A mob of Polish Hebrews partially destroyed the house and stock of Herman Greenbaum, a cloak-maker of Jamaica, L. I., beat him and his wife, and fatally burned his 4-year-old son with oil of vitrol, Monday, because they heard he was employing non-union work people.

Experiments at the Wisconsin Agricultural Station show that from two to three and one-half tons of sugar per acre can be produced from sugar beets.

Six thousand miners in the four coal pools in the Monongahela Valley resumed work Monday morning at the increased rate of wages conceded by the operators. There is general rejoicing.

A raid upon the moonshiners of south Alabama and northern Florida has just been completed, and resulted in thirty arrests being made and thirty-nine stills captured and destroyed.

The United States corvette Galena and the navy yard tugboat Nina were driven ashore Friday night at Martha's Vineyard. The officers and crews were saved.

Because there is nothing which is harmless, that will make things perfectly clean with so little labor in so short a time; besides, it is economical and makes the work easy.

Do you suppose—that anything could attain such popularity as PEARLINE enjoys, and hold it, without wonderful merit—that people would use it year after year were it harmful to fabric or hands—that the hundreds of imitations are attracted by anything but its wonderful success?

You'll do well to use Pearline—see that your servants use it, and insist that they do not use the imitations which they are often induced to try because of the worthless prize accompanying it, or by the glib and false argument of some peddler.

Remember PEARLINE is never peddled. 135 JAMES PYLE, New York.

CALL

FOR A

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ON THE

SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

We, the undersigned, believe that there is no good which can be accomplished, in times of peace and in a free land, by secret societies which cannot be secured more easily and perfectly by open organization.

We believe that much of the time and money so greatly needed by the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ is wasted in the large and unprofitable expenses of secret orders.

We believe that the union of Christians with men of the world in oath-bound organizations is forbidden by the Word of God and always injurious to the spiritual life of those Christians who enter such societies.

We believe that some oath-bound societies are clearly hostile to the peace and welfare of our country.

We therefore invite all those who sympathize with us in the views above expressed, to meet in "A Conference of Christians," to be held under the auspices of "The National Christian Association," in the city of Chicago ..... to consult and pray respecting the best method of saving men, the churches, and our land from the injurious influence of such societies.

ABOUT SALT.

For weak eyes a wash of weak salt and water will prove of much benefit.

Salt and water, quite strong, and used persistently for a time, will prevent the hair from falling out.

A teaspoonful of salt dissolved in one-half glassful of water is excellent to allay nausea in sick-headaches.

To relieve heart-burn drink a half tumblerful of cold water in which has been dissolved a tablespoonful of salt.

When wiping up the floor before putting the carpet down, sprinkle it over with salt, while damp; this will greatly prevent moths.

For stings or bites from any kind of insect, apply dampened salt, bound tightly over the spot. It will relieve, and usually cure very quickly.

Salt as a tooth-powder is better than almost any other dentifrice. It keeps the teeth very white, the gums hard and rosy, and the breath fresh.

If the throat is very sore, wring a cloth out of cold salt and water, and bind it on the throat tightly, when going to bed; cover it with a dry towel. This is excellent.

For neuralgia, make a small muslin bag, fill it with salt, heat it very hot, and lay it against the aching place. It will prove a great relief, as salt retains the heat a long time.

For troublesome weeds, and for grass in sidewalks, driveways, etc., apply a dressing of coarse salt; this will kill all growth. Be careful not to put it on any thing that should not be destroyed, however.

For catarrh, snuff up considerable salt and water from the hollow of the hand every morning. Salt and water, used as a gargle just before going to bed, strengthens the throat and helps to prevent bronchial troubles; it is also excellent for sore throat.

If ink is spilled on the carpet, throw a quantity of salt on it, which will quickly absorb the ink; take this up, and put on more salt. Keep repeating this, rubbing it well into the ink spot, until the ink is all taken up by the salt; then brush the salt out of the carpet.

For a felon, take common rock salt such as is used for salting down pork, dry it in an oven, then pound it fine and mix with spirits of turpentine, in equal parts. Put it on a linen rag and wrap around the felon. As it dries put on more, and if followed up the felon will be dead in twenty-four hours.

If anything catches fire or something burning makes a disagreeable smell or smoke, throw salt upon it at once. If a bright, clear fire is quickly desired, it may readily be obtained by throwing salt upon the coals; likewise if too much blaze should result from dripping of fat from broiling steak, ham, etc., salt will subdue.—Good Housekeeping.

FARMERS' WIVES.

Too many farmers' wives are wearing out under the strain of mind and body. They say they cannot find time to visit, to read, or to write; but if these same women would re-arrange their plans, instead of letting things go hit-or-miss, they would find time for some recreations.

Each day's work should be arranged the previous evening, and carried out next day as far as circumstances will permit. To be an agreeable life partner the wife should not overtax herself. She should not give up all her former friends, and live only in the atmosphere of home. To be able to do the best for her family and self she needs to mingle with others outside of the home. The wife who rises early and has her hands and mind both taxed needs a short nap daily, and time for reading in the evening. Thus strength will be retained, the body better able to perform the labors, and the mind at ease, thus securing happiness in the home. Real troubles may find their way there, but we should not always be "meeting them half way," and then we shall have reserved strength to bear them more bravely when they do come.

The wife should be ready to go with her husband to dine, or to a picnic now and then, or to spend a social evening out. We should keep ourselves interested in our friends while we work. With pleasant surroundings the life of a farmer's wife need not be the dull, monotonous one which it is thought by so many to be.

Farmers' wives, see to it before it is too late. Learn to enjoy. Take time to admire the view which surrounds you. Enter into the pleasures of social life. Enjoy the luxuries of your home. Look upon employment as the best preventive of worry, and you will look better, live happier, and die better, than some others whom fortune has smiled upon, and the world deems more enviable.—Housekeeper's Weekly.

A Decided Improvment.

A generation or two ago, in the days of homespun clothing, when our forefathers began to save up their old-fashioned clocks for grandchildren to talk about, every spring it was the custom for whole families to take frequent and liberal doses of sulphur and molasses to "purify their blood." Fortunate are the people of to-day that they escape this nauseating mixture, and can take instead that agreeable and efficacious medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. This is a scientific preparation which goes to the right spot, thoroughly purifies the blood, and dispels that "tired feeling," an expression which accurately describes the condition of thousands who will not confess that they are sick, but yet have no enjoyment of food or occupation and just feel real miserable or "dragged out." Hood's Sarsaparilla imparts such strength of mind and body as to make one feel "like a new person."

Coughs and Colds. Those who are suffering from Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc., should try BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, a simple and effective remedy. They contain nothing injurious, and may be used at all times with perfect safety.

The Indian census, which is now made public, shows that the civilized Indians now number 64,871, while in 1880 there were 66,407 of them. All classes of Indians now number 249,373. Within the last twenty years the decrease has been about 25,000.

The last report of the Chicago City railway shows that on its lines the operating expenses a horse-car mile were 21.-985 cents, and a cable-car mile 9.65 cents. The company ran 12,740,480 cable-car miles, and 4,859,200 horse-ear miles. The cost of repairs a car was $71.40. The company lost one in twenty of its horses by death. Against such a record as this the economy of electricity stands out strongly. It is estimated that the operation of electric cars costs about 6 cents a car mile.

A New York dispatch says: "John Thomas came from Wales to America four years ago with his wife Annie and two children. In Salt Lake City he settled, and worked in an iron foundry. He lost his place, it is alleged, because he would not become a Mormon. He started to return to Wales with the wife and children. On the way he became crazed and jumped from the train, being instantly killed. The fatherless family pursued their way. The mother and little ones reached New York, and at a down-town hotel the mother's reason gave way and, smothering a babe in her bosom, was carried raving to a hospital. The children, with $3,000 of their parents' savings, are here in strangers' hands."

With the acquisition of Alaska, some years ago, by the United States, all the western coast of this continent was under republican government, with the exception of a small portion of the Pacific coast touched by British Columbia; and even this, under the freedom of self-government permitted by the British crown, might almost be called a republican territory. The recent revolution in Brazil accomplished for the eastern coast almost identical results. With the exception of the Canadian provinces north of the great lakes the Atlantic coast line of the continent is a succession of republican governments; hence, with the exception of British dominion, and this exception is only partial, the whole western continent is under the political rule of republics.

The Gazette of Los Angeles, Cal., has the following interesting item concerning one of California's exhibits to the Exposition: "The section of the big redwood tree for exhibition at the World's Fair at Chicago is from the largest and most perfect 'big tree' in California, cut for the purpose from the forest in Tulare county. It measures fully ninety-nine feet in circumference at the base. The height of this monster specimen was 312 feet, being 172 feet to the first limb, which limb measured three feet in diameter. The tree is supposed to be nearly 3,000 years old, taking each concentric ring to be one year's growth. It is to be taken from an altitude of 6,325 feet above the sea level, and thirty-three miles from the nearest railroad."

But the most sensational exhibit will be that of the lumbermen. Texas will bring a specimen tree to Chicago to show what sort of timber she has. That is, she will bring a piece of a tree. The tree measures 100 feet to its first limb, and that much of it will be brought to this city in one piece. It will be a pretty big piece, as, after its arrival an arch will be dug through the lower part of it large enough for a stage coach to pass through. The tree itself will not be a greater curiosity than its transportation. It will be floated down the bayous to Galveston, and then brought up the Mississippi and Illinois rivers as far as possible. After being landed it will be brought on trucks across the country to Chicago, as railroad transportation will be out of the question. The lumbermen have promised $100,000 for their own exhibit, in addition to the State appropriation, $10,000 of which will be expended in bringing the Texan tree to the Exposition.

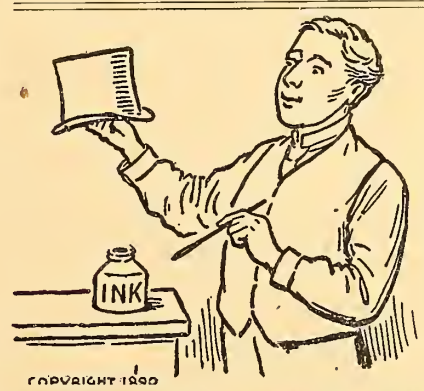
MAKING GLAD THE WASTE (WAIST) PLACES.



"That's what I call making glad the waist places," said Smithson, as he put his arm around a lady's waist. But Lilly won't care much for this show of affection if Smithsou does not get rid of that disagreeable catarrh of his. Won't somebody tell him that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure him.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleausing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases. This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs, "ercams" and strong eanstic solutions with which the public have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is dauger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect aud permanent eures of the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh iu the Head, as thousauds can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and eured as if by magic.

In perfect faith, the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy—the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., offers to pay $500 to any one sufferiug from Chronic Catarrh in the Head whom they cannot cure.

Now, if the conditions were reversed—if they asked you to pay $500 for a positive cure you might hesitate. Here are reputable men, with years of honorable dealiug; thousands of dollars and a great name baek of them and they say—"We can cure you because we've cured thousands like you—if we can't we'll pay you $500 for the knowledge that there's one whom we cau't cure."

They believe in themselves. Isn't it worth a trial? Isn't any trial preferable to eatarrh?

As good as new

—that's the condition of liver, stomach and bowels, when Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have done their work. It's a work that isn't finished when you've stopped taking them, either. It's lasting. They cure, as well as relieve. And it's all done so mildly and gently! There's none of the violence that went with the old-time pill. One tiny, sugar-coated Pellet's a gentle laxative—three to four act as a cathartic. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are prevented, relieved, and cured. As a Liver Pill, they're unequaled. They're purely vegetable, perfectly harmless—the smallest, cheapest, and easiest to take.

EVERITT'S MAN-WEIGHT

HOE, CULTIVATOR PLOW, ETC., SINGLE AND DOUBLE WHEEL.

Will Revolutionize Hand-Power Cultivation—Makes Keeping a Horse an Unnecessary Expense in Many Cases.

This new Invention is a Great Boon to all Cultivators of the Soil, and must be Classed with the Great Inventions of the Age, yet it is so simple that the natural question with every one is, "Why did I not think of that?" And so nicely does it fill a want existing with thousands of gardeners, nurserymen, seedmen, florists, and farmers, that after the first trial they invariably conclude to "never do without it."

All other Garden Tools, Seed Drills, Rollers, etc., can be attached and run with our propeller with many times the power and greater ease than by hand power.

SINGLE WHEEL cultivator, with attachments, price $6.00. W't, 15 lbs.

DOUBLE WHEEL, with attachments, $8.00. W't, 20 lbs.

With every Double Wheel Machine the extra parts are furnished necessary to convert it into the single wheel machine, without extra charge. Thus practically giving the two machines for the price of one.

This best of all hand cultivators to every worker for the Cynosure free as follows:

Two-wheel for 15 new subscribers. ($22.50.) Single-wheel for 12 new subscribers. ($18.00.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

The Galena is a wooden ship of 910 tons, and was being towed to Portsmouth navy yard preparatory to going into commission.

Fire at Syracuse, N. Y., Saturday morning, destroyed the United States hotel, and a number of business houses. The flames skipped four squares and destroyed the Journal building, the Montgomery flats, the Yates block, the Roscoe wholesale fruit and candy house, and a portion of the Candee house. Assistance was sent from Oswego, Auburn and Utica. The total loss is about $1,000,000. In the Montgomery and Yates flats were 300 tenants, and it is thought that one perished in the flames.

FOREIGN.

The Marquis di Rudini, the new Italian Premier, has made overtures to the Vatican, with the view to bringing about an entente cordiale, based on concessions to be made to Catholics.

For some time it has been the opinion of many scientists that beneath the salt beds of Cleveland and Sheshire, England, and also in Ireland, both natural gas and oil would be found. It is reported that in the former district natural gas has been struck and issues in great volumes. This discovery is of great national importance.

At a meeting of the Canadian Cabinet Wednesday it was decided to notify the United States Government that the Dominion Government was ready to negotiate a reciprocity treaty.

The mild weather in Europe has brought a marked decline in the death rate. It is estimated that in London alone the frost, snow and fog carried off 2,860 victims in six weeks.

The British ship Dryad was wrecked off Start Point, England, and her crew of twenty-four men and officers all lost.

Nearly one hundred men lost their lives on the British coast during the blizzard of last week. Railway traffic has been completely demoralized by the heavy snowfall, which is twelve feet deep in some of the Cornwall cuttings.

Some 300 Chinese pirates and robbers were beheaded in Kwantung province during the last few days of the old Chinese year.

An accident by which a number of children lost their lives, occurred at Menzel, in Westphalia. The gables of the synagogue at Menzel long in an unsafe condition, collapsed and buried a number of children in the ruins. So far the bodies of forty of the unfortunate children have been recovered.

Dr. Ludwig Windhorst, Bismarck's old antagonist, the leader of the Catholic party in Prussia, died in Berlin Saturday, after an illness of several days.

Pisaqua was bombarded by vessels under command of the Chilean insurgents and reduced to ruins. For six hours the Esmeralda and Blanco shelled the city, setting fire to the houses and killing men, women and children. It is thought that 2,000 were killed. An equal number took refuge on board the English steamer Remies, and escaped unhurt. At Iquique the government forces, the pick of the Chilean army, were completely defeated by the insurgents.

Montreal was visited by a hurricane which wrecked Pillow & Hersey's new rolling mills and badly damaged the spire of St. Patrick's church and the Grand Trunk depot. Many buildings in course of construction were demolished and the telegraph wires were leveled in all directions.

DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

CONSUMPTION.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

St. Vitus Dance Cured!

SAN ANDREAS, CAL. Co., Cal., Febr. 1889.

My boy, 13 years old, was so affected by it, that he could not go to school for 2 years. Two bottles of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic restored his natural health, and he is now attending school again.

MICHAEL O'CONNEL.

Extract From a Letter of the Rev. W. C. Kampmeier, Lowell Wash. Co. O.

After the second dose of the Nerve Tonic which I ordered for my little son upon the advice of Rev. E. Koenig, the spasms disappeared and no symptoms shown since four weeks, although the attacks came from 15 to 20 times each day before—The child was so delicate that it could hardly stand or walk, now it is playing in the yard and has gained 3½ lbs. in weight. Although the Rev. Koenig had expressed but little hope that the Nerve Tonic would help, I thank God, that I followed his advice and shall recommend the remedy to all sufferers.

Our Pamphlet for sufferers of nervous diseases will be sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge from us.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for the past ten years, and is now prepared under his direction by the

The Chicago School Board does not mean to deserve the charge of being irreligious. It is true, when the Bible is mentioned, or prayer is desired in the annual exercises at the closing of the schools, it has a collapse; yet when the priests have a day nobody is more obsequious than this same Board. We read, therefore, that "Good Friday" has been ordered to be celebrated by a school holiday, by this same Bible-kicking Board.

Is this a prophecy? Last Friday the workmen on the new Masonic pagoda in this city, found that it was not fitted to the iron work super-structure. The stone, which was built in sections, and adorned with a pretentious inscription, was taken apart and found to be in a crumbling and unsound condition. It was removed and the contents handed back to the lodgemen who deposited them with so great pomp and parade last November. Let this stone be a fit emblem of the dark power which once boasted of it.

A covert attack on the Sabbath has been made in the Pennsylvania legislature by a bill to "legalize" advertisements in the Sunday papers. This would give all Sabbath-breaking sheets a legal standing and recognition. The United Presbyterian says it might be called, "An act to compel citizens to be patrons of the Sunday newspapers," because the publication of court notices, etc., being made legal in the Sunday paper, lawyers and business men would be compelled to read these sheets or jeopardize their business.

The Mafia massacre in New Orleans has revealed the Italian character, as well as the Southern. Outside Louisiana few are bold enough to vindicate the mob murders of March 21st, though all concede the provocation was great. But the ferocity of the Italian threat of revenge, reported in various quarters, discovers to us that we are harboring a dangerous class of foreigners, and if it be true that the Pope is urging emigration and putting a priest over each company, we cannot be too soon casting about for some protection from such unlikely and troublesome citizens.

The brutal Boston prize fighter, Sullivan, is now in the South, showing himself in low theatres. The Atlanta papers tell of his disgusting sprees, "snorting and bellowing in the rum-shops," and creating disorder in the streets. But this drunken bully and wife-beater is yet a good member of the Order of Elks, which is so select and useful a secret society, that it attracts to its altars well-known Chicago clergymen and even the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois. This choice society must be very like to those Freemasons whose mingling of the respectable and the vile, was so sharply characterized by Judge Whitney.

The Parnell feud in Ireland is having a salutary effect, it is said, in breaking the bonds of priestism. The Roman Catbolic church anthorities have quite uniformly taken part against Parnell, and, wherever his influence is yet dominant, the Home Rulers are changing the attitude of partial respect for a hardly-concealed insolence. The shock to the moral and religious sense of the people, so far as that sense is derived from the teachings of Romanism, is already beyond repair. It should be an opportunity for the neighbor Christian people of England to take advantage of this loosening of the hold upon tradition, and help their perplexed fellows to see Christ and forever cleave to him.

The United States Supreme Court has given another indirect blow at the saloon. Mr. S. W. Kean, the Chicago banker, had some years ago an assistant cashier who stole some $40,000 and ran away. He was brought back from South America and sent to prison. The liability of the bank for some of the bonds taken was disputed and the case went into the courts. The decision has come that, since it was known that the criminal had been speculating in grain and stocks, his employers are responsible. The opinion of the court defines the diligence of bankers and trustees, that they cannot know of their assistants visiting saloons, gambling at cards or on the Board of Trade and escape liability for their thefts. All kinds of business as well as railroading, must at last adopt prohibition as the rule for their employes.

John Wesley, the great founder of Methodism, died one hundred years ago, March 2d. A celebration of this occasion, rather joyful than funereal, was arranged by the Methodist Social Union of this city, and was held on Thursday evening last in the Auditorium. The members of that great denomination in Chicago and vicinity were present by thousands. They listened to the singing of an immense chorus of 500 voices, and everybody joined in a number of Charles Wesley's hymns, that none ever weary of singing. They heard also the addresses of their new college president, Henry Wade Rogers of Northwestern University on Wesley as a man; of their first editor, Dr. James M. Buckley of the New York Christian Advocate, on Wesley as a reformer; and of their well-beloved Bishop H. W. Warren of Denver on the growth and influence of the Methodist denomination. It was a grand meeting, grandly representing a notable character in the Christian church. Dr. Buckley's address was of entrancing interest, though doubtless quite disappointing in its iconoclastic utterances. He declared that Wesley, as a reformer, was a "most melancholy and conspicuous failure;" and made his case clear. He, nevertheless, showed the greatness of Wesley's character with equal clearness. Neither of the speakers were anxious to mingle any bitter taste with the sweetness of the occasion, and so we heard nothing of Wesley's denunciation of slavery as the "sum of all villainies;" or his keen sarcasm on Freemasonry as "an amazing banter on all mankind." If Dr. Buckley had put in a few of these thrusts of Wesley's, there were those present who would have praised the word, as showing that, if Wesley was not himself a reformer, he was not afraid to aid those who were.

THE MOSLEM IN ENGLAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES, RETFORD, ENGLAND.

In one of the busy thoroughfares of Liverpool, facing West Derby road, stands an old-fashioned house, on the outside of which is a large notice-board bearing the inscription: "There is only one God, and Mahomet is his prophet." The interior has been fitted up as a Moslem Institute, and the various apartments are arranged as a library, reading-room, museum, lecture-room, and a chess and draughts-room. At the rear of this building is a plain structure which will accommodate nearly 200 people. On the floor are spread a number of prayer mats, while at one end is a small platform with a reading table on which rests a copy of the Koran.

Friday being the Moslem Sabbath, there are two services held on that day exclusively for the Faithful; but on Sundays there are four services, two of which are a kind of mission services conducted entirely in English and open to the general public. As there is no priesthood in Islam, and all work is done voluntarily, the honor is duly shared by all taking their turn in conducting the service. This practice is founded upon several passages in the Koran, one of which reads:

"Whosoever striveth to promote the true religion, striveth for the advantage of his own soul; for God requireth not aid from any of his creatures: and as to those who believe and work righteousness, He will expiate their evil deeds from them; and He will give them a reward according to the utmost merit of their actions." "Say, I ask not of you any reward for this my preaching; besides the conversion of him who shall desire to take the way which leads unto his God."

The formation of the Moslem Institute has been brought about as follows: A few years ago a young English barrister named W. H. Quilliam, of Methodist parentage and training, went to Morocco; and while there noticed the devotion of the Moslems and their freedom from many of the vices which disgrace our civilization. He then gave attention to the teachings of the Koran, and soon formally renounced Christianity and made a public profession of Mohammedanism. On his return to England, he, with a number of Indian Mohammedan gentlemen residing temporarily in this country, combined for mutual edification.

This, however, was not to last long. Other work of an aggressive kind must be attempted if they were to acquit themselves as true Moslems. Mr. Quilliam had long been an earnest advocate of teetotalism, and he conceived the idea of making teetotalism the means of advancing Moslemism. He gave a lecture on "Fanatics and Fanaticism," and showed that the Koran was opposed both to drinking and gambling. The Koran being on the side of teetotalism was a new idea to many. By this method the movement grew slowly, until there are now about fifty adherents. Two other centers have been started, namely, Woking and London. The movement has sent a thrill of joy and interest throughout the Moslem world, rousing it to a state of enthusiasm and causing it to send missionaries to this country to carry on the work that has been inaugurated.

Mr. Quilliam has achieved considerable noteriety as an advocate. He has also been in the habit of contributing articles to newspapers and magazines, and has occupied the editorial chair in connection with some local ventures. His work on the "Faith of Islam," has been translated into nine Asiatic languages. He has two works now in the press, entitled, "The Religion of the Sword," and "Moses, Christ and Mahomet."

In addition to his labors in literature and the law, he lectures every Sunday evening on some phase of Moslemism. He tells us that he preaches the fatherhood of the merciful God, and the universal brotherhood of man; and when persons are ready to believe that, and to sign the Moslem confession of faith, they are received into full membership, be they peer or beggar.

We are confronted in this nineteenth century with the phenomenon of Moslemism attempting to uproot Christianity in its stronghold. It seems strange when no Mahommedan land is prospering, just when science, literature and commerce are in the hands of Protestant nations, and only those lands are advancing which conform to Protestant ideas, that Moslemism should make a desperate spurt and assume to be an evangelizing and progressive system. We are to remember, however, that Mr. Quilliam has had a Methodist training, and the old nature is still rampant and asserts itself in new spheres. How the work will succeed cannot be predicated till the experiment has been tried. We wait the attempt with calmness, believing that the rising sun will not be superseded by the waning crescent moon.

WORLD'S WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE SABBATH.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Since 1878 the week bounded by the first two Sabbaths of April have been set apart by the World's Prayer Union, and more recently by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the American Sabbath Union also, as the World's Week of Prayer for the Sabbath. There are few places, if any, that have observed the week by daily public meetings as yet, but its regular services have, in many cases, been devoted in part to this theme. "Prevention" of Sabbath-breaking in April is "better" and easier than "cure" in July. The time to strengthen the breakwater is before the storm.

It would seem wise and reasonable that each pastor should devote two of his four sermons in in the period named, and the prayer meeting, and a part of the Sabbath-school exercises, to this preventive work, and that the Pastors' Association, in conjunction with a Sabbath Committee, if there be one in the place, should hold at least one or two public meetings for united prayer and conference, and should put some Sabbath document into every home in the town by a committee of ladies, or by the young people, for whom such work is good "Endeavor."

Public addresses are the plows, literature is the seed, and organization is the harvester for Sabbath reform. In this matter spring is indeed "the time to plant." Let the ploughing be as deep as conscience, to be followed by the best of seed, and a efficient harvester.

There are not a few occasions for both praise and prayer. Our Sabbath laws, though bitterly attacked in many Legislatures since April of last year, have not, in a single instance, I think, been even weakened. The courts have decided, in Maryland, that Sunday base ball, as a money-making show, violates the law against Sunday "labor"; in Pennsylvania, that Sunday opening of a barber shop is not a work of necessity or mercy. President Spalding, of the National Base Ball League, has forbidden Sunday games for 1891, as before. Sunday saloons have been closed in Los Angeles, and the good contagion of its courage has secured the same result all over southern California. As a result of lectures, literature, and organization the Sunday opening of the postoffice has been discontinued in some places. Sunday newspapers have, in at least one instance, been suppressed by law, and in another by public sentiment.

On the other hand, the great need of prayer is manifest in the sadly significant fact that the Republican Senators, at Washington, following Frenchy rather than American methods, selected the new president of the Senate by a Sunday caucus, apparently oblivious to the fact that the vacancy had been caused by a contempt for "the Decalogue and the Golden Rule," which the people had reproved with great abhorrence.

A practical subject for petitions to both God and men is the Sunday trains. No doubt a majority of the stock of the greatest of our railroad companies, the "Pennsylvania," is owned by Christian men. Some of the other owners are at least humane. The engineers, firemen and brakemen, in their national conventions, have uttered their "bitter cry" to Congress and to the "public" for their lost Sabbath. Let leading stockholders of this leading railroad be petitioned to combine in a request to such well-disposed railroad leaders as Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chauncey Depew, Mr. Ledyard, Mr. Hughitt and others, to join in a railroad owners' petition to Congress to remove by a national inter-State law the only real obstacle to the complete suspension of Sunday trains, competition. And let us add petitions to God to further the plan by turning the hearts of railroad kings as rivers of water to this righteous and humane course. "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

Both kinds of petition are needed also to prevent Sunday opening of the World's Fair. I suggest that a resolution be adopted that is suitable to send in eight copies to both houses of the next Congress, to the Columbian Commission, and in "duplicate" to both the Commissioners and both the alternates of the State where the action is taken, and also to the World's Fair directory.

The World's Week of Prayer for the Sabbath should be a week of practice as well as of prayer, of enforcing the laws we have as well as petitioning for better ones. They pray best who are busiest between prayers in working with God on the answers.

To the Officers and Owners of Railroads:—We urge upon all Christian and humane owners and managers of railroads separately and jointly to ask Congress and State Legislatures to eliminate the only real obstacle to the complete suspension of Sunday trains, namely competition, by enacting laws forbidding all Sunday trains, except in cases of mercy and necessity.

To the World's Fair Directory, the Columbian Commission, the Commissioners and Alternates from this State, the United States Senate, and House of Representatives:—We urge you, so far as lies in your power, to prevent the Sunday opening of the World's Fair, and the consequent national violation of the Decalogue and the Golden Rule.

The foregoing was adopted by vote at a meeting of ——, in ——, on ——, 1891.

[Attest] ——, Presiding.

MINOR SECRET SOCIETIES.

No one who reads the Gospels carefully, need be at any loss to find out what is the mind of Christ about secret societies. The Master speaks with no uncertain sound. No cloud darkens his words; no ambiguity lurks in his sentences.

For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.—Jno. 3: 20, 21.

Societies are made up of individuals. The statement of Christ is universal. He makes no exception. Every one, includes the individual and the Association.

Good deeds and good purposes do not seek concealment. Never did a tree, deprived of light, bear good fruit.

Associations that aim simply at mutual benefit need no pass-words nor pledges of secrecy. If they require these they have some fraudulent designs in view. Even the civil law, that is so tolerant, will not tolerate Life Insurance companies that do not publish their proceedings. He who seeks to hide is justly suspected.

Secret organizations that ask for the patronage of the farmers should be avoided. Whatever else they aim at, they aim to enrich the organizers at the expense of those who already are overburdened. Why should the men who own the schoolhouses, ask leave of anybody to organize for their own protection? Why should they pay for a charter to authorize them to do what they have just as good a right to do without, as with a charter? Why should the lords of the soil volunteer to pay monthly or yearly tribute to self-constituted lordlings? The farmers are openly wronged. They should openly redress their wrongs.

We should never do evil that good may come. It is in itself a sin for one whom the Lord has made free, to bind himself to keep secrets, before he knows what these secrets are. He has no right to put himself in the power of others.

This whole brood of secret societies from the gnat to the vampyre, originate with the Prince of darkness, and lead to the unending night of black despair. Shun them as you would shun hell.

He that doeth truth stands out in the light and challenges investigation. He is willing that all should know the end he aims at, and the means which he employs to attain that end. He gladly obeys the command to let his light shine. He has nothing to hide; but all who will, may examine his deeds and see that they are wrought in God.—Earnest Christian.

THE ITALIAN MAFIA.

Hideous as is the nature of this organized murder society, which is transplanted from the scum of Italian cities, it differs in degree only from other secret, self-constituted tribunals of alleged justice which have sprung up in different American States under a variety of names. The old "vigilance committee of the West" has been superseded in turn by the Klu-Klux, the Molly Maguires and latterly by the White-Caps. If these so-called "regulators" have stopped short of murder in many of their outrages, it is because there has still been a remnant of fear of the law of the land. The outrages upon person and property which such outlaws have perpetrated during the last quarter of a century, form one of the greatest blots upon American civilization.

There is no room upon American soil for any other form of "regulators" than the tribunals of justice sanctioned by the law. All other societies, "committees," etc., are un-American and should be stamped out without mercy. The State or municipality that allows such organizations of outlawry to flourish, does not truly represent American institutions and should mend its ways without delay.—Chicago Daily News.

For seventy years after the battle of the Boyne, the Irish Celt rested in apparent stupor, and there were no outward signs of a rising; but the bitterness and the heart-burnings were there. To their condition they never assimilated. When George III. came to the throne, a loyal address was presented by the Roman Catholics. It was well received, and the Catholics lifted up their heads, and forthwith the country was infested with an ill-begotten crop of secret societies. There were the Oak-Boys, and the Hearts-of-Steel-Boys, and the White-Boys, and what not. The Hearts-of-Steel-Boys made war on the landlords. These landowners would not live in Ireland; but they held the land, and the tenants were at the tender mercies of the rent-collector. The White-Boys swore vengeance against these middle-men, and they raided the southern counties, pulling down fences and meting out destruction; while the Oak-Boys were sworn to redress all grievances. Riot and idleness was the result. The secret societies so hopelessly interwoven with our own political fabric are of the same slimy fold. They are the force that moves our political machine. They know no God in Christ, and the spirit of resistance is in them as strong as in the Irish, if occasion should call it forth. But the saddest feature is, that the church at large bows to this Moloch, greedy to share its worldly honors.—Janet in the Christian Instructor.

Freemasonry is credited with being active and influential in politics in Italy. One lodge in an "election manifesto" talks of pulling down the Vatican in order that the stones may be used to construct the temple of emancipated reason." The Journal of Rome, probably a clerical organ, asserts that "the Italian elections of 1890 were carried by Masonry;" that the premier, "Crispi, has given himself, bound hand and foot, to Masonry;" and that "Masonry has now become the true sovereign of Italy." It is probable that, indirectly perhaps, Masonry is much more powerful in our own government than is commonly supposed.—United Presbyterian.

If Freemasonry is, as is clearly proven, a rival and a supplanter of Christianity, how can any man honestly and faithfully advocate Christianity where Freemasonry exists without opposing it? To give aid and comfort to the enemies of Christ is treason to Christ. He demands the undivided allegiance of all his followers. Those ministers, who during the week bow at the altar of Baal in the secret lodge, and then, on the Sabbath, bow at the altar of Christ, are guilty of solemn mockery. And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial?—Earnest Christian.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT C. A. BLANCHARD BEFORE THE MASSASOIT CLUB OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY.

(Concluded.)

Still further, it may be said that the secret order is a natural conspiracy against the rights of others not connected with it. Some years since the non-fraternity students of Michigan University organized a society corresponding to the one which I have the honor of now addressing. It was called "The Independents." One of the men, who was active in forming that society, told me that he took the part he did because of the manner in which the secret societies of that institution persecuted two worthy men, class-mates, one of whom declined to join some Greek-letter chapter, while the other, having joined one, asked leave to withdraw, in deference to the wishes of his father.

Then in reference to promotions, elections to honors, etc., there are two sides. If fraternity men, by secret agreements, elect their own men; they being not entitled to such distinction, the men thus promoted are injured. They learn to rely on cunning, craft, manipulation, instead of merit, manhood. They are being trained to be politicians, not statesmen. They learn to ask, not, "What is right?" "What is honorable?" "What should be done?"—but, "What will succeed?" "How can we elect our man?" "How can we carry our measure?" This, all will admit, is a damage to the lodge-man. It tends to make him cunning and mean rather than strong, candid and frank. But, on the other side, what is to be said of the man who is cheated out of the place which he has fairly earned? Is no wrong done him? And what is to be said of the common body, misrepresented as the result of such secret trickery? And when the river of school-life has led to the wide open sea; when men in church and state are acting on the principles adopted in college; and when lodges put up candidates to be elected by the saloons; and when men who are known to be honest are held by that fact to be disqualified for public trust, how then does this system of favoritism affect honorable men who might under other circumstances be promoted to public station? and how does it affect the public who are taxed for the salaries and votes of these men who are nominated by secret societies, to govern cities and nations?

The simple fact is that men have a right to fair play in this world, and under the divine plan they receive it. The family, the church, and the state are the three organizations which rest upon the Creator's will, and in each of these there is free scope for action and a rating according to the work done. The lodge principle, which bases promotion on membership, not on fitness, is a disorganizing one; and while it injures one man by promoting him without merit, injures another by robbing him of credit and position, which are fairly earned.

It goes without saying, that men thus advanced will use their positions, not to serve the communities which must give them all of profit and honor which they receive, but the lodges which have foisted them onto the general body. Thus recently, when a Knight Templar sheriff had charge of a Knight Templar prisoner, he let him go free; and the people paid the detectives, the lawyers, the judges, even the sheriff, who let him run away. The fraternities get the service and the people foot the bills.

This thought leads to another, viz.: that if men unite with the lesser orders, they naturally go forward to the higher and more injurious. The Thugs, the Mafia, and the Camorra, are called associations of murderers, and they doubtless are so. But the Ancient Order of Hibernians, a simple benefit society, became the Molly Maguires of Pennsylvania, and it required the hanging of men to cure that order of the habit of murdering those obnoxious to it. The Clan-na-Gael is no more a murderous society than the Masonic lodge. It is a secret society, and murdered a man who was hunting down some thieves connected with it. It had representatives on the police force, and it was only by what men of the world call chance,—what Christians call special providence—that even the fact of the murder was established.

Now, when one becomes a fraternity man the natural hostility which a free, candid mind has toward secret societies is likely to be broken down, and the lodge spirit to take possession of him. I know that men claim to be opposed to secret societies in general, and yet to favor some which profess special virtues. It is evident, however, that this position is illogical and cannot be permanently maintained. All secret societies profess good ends. And almost all claim, when challenged on the ground of their secrecy, that this feature is very "insignificant," "amounts to nothing," etc. Even a Freemason, writing on the subject, recently said: "Strictly speaking, Masonry is not a secret society." Men who justify some lodges have no ground to stand on and condemn any. If the principle can be approved for Protestants, it cannot be condemned for Romanists. If it is a good way to promote some good causes, it is a good way to promote others. If it is well for young men in college, it will be helpful to them out of college. The lesser orders are natural steps to the higher, and the one who learns to depend upon them in school, will not wish to do without them in active life. It is difficult for one used to a crutch to walk on his own feet.

This is not the proper time for a discussion of the merits of the greater lodges. Their pagan religious rites, their foolish ceremonies, their oaths and obligations binding to partiality and the protection of crime, the penalties of some of them calling plainly for murder if they are enforced,—all these are known and he may study them who will. I speak this evening not to those who approve of such orders, but to those who believe them hostile to American institutions and the Christian faith; and I say to all such persons, that the principles and tendencies of the lesser orders are the same as those of the greater. If we admit the one, we must expect the other. If we pitch the tune, we must sing it through.

The instances of rash promises in the Bible are not calculated to encourage those who favor them. Jephthah took such a vow, and it cost him the life of his only child. Herod swore to an unknown request, and it added another murder to his already heavy list of crimes. Forty men swore not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul, and if they kept their oath they starved themselves to death. Rash promises, vain oaths, false oaths, all are condemned by the Word of God.

Young men who are Christians, are specially to avoid such societies as unite them in fraternal bonds with unbelievers. What part has one who believes in Jesus Christ, with an infidel? What fellowship has one whose citizenship is in heaven, with one whose desires and hopes are all of the earth? What communion is there between light and darkness? These questions are asked in the Word of God; they are emphasized by the experience of men. If men tell us that they secure influence by such associations, the answer is that it is better to have a small influence on the right side, than a large one on the wrong. Lot had considerable influence of a certain sort in Sodom, but it was not sufficient to save the lives of his children, nor to secure the property for which he had periled his soul.

But why multiply words. Men are not drawn into lodges by arguments addressed to the understanding, but by the hope of some advantage not otherwise attainable. Men naturally know that secret fraternities are not needful for society purposes, nor for literary culture, nor for drill in parliamentary law, nor for lawful mutual assistance. They know that such help as the fraternity system affords, is not required by strong men and would only injure them if accepted. And on the other hand, they can see that weak men promoted by lodge influence, are practically certain to remain weak.

It does not require argument to show that secrecy naturally lends itself to evil. "Out of the darkness dark deeds grow." Wickedness is sometimes so strong as to borrow no mask from hypocrisy, no shadow from the night. Thank God! those times come but seldom. The murderers of Jesus took counsel against him secretly. That tremendous corporation which has rendered every nation it has ruled illiterate, which now aspires to govern American schools, and which furnishes directors and teachers for schools to which it will not send children,—this organization derives its power from its secrecy. The great Rebellion is said to have been plotted in secret lodges, and to have been determined on at a wine supper in New Orleans. Every lawless combination in the world is a secret one, unless authority is already destroyed.

The nobler qualities of men are not cultivated by secret lodges. If their members remain worthy men it is because the fraternity does not destroy their original manhood, not because it makes them manly. Temptations to disorder are increased by such societies. Hazings, destruction of property, insubordination, all are easier when there are secret bands to carry them forward. If there be no regular orders, some must be extemporized before much evil can be done. Honor and generosity, those kingly qualities in men which make them quick to recognize and applaud excellence in others, even in enemies,—these are not grown in chapter halls. On the contrary, depreciation of others' deeds and laudation of one's own mediocrities is the natural result.

All this: and then a steady effort to make the boastings good, by robbing those who have been first defamed, conspiring in secret against those who cannot be openly overthrown; and carrying forward into life the same disposition to take unfair advantages, to secure unearned honors,—is not this the natural result of secret societies among students?

You will observe that I have quoted little or nothing thus far. I have preferred to rest this case on an appeal to the common sense of all who do me the honor to listen. I appeal with equal confidence to those who have united with fraternities and to those who oppose them. The principles which I announce are not the peculiar property of any class of men. They are the gift of God to all his rational creatures, and will have force with all who will candidly consider them. I desire, however, since the matter is important, to re-enforce our own judgments by those of others. Let us listen.

Dr. Howard Crosby, at the time Chancellor of the University of New York, himself while in college a fraternity man, said in the Boston Congregationalist:

"Secret societies are pretenses, and thus at war with truth, candor and manliness." "My second objection to secret societies in our colleges, is in the opportunity given by the secrecy to immoralities." "Confidence between pareut and child is broken." "Secret societies interfere with a faithful course of study." "They are naturally used for disturbance of public order." "They injure the regular literary societies of the college." "My last objection is their expensiveness." "I cannot but believe that the principle on which they rest is pernicious, and nothing is gained by them which might not be gained far better by open dealing."

Prof. J. R. Jacques, of Illinois Wesleyan University, in a paper read before the "Central College Association," in 1868, said:

"Secret societies have fostered a secretive disposition and tendency among students." "They have been the scene and source of untold mischief in our colleges." "They have instigated, stimulated and maddened the morbid appetite for office, trickery and wire working." "They have supplied no real need of the nobly ambitious student." "They have wasted the time of students." "They have become in many cases schools of extravagance," etc.

Hon. Wm. M. Evarts speaking at Yale, his Alma Mater, of the old literary societies, "Linonia" and "Brothers in Unity," said:

"To-day they are dead, killed by the class secret societies which have a tendency to develop snobbishness and nothing else. They are a curse to the college," etc., etc.

The Courant, commenting on the remarks of Mr. Evarts, said among many other things:

"It would be a good thing if young men had the manliness to appreciate the bad effects of these societies and to voluntarily repudiate them and to revive the more honorable and more manly rivalry of the great, open college debating societies. But as young men are not always the best judges of their own needs, perhaps it would be well for the colleges to act on the suggestion of Mr. Evarts and other able and liberal thinkers, and suppress the secret organizations."

The Illinois Synod of the United Presbyterian church adopted in 1873 the following statement respecting college secret societies:

"They are unnecessary. They are the means of much time being misspent at their meetings. They are the cause of much money being wasted. Their secrecy affords a cover for any evil which the members may commit. They are progressive and tend to the more odious forms of secrecy, as Masonry or Odd-fellowship. They are a hindrance to the usefulness of students. They entangle the good with the bad and corrupt the former. They are condemned in the Gospel. They breed and foster discord among the students."

Prof. Wilder of Cornell University, said in a letter written after the murder of young Mr. Leggett by a secret college society which was initiating him:

"In conclusion, I charge secret organizations with tending to encourage plots and machinations against law, order and society; with fostering the lowest of politicians' arts; with exciting unreasonable jealousies; with exacting time and attention needed for study; with involving an expenditure which many can ill afford and which all could better apply; with encouraging deceit of parents; with furnishing a partial and unfair aspect of persons and things; with being childish in principle and more or less vicious in practice; and finally, with doing all this in the pretended effort to accomplish certain good purposes which could be equally well accomplished without the element of secrecy."

The Springfield, Mass., Republican said, in speaking of the same subject, the death of Mr. Leggett:

"Earlier in civilization, when force and intrigue were essential to the advancement of even the best causes, secret organizations were an economical device in the prosecution of any purpose. To-day and here they have no such excuse for their existence. There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness."

Of course the writer means no honorable purpose. There are many of another sort which blasted by light would flourish in darkness.

The Chicago Evening Journal, speaking on this same theme, says:

"So shocking an affair may be beneficial, we trust, in suggesting the expediency of a general discouraging of secret societies among our institutions of learning. Despite their pretenses there is little that can be said in their favor. . . . On the contrary, they almost invariably breed rowdyism, hazing, drinking, debauchery, extravagance and disinclination for duty. Assemble a party of young men anywhere, with all restraint removed, and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious."

The Scientific American says:

"Unless a youth has well filled pockets (in which case rival societies vie with each other to see who shall secure him, or rather his money) he is not invited to membership at all. Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted by sheer force of example through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit if not open instigation of his unscrupulous elders."

But I must relieve your patience.

Young gentlemen of the Massasoits, you are not engaged in a needless warfare. You are fighting a battle for open dealing and fair play among those who are to be leaders of thought in hundreds of towns and cities. You are not the enemies of the fraternity men, if you comprehend your mission, but the enemies of a false and vicious principle which contravenes the law of God and the interests of all mankind. The success of the cause in which you are enlisted is more certain than the rising of to-morrow's sun. Many of those who are now your foes will in future days fight manfully shoulder to shoulder with you. There are tens of thousands who now glory in secret grips, signs and tokens, who will by and by see a new light shining about them, and at the word of some angel of God the chains will fall off from their hands. See to it that no unkindly word be spoken that shall mar the perfect triumph of that coming day. Be ready for the advent of that One who spake nothing in secret, for the presence of that One who is light and in whom there is no darkness at all.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The "grippe" epidemic causes more deaths in Boston than the small-pox.—Trades' union tyranny.—A business man's view of the lodge insurance craze.—The Italian mass meeting at Fanueil Hall.

It is a curious fact that the diseases of which we stand in the greatest terror, are not always the ones that we have the most cause to fear. The Board of Health notes that in Boston, while the small-pox epidemic in 1872-3 caused 1,679 deaths in about two years, the recent influenza epidemic caused 2,500 deaths in only fifty days. This strange disorder may or may not prove, as alarmists predict, the precursor of something worse, but it certainly emphasizes the necessity that our system of industrial protection should reach a little farther, and protect the public from the untold dangers which lurk in the cheap clothing manufactured—nobody knew where, until Gov. Russell ordered the late investigation. Much of it is made in New York city; and the report of the commissioners reads like a chapter out of Alton Locke, though the tenement houses of Boston are not far behind.

But such revelations never seem to diminish the throngs at the bargain counter, for human nature likes a bargain even better than it loves to be humbugged. It is here that law should step in with its wholesome check on the greed of trade. But is it greed or something worse—worse because it partakes more of the diabolic—that manufactures and sells brandy drops, to make drunkards out of innocent little children? This is worse by far than arsenical coloring in articles of dress and furniture. The time will come when legislators will see that men and women—aye, and their children, too!—need protection far more than the mere labor of their hands. Emerson, long ago, wrote: "Humanity asks that government shall not be ashamed to be tender and paternal, but that democratic institutions shall be more thoughtful for the training of children—and for the welfare of sick and unable persons, and serious care of criminals, than was ever any of the best governments of the Old World." Talleyrand, shrewd old diplomatist and statesman, grasped the key of the situation, when he said that the two things which should be encouraged by government are, learning and agriculture; wit and manufactures will come of themselves.

I do not like to see in the account of a fair lately held by the Woman's Relief Corps, at Lowell, that the lady who presided at one of the tables, was liberally patronized by "lovers of the weed." Even if only the finest cigars, the daintiest smoking caps, and most artistic meerschaums, found their way to that table, it was none the less a degrading and demoralizing spectacle; for repulsive as is the personal use of tobacco by a woman, it is almost as much so to see her handle and sell it. Surely those ladies cannot object with good grace, if their pictures get used by cigar dealers to recommend their wares. I hope this was an unusual feature, but if it is a common practice at fairs held by the Woman's Relief Corps, it would seem to imply that the organization does not stand on any higher moral plane than the Grand Army, of which it is only an adjunct.

A singular instance of trades' union tyranny is the recent case of the employees in a certain horse-shoeing establishment in Boston. There happened to be one man in the shop who had not paid his dues to the union; and because the proprietor would neither compel him to pay up nor discharge him, very properly considering it none of his business, the other men all left in a body. John Horne Tooke, it is said, once replied to the question, How much treason a man can write in England without being hung, that he did not know but he was making the experiment. So the secret labor unions seem to be making the experiment how far they can go in their senseless tyranny without accomplishing their own overthrow. It is said that scientists are trying to kill the "microbes" of which we hear so much now-a-days, by electricity. When will the electricity of public indignation be turned on in full power, to blast and kill these microbes that infest the cause of labor?

A business man remarked to me the other day, speaking of the numerous fraternal benefit and endowment orders that are springing up on every hand, "I consider them the sure forerunner of a great commercial panic. Just before the crash of '57, there sprang up a big crop of loan and trust companies doing business on the same fictitious basis." I believe his view is correct, and that if we study financial history, especially in our own country and in France, we shall see that the speculative mania, the craze for schemes that offer to give their patrons large returns for small investments, is the shadow that always goes before a collapse of public credit. Honesty, industry, integrity—God has made these the firm bedrock on which to build all true national prosperity.

The mass meeting of 3,000 Italians at Fanueil Hall to protest against the New Orleans massacre, was a new revelation to many people of the strength of this element in Boston's population. Some good will come out of evil if the excitement which the act has aroused will learn the South, stupid and obtuse to the world's opinion as years of the slavery regime has made her, that she has got to come into line with modern civilization; and still more if it causes the entire suppression of the Mafia and all other European oath-bound orders. But how we can put down foreign lodges while we protect the domestic article, is a question. One law for Americans and foreigners is the only law that will give us tranquility at home and make us respected abroad.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., March 18, 1891.

Having criticised the action of certain ladies occupying high positions in Washington society in serving intoxicating liquors at their entertainments, it affords me special pleasure to record the fact that Mrs. Harrison never permits wine or any kind of alcoholic liquor to be served at any of the luncheons or dinners she gives to her lady friends at the White House, although she does not go as far as her eminent predecessor, Mrs. Hayes, who insisted, and carried her point, in banishing liquor from the White House entirely, including the official state dinners. Mrs. Morton is another prominent woman who refuses to allow liquor to be served at her entertainments. Would that their good example was more generally followed.

I am not prepared to say that it is actually wrong, but it certainly jars upon one's preconceived idea of the fitness of things, to pick up a newspaper and read in its advertising columns that a series of sermons are to be preached in a public hall, and that tickets will be sold at the door at $1.00, 50 and 52 cents each. Such are the announcements now in the Washington papers concerning the sermons to be preached here during the week beginning with next Sabbath and ending "Easter Sunday" by Father Ignatius, monk of the British church.

The great success of the Y. M. C. A. has stimulated the young men of the colored churches, and they have taken steps that it is believed will result in the organization of a colored Young Men's Christian Association here. Such a movement is worthy of assistance, as its success would undoubtedly result in great benefit to the entire community.

The first week of Rev. Dr. Hammond's revival services resulted in 130 conversions, and the interest seems daily increasing.

Mr. Albert Griffin, of Kansas, who was chairman of the Anti-saloon National Committee, is in Washington. Speaking of prohibition in Kansas, he said: "Well, it has reached such proportions that it no longer needs any agitation to make it an issue. If the question of a prohibition amendment was again submitted to the people of Kansas it would be retained in the constitution by an overwhelming majority."

It is a matter of general congratulation that the dispute between the governments of Great Britain and our own concerning the fishery rights in Behring Sea, which for a time threatened to be the cause of war, is to be settled by peaceful arbitration as soon as Secretary Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Minister, can arrange the necessary preliminaries thereto. It is specially pleasing to the members of the Universal Peace union that the matter is to be thus determined.

Deep regret is felt and expressed in official circles for the recent happenings at New Orleans which resulted in the unlawful taking of eleven human lives; it is regarded as a blot upon American civilization that will shame generations yet unborn.

The case known as the Kansas original package case is expected to come up in the Supreme Court this week. *

REFORM NEWS.

MICHIGAN RESPONDS.

Dear Cynosure:—In commencing work in Michigan I came first to Berrien county, and stopped at Berrien Center, at Eau Claire and at Benton Harbor. I found friends who were willing to render substantial aid at each of these points.

At Niles I called on Mr. Hudson, with whom I had a pleasant and profitable interview. At Augusta I went into the country to see Bro. Geo. Swanson, the treasurer of the Michigan Association. On the way I called upon a brother of Rev. Peter Slawson, now deceased, with whom I labored in the Gospel thirty-five years ago. This brother of my old friend subscribed for the Cynosure, and conveyed me with his team to Bro. Swanson's, some six or eight miles distant.

The next morning being the Sabbath, I went with Bro. Swanson and family to Hickory Corners church. It was a union service of Wesleyan Methodist and Methodist Protestants. The meeting was in the W. M. church, but the M. P. minister was to preach. He invited me to speak in his stead, which I did and gave them the Gospel as opposed to the religious philosophy of the lodge. The next day I secured two subscriptions to the Cynosure, and money was donated to send the paper for a year to the pastor of the W. M. church, and also for three months to one-half of the ministers of the Michigan Conference of the Methodist Protestant church. As there are thirty-two ministers in that conference, I booked nineteen Cynosure readers that day. I got another one the next day, which made the round twenty.

When I left that community a Bro. Roach took me some eight miles on my way. The pastor, Rev. Bonnell, and Bro. Barnes had furnished me with transportation while I was in that region. Leaving there I spent the night with Bro. Warner, an earnest friend of reform, and then came to Monteith and Martin, where I called on the United Presbyterian pastor, who wished me, at some future time, to preach an anti-lodge sermon to his people.

From there I came to Allegan. Here I remained over the Sabbath, and in Union Music Hall at 3 P. M. I preached Jesus as the only Saviour of men, and showed the wickedness of Freemasonry and its kindred orders in attempting to counterfeit the glorious Gospel of the ever-blessed God. The next day two men subscribed for the Cynosure, and one of them, a Baptist brother, also subscribed for seven of the Allegan ministers.

Mrs. Swanson of Bedford, Michigan, spoke to a lady of the evils of Masonry. The lady replied, "O! you cannot know anything about Masonry! It is a secret society." Mrs. Swanson appealed to the husband of the lady, who was a Mason. When called upon to confirm or deny her statements, he replied, "So many liberals have joined the Masons, and then revealed the secrets, that Masonry has no secrets any more." His wife looked her astonishment and was speechless.

A Methodist Protestant minister who resides at Kalamazoo was visiting a brother minister, who, after his family had retired, urged him to join the Masons; and to convince him that Masonry is a good thing, he spoke of a time when he was on the ocean and the ship was captured by pirates. The crew and passengers were compelled to walk a plank and make the fatal plunge. When it came his turn he gave the grand hailing sign of distress of a Master Mason, and his life was spared. The visiting brother looked his host in the eyes and exclaimed, "My good Lord! Do you ask me to join an institution that has PIRATES in it?"

A Methodist minister by the name of Steel in Allegan county was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of a brother Mason. In addressing his brother Masons he said, "If you ever get to heaven it will have to be by the atoning blood of Christ. Masonry will not save you." After the sermon they came to him and manifested their surprise by exclaiming, "What! You a Mason, telling us that Masonry will not save us?" That opened his eyes, and he immediately renounced the covenant that bound him to that Satanic substitute for the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Brethren, I have come to Michigan. Will you come up with me to the help of the Lord? Open the way, please, for me to preach Jesus as the only Saviour of the world, and to expose and refute the pretentious claims of the lodge to provide for the salvation of men. I wish to help you to persuade and turn away men from the lodge, and from sin in general, to Christ.

Send in your calls, brethren. I am ready to help you, as much as in me lieth, to exalt Christ and to expose the wickedness of the lodge system. Write me at Jackson, Michigan.

FROM WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

EN ROUTE FOR CANNONSBURG, Pa., March 19., 1891.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have given three addresses since my last writing. On the way west I met Rev. A. M. Milligan of the Covenanter church, at Harrisburg, and at his suggestion stopped at New Alexandria over Sabbath. I found an opportunity to speak there in the Presbyterian church in the morning. A special service was arranged for the Covenanter church in the evening. I expressed my desire to speak against the lodge in the Presbyterian church, but the pastor, Rev. Senior, though urging me to preach for him, did not think it wise to invite me to speak against the lodge from his pulpit. He, however, was willing to dismiss his evening service that his people might hear me in the Covenanter church. He expressed himself as skeptical on the lodge question, and evidently desired to remain so. He said his church was not in a good spiritual condition. My suggestion of a plan to bring it into a better spiritual state did not meet his approval. Both morning and evening services were well attended. I trust good will be the result. The collection kindly given at my lecture in the Sixth United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, last evening was large compared with the attendance. Several expressed the opinion that more such lectures were needed, and invited me to return.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SWAMI, THE CONVERTED HINDOO.

A CORRECTION.

MARISSA, Ill., March 21, 1891.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to call your attention to a remark in the Cynosure of March 19th, first column in the New England letter, in regard to the meeting of Theosophists to meet in Boston, April 26, '91, "at which a learned Hindoo, Swami Bhaskara Nand Sarasnati, by name, is expected to be present as the exponent and apostle of the new 'fad.'" Now I desire to say that the Hindoo gentleman referred to is a Christian and a member of the Fourth Reformed Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, Pa., and a student in theology in the R. P. Seminary located at Twentieth and Vine streets, in that city. He came to this country about two years ago, an adherent of the Hindoo religion, but was converted by the labors of Rev. C. G. Scott, M. D. (a Hindoo), missionary of the R. P. church. He was baptized by Dr. Scott in the latter part of 1889, in the Fourth R. P. church (N. S.) and has been a member of that congregation ever since. Swami was disinherited by his father, who is a Hindoo nobleman, because he became a Christian.

I do not say that he will not be at Boston at said meeting, but I do say that he will not preach Brahamism, neither will he preach a new "fad," unless Covenanterism is a new "fad." In justice, then, to our young brother lately converted to the religion of Christ, and in justice to the Reformed Presbyterian church I ask you to make this correction, which I know you will be glad to do.

(Rev.) R. W. CHESTNUT,
Pastor R. P. Church.

RANDOM SHOTS FROM A REFORM LECTURER.

General Eli H. Murray gives the most complimentary testimonial of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman. He was asked, "Do you not rank frankness as chief among his virtues?" Gen. Murray said, "Yes; he never had a secret in his life. When any one wanted to make Sherman a confidant, he would exclaim, 'Don't tell me a secret; I'll give it away to the first person I meet. I don't want any secrets. Devilment begins with secrets.' The General's life was an open book."

I was impressed when I recall that Gen. Murray makes this opposition to secrecy the admirable trait in Gen. Sherman's character. I called and interviewed him once in St. Louis, and was favorably impressed by his frankness and friendly familiarity. How could he be a member of any secret society, and say that "devilment begins with secrecy?" And is it not a hopeful sign of the times that such virtues are extolled in the character of a public man?

Mrs. J. S. Collins of Allegheny, misunderstands my report of Gov. St. John's lecture at Blanchard. He did not mention J. Ellen Foster in his lecture. It was in private conversation, at my home, that he related how strongly Mrs. Foster urged upon him the formation of a Prohibition party with him as candidate for President. Mrs. Foster did this at Pittsburg and Baltimore early in 1884; but Gov. St. John said he opposed it strongly, until after the Chicago convention of '84. As late as 1884, Mrs. Foster exerted a strong influence in shaping the policy of the National W. C. T. U. and Prohibition party. But now she is a bitter enemy of these organizations. Our counts against Mrs. Foster are:

(1.) She utterly failed in the Iowa Prohibition campaign of 1879, to disprove that she did not receive $1,000 from the Republican State central committee, for her influence in preventing the nomination of a State Prohibition ticket.

(2.) She is in active, earnest co-operation with the Republican party, whose alliance with the liquor traffic is open, intimate and indissoluble.

(3.) She has, according to the testimony of Hon. Neal Dow, declared her purpose to smash the National W. C. T. U.

(4.) A prominent minister testifies that at the Chicago Republican convention in 1888, she declared in conversation with him, that she would do anything to kill the Prohibition party.

(5.) She took the money of the Republican managers, and stumped New York for a license ticket in '88, when there was a Prohibition ticket in the field.

(6.) Her intolerance, while president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., in opposing Prohibition speakers, and the circulation of Prohibition literature, was notorious, and brands her as the most unscrupulous of partisans.

(7.) Her doctrine, that "Moral reforms seeking recognition by government, are not accomplished through party action," and her declaration, "If I could to-day write the platform of the Republican party, I would not have it declare for Prohibition," shows her to be grossly erroneous and inconsistent, and that her so-called non-partisan profession is a miserable sham to excuse her devotion to the corrupt Republican party. For these and other reasons, Gov. St. John says, and I say it, it was a great mistake to ask J. Ellen Foster to speak from a National Reform platform.

M. A. GAULT.

BOARD OF TRADE SHARP PRACTICE.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On Sabbath morning, Mar. 8th, I preached in College Avenue M. E. church, Greencastle, Ind., Rev. S. B. Town, D.D., pastor. This brother came here from Terre Haute last September. He is a worthy successor to Dr. Parkhurst, who now labors in Milwaukee. The congregation has 500 members. The theme was Sabbath Observance.

At 3 P. M., I lectured in DePauw University. They have 1,000 students. The institution is flourishing under the wise management of President John. The theme was, "Christ, the King of Nations." In 1776, forty-six earnest men in Philadelphia signed the Bill of Rights, and solemnly pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in defence of the principles of the Declaration of Independence. The result is a great and free Republic. In 1864, one hundred earnest Christian citizens met in Pittsburg and organized the National Reform Association, solemnly pledging their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in defence of the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ. The outcome will be a great Christian nation, in league with the King of kings, obeying his law and enjoying his blessing.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, MARCH 16.—This is a church-going city. The M. E., Presbyterian and Lutheran churches are strong. And yet the saloon dominates the city government and the most corrupt municipal rule in the State prevails. The Sabbath is a Parisian holiday. Open saloons, gambling dens and Sunday newspapers, make it a near relative of Sodom. In a conversation with Dr. Helwig, pastor of the First Lutheran church, he expressed deep alarm at the situation. The Sabbath surrendered and the saloon reigning supreme, make the peril of our Christian civilization complete. Springfield has suffered financially. The failure of the Whitely Machine Co., has thrown hundreds out of employment. The population in the past year has fallen from 36,000 to 33,000. This is due to the Whitely failure. And the Whitely failure was due to Harper swamping the Fidelity Bank in Cincinnati. And Harper's failure was due to the treachery of the Chicago Board of Trade. Harper had the wheat in the elevators. The game was in his hands, as he supposed. Whitely saw this and invested with him. The Chicago Board of Trade, to head them off, passed a rule that the stored wheat included all the wheat in the cars on the tracks. Harper could not raise enough money to buy this additional wheat. So they bagged him. Harper, the victim, went to the penitentiary. But the Chicago Board of Trade cut off their own heads. Had they allowed Harper to take his game as he had a right to do, according to their own rules, instead of cheating him out of it, ruining him financially and causing him to go to the penitentiary, all the suckers in the country would have rushed to Chicago and invested in futures. But in temporarily saving themselves and ruining him, they gave a warning which all have heeded.

J. M. FOSTER.

REMEMBER THIS SISTER IN AFRICA.

MONROVIA, Liberia,
West Coast Africa, Jan. 16, '91.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have come in contact with those who have high standing in the M. E. church, but at the same time are members of the Masonic fraternity. In endeavoring to show the wrong of such an alliance, by holding before them the evils of the lodge in America, they excuse themselves by saying those things are not true of their society in Liberia. I would much like the Cynosure sent me, but am unable to pay for it. If you could favor me with it as a donation, I would be very grateful, and could perhaps let some light on these dusky sons of Ham who so tenaciously cling to this unholy secret organization. I think all the Liberian preachers belong. I have talked with none who do not.

I find the work among the Kroo people has some encouraging signs. The fields are ripe to harvest, but laborers are few. I think if there were a hundred of me, there would be a place for each in this part of Africa alone. Pray for our success, that God may be found of these heathen to the saving of their souls. Yours for Africa's redemption, MRS. JENNIE TORRENCE.

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER ANSWERED

WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have before me a copy of the Saltsburg, Pa., Press of Feb. 26th, containing a lengthy article from Dr. Miller, pastor of the Presbyterian church of that place. Several of the citizens have written requesting that I reply. It is largely a personal attack. Were not the cause which I have the honor to represent involved, I should address my letter to the Dr. directly, instead of sending it through the Cynosure. On first reading this attack I felt surprised, so different is its spirit from that manifest at Dr. Miller's home. I was then told I was quite welcome and invited to return.

The Dr. did not tell me he belonged to a secret society. If I am rightly informed he will not deny it. It is an undisputed fact that many members of his church belong to various secret societies. As I credited him with some anti-secret sentiment in my report of Feb. 19th, and this report was circulated in his town, any one acquainted with the forces that move men in this world will not have to look far for an explanation of the Dr.'s seeming change. As he told me he had read Finney on Masonry and attended anti-secret discussions, he cannot be excused for not knowing what he is doing when advocating Christ-excluding institutions. The Dr. says I misrepresented him in my report. This appears to be the fact. It was unintentional. I am always glad to correct mistakes. If he will forgive me for representing him as approving an anti-secret sentiment presented by Dr. Fairchild, so many years the beloved and honored president of Oberlin College, I will never repeat the offence. As he spoke commendatory of Dr. Fairchild's address and did not utter one word of disapproval that I recall I concluded that it met his approbation. As the other charges generally are of the same nature and many of the expressions ironical it does not seem profitable to review them separately here. If the Dr. has any charges which he considers serious to bring against myself or our cause I would suggest that he meet me in public discussion in the town hall of Saltsburg. As I am to lecture in the Sixth United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, Pa., March 18th, I could easily meet him about that time. The following are the Dr.'s defences of the lodge as set forth in this article:

> It is very difficult to come at the truth concerning matters that are secret, and of which you can have no experience, for you cannot examine them as they really are. If you insist on doing so, you are compelled largely to conclude that they are, as you fancy of yourself, or have been taught of others to imagine. Thus you are in danger of going forth and teaching falsehood for truth, and it may be with some success, by giving it a basis of truth to build upon.

Once more, the "Secretary" in his article refers to a copy of the "Solon's Sector," which contained the notice of an annual ball given by Lodge No. 62 at Norwich, N. Y., and says: "I would respectfully (?) call Dr. Miller's attention to the fact that this is one of those little secret societies to which some of his members belong. When twice two don't make four, then will dancing lodgers make good Christians." Certainly very easy logic. The fact that a single lodge up in New York commits a crime, is deemed sufficient to condemn all lodges of the same society, and indeed all secret societies. That is making short work of the whole business. But let us cast it in the form of the syllogism. One lodge of a secret society has an annual ball. It is wicked to have an annual ball. Therefore, all secret societies are wicked. It is the same kind of syllogism as the following: No cat has two tails. Every cat has one tail more than no cat. Therefore, every cat has three tails.

Is the Solon incident to be taken as a fair specimen of "Secretary's" arguments. PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR.

Did the Dr. fail to note that this dance met with the approval of those publishing the "Solon's" official organ? Has any one said aught against such balls through the "Solon Sector"? Surely silence gives as much the consent of this entire body, as if the pastor and session of a church should keep quiet, while its members were dancing and belonging to lodges. How can you maintain your present position and meet the King in judgment? Please explain, for many are misled if you are right.

W. B. STODDARD.

PITH AND POINT.

PRESIDENT HARRISON AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

I notice a in the issue of your paper of March 12 in an article headed "Death in the Fountain," a statement to the effect that Pres. Harrison never belonged to a secret college fraternity. As the article appeared on the editorial page, I suppose that you are aware of its contents. Permit me to say that Pres. Harrison never denied such membership; that he has expressed to me personally his wishes for the continued success of his fraternity, and that last year he attended a banquet given in his honor by the chapters of his fraternity located in Knox and Lombard Colleges, Galesburg, Ill., and responded to the leading toast.

I have no expectation that you will publish this letter, but would it not be simple justice to Pres. Harrison that it should be given the same prominence in your paper enjoyed by the article in question?—ARTHUR HARRIS, Williamstown, Mass.

NOTE.—The writer of the above labors under a mistake or two. First, we did not say that President Harrison "never belonged" to a secret college society, but that he "wrote that he belonged to no secret society but the G. A. R." This letter was written by Mr. Harrison in July, 1888, before his election. We find that it was misquoted. Mr. Harrison says, "I have never been a member of any secret society except a Greek literary society in college and the G. A. R." The use of the President's name in the connection was therefore an error. We regret both the fact and the error,—the fact most.

IT KEEPS A MINISTER AND HIS PEOPLE.

The Cynosure has benefited me more than all the papers that I have read besides. It has kept me out of the lodge and a great many of my neighbors. Some dear friend paid for my last year's subscription. Many thanks to that dear friend.—REV. JOHN M. HARRIS, Mo.

THE ONLY AUTHORITY.

It is written of old, says the Lord Jesus Christ, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself," Matt. 5: 33. We want in this our day what the inspired Word of God says for authority, and less of these Progressive Evolutionists opinions, who discard the Bible as authority. Please send such tracts for distribution as in your judgment will best serve the cause of purity and righteousness.—M. MERRICK, Syracuse, N. Y.

ONE SPOT WILL GLOW IN TENNESSEE.

If you can send me some literature for distribution, especially on the lodge oaths, I will gladly scatter it, though I am now eighty-four years old. I find most of the preachers of the different denominations here are Masons. Would like extra copies of the Cynosure for distribution, and think I can get some subscribers.—REV. J. FORBES, Tullahoma, Tenn.

AN AGED READER OF THE CYNOSURE GONE HOME.

My aunt, Martha Chalfant, who lived with myself and sister, died Feb. 11. She was sick nineteen months. Her age was 79 years. She was a great reader, and read the Cynosure frequently. She was the first person to tell me about the Morgan case.—E. J. CHALFANT, York, Pa.

WE ALWAYS REMEMBER THE CASE OF THE FARMERS.

I wish to say to you this morning that I dearly love the Cynosure, and I hope you will not stop the paper if you do not get my renewal when my year is out; for some times we farmers are entirely out of money and know not which way to turn.—W. H. B., Sheffield, Ill.

RONAYNE AND THE OTHERS ALL RIGHT.

In regard to Bro. Ronayne's opinion of methods and those who oppose him, I think they are both right. I believe that the churches are becoming thoroughly aroused in regard to secretism, and now another key-note must be struck affecting men's sense of justice and liberty, independent of moral and religious convictions; since it is evident that the churches follow public opinion in matters of reform, rather than lead in them, which should be their mission.—A. C. STAPLES, West Branch, Iowa.

A REFOUND FRIEND.

I want to say right here, that I am happy to-night that I have the means to send for the Cynosure. I have been long wanting it. I believe that I got the first number issued and took it right along for years, until I lost some money by failing to reach you, or failing to be accounted for. Since which I have not taken it, but have many times wished for it.—L. CHAMPE, SR., Garnett, Kan.

THE MAFIA OF WEST VIRGINIA ARE CALLED MASONS.

The notorious Jim Clouston, of near Cameron, West Virginia, who a few years ago stabbed and killed his brother Jesse and was cleared by his Masonic brothers, attacked his son-in-law a few days ago with a gun. The latter succeeded in escaping after a chase of near half a mile. Clouston was arrested and brought to Cameron, but his "brothers" were on hand as of old, and laughed the accuser to scorn, assuring him that Jim was only in fun, and trying to scare him. Jim was turned loose, and if he has days to live will doubtless have some more blood on his skirts when he shall appear before a Judge who will not be under lodge control.—J. W. M., Cameron, W. Va.

HELPERS.

The Cynosure is just the paper we want. May God bless the cause it represents.—L. H. NOREM, Sioux Falls, Neb.

I like the Cynosure very much and hope it may have an increased circulation and influence.—R. G. WOOD, Brattleboro, Vt.

I appreciate the Cynosure. May its good work go on until the last secret society is wiped out of this good land.—S. KIRKPATRICK, Waterman, Ill.

I still say no paper is more welcome in my family than the Christian Cynosure. To stand boldly for the truth is what pleaseth the Father. May God bless you in your work.—HUGH NASH, Monmouth, Ill.

I was very much interested in a sketch of the editor's life published in the Cynosure; and was pleased to learn that he was a native of Rockingham, this State. I think you are doing a noble work for God and humanity; and I wish you God speed in it.—M. L. PIPER, N. Springfield, Vt.

LITERATURE.

ILLUSTRATED LETTERS FROM THE HOLY LAND. By Henry A. Harper. Pp. 160. Price 50c. Pacific Press Publishing Co., Oakland, Cal.

This is a volume of letters from a father to his children describing such incidents and observations of travel as came under his own experience. They tell of such scenes as are often referred to in the Bible, and which we may look upon to-day much as did Christ or David, since the habits of the people have changed little in centuries. In the hand of a child it is a companion for his Bible stories, giving him a more intelligent understanding of the Word. The style of the sketches though adapted to children is not childish, but simple and entertaining for all.

"The Living Christ," "Cathedral Echoes" and "Easter Interpreted," are three tastefully printed booklets published by the F. H. Revell & Co., of Chicago and New York. The first is a collection of poems by Mary Lowe Dickinson; the others a collation of Scripture passages and quotations from the poets by Rose Porter. The labor of publisher, author and compiler might have been better employed than in promoting a religious service unauthorized by the Word of God and which bears the name and stamp of a pagan festival baptized by Romish priests. The glorious hope of the resurrection is never promoted by such festivals.

Harvard University issues a comprehensive pamphlet stating in brief what the institution is, how young men may enter it, and how its degrees may be obtained. This document is of value to all who wish to know how a great university is managed. In connection is a smaller document describing the opportunities provided at this University for "religious worship, instruction and fellowship." As might be expected, where so much effort is needed to inform the public respecting the religious privileges at Harvard, these privileges are of an intellectual nature largely. Religion in its true inward and spiritual adaptation finds too little place at this wealthy and worldly institution.

An Indiana girl has taken the prize of $200 offered by the Cosmopolitan Magazine for "the best article of 4,000 words descriptive of farm life, with suggestions as to the best method of making farm life attractive and happy," only farmers' daughters being permitted to enter the competition. The design of the Cosmopolitan was to draw out an expression of opinion as to the important problems of happiness and discomfort on the modern farm, and it was so successful that more than 200 manuscripts, very many of them ably prepared, and representing nearly every State and Territory, were sent in. The prize was awarded by Prof. H. H. Boyesen and the editor of the Cosmopolitan, the final committee of award, to Miss Jennie E. Hooker, of McCutchanville, near Evansville, Ind. Her article appears in the April number of the Cosmopolitan, and the same number contains a very interesting article on the Farmers' Alliance, by the newly elected United States Senator Peffer, of Kansas.

The current number of the American Garden continues its charmingly illustrated articles on the "Economic Plants of Japan." The fruit-bearing vines are the particular product of the island kingdom here described. Large space is given to the orchids, and in several illustrated articles are described the native orchids of New England, the California favorites, some account of those easily cultivated, and a description of the newest and best plants of this family at a celebrated establishment in St. Albans, England. "Manures for the Vegetable Garden," and the "Symbolism of Flowers" are among the other titles.

The Converted Catholic for March contains a very interesting sketch, by the evangelist George C. Needham, of the conversion of an Irish Catholic. It inspires a prayer that all our Irish friends deluded by the papacy might be blessed also with saving faith in Christ. Rev. John Lee, of Lockport, Ill., who is one of the most earnest, able and consistent opponents of Romanism, continues his review of Cardinal Gibbon's book, "Our Christian Heritage."

Current Comment, in its latest issue, presents a biographical sketch of John Blair, one of the original Associate Justices of the first Supreme Court, who died A. D. 1800. Other legal miscellany of a popular character comprises the number.

Prof. F. W. Goodwin, of the Greek department of Harvard College, has received a copy of the manuscript of Aristotle, the first sent to this country.

"Blossoms of Spring"

Are the most welcome flowers which greet human eyes. The beautiful roses and other flowers raised in hot houses in winter are greatly loved and admired, but their enjoyment is limited to comparatively few, while the crocus or tulip looking up from the earth in simplicity and beauty, tells to thousands of people the glad news that for certainty winter is over and

SPRING HAS COME AGAIN.

At this season nearly every housewife makes her annual spring cleaning, and most people also recognize the value and importance of taking a good "Spring Medicine." The spring, of all the seasons of the year, is pre-eminently the one for giving careful attention to health.

During the winter, the system becomes to a certain extent clogged with waste, and the blood loaded with impurities, owing to lack of exercise, close confinement in poorly ventilated shops and homes, and other causes. This is the cause of the dull, sluggish, tired feeling so general at this season, and which must be overcome or the health may be ENTIRELY BROKEN DOWN.

The old-time domestic remedies are now generally discarded in favor of the standard blood purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has attained the greatest popularity all over the country as the favorite Spring Medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla soon expels the accumulation of impurities through the bowels, kidneys, liver, lungs and skin, and gives to the blood the purity, quality and tone necessary to good health. Thus the blood, which reaches every part of the body, carries strength and vigor.

THAT TIRED FEELING

is overcome, and the expression "I am so tired" gives way to—"I feel like a new person, thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla."

In thousands of homes Hood's Sarsaparilla is constantly kept, being recognized as the most reliable blood purifier and tonic. Reader, will you not give it a trial this spring?

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1891.

The concluding portion of President Blanchard's address is given this week. Dr. J. E. Roy, secretary of the American Missionary Association, writing for a number of copies, praises it as "a masterly argument of great power, because of its fairness." The secret lodge system is daily becoming a theme for popular investigation. It is most significant that the students of our colleges and seminaries are taking it up. Besides the institutions we have lately mentioned, the students of Beloit College, Wisconsin, and Northfield College, Minnesota, have before both the question of the danger to our popular institutions and to the church of Christ from the secret lodge.

IS THE GRIP A JUDGMENT OF GOD?

We know that "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," Rom. 1: 18. And this "grip" disease, now prevalent in many localities, looks and works very like "the wrath of God." It is taking off multitudes, and no one knows the cause. We read, "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing," Prov. 25: 2; and the name of this disease is not in the dictionary. Webster defines "grip" to be "a peculiar clasping of the hand by which members of secret societies know each other." That grip seems to have given the name to this terrible disease, which, it is said by the papers, has closed a hundred schools in the single State of Wisconsin, and is closing schools and invading families everywhere else. The doctors treat its symptoms, but know not its name even. The lodge names it "grip." If medical books gave its name and diagnosis, men would say, "It's folly to call it a judgment of God." "It's natural law." But it strikes like lightning, and men know not where it will hit, and see not the cloud from which it comes. But we know that "Clouds and darkness are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne," Ps. 97: 2; and this disease has every mark of a judgment of God inflicted on Israel for their idolatries. Every lodge altar and act of false worship is a direct insult to God. General wickedness is guilt; but a false altar is daring insult.

A JUDGMENT OF GOD HAS TWO SIDES: ONE LIGHT, THE OTHER DARKNESS.

One says, "If the grip be a judgment of God, sent in wrath, why does it fall on the good as well as on the wicked?"

Answer: Sometimes it does not. Providential punishments sometimes discriminate, as in Egypt. Darkness covered the idolaters; but there was light in the dwellings of the Israelites in Goshen. And also at the Red Sea, we read, Ex. 14: 19, 20, "The angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them. . . . And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these."

The result was death to the idolaters and life to the worshipers of the true God through their Messiah who was the Mediator, Christ. So in Rev. 16: 10, "The fifth angel poured out his vial on "the seat of the beast and his kingdom was full of darkness and they gnawed their tongues for pain." In the potato-rot famine in Ireland, there was scarcely any death in the province of Ulster, but the poor Irish who worshiped the Romish beast and his false priests, died by thousands, gnawing their tongues for hunger.

But a cyclone does not stop when it comes to a line fence of a godly man's farm. And when "wrath to the uttermost" came on the Jews who killed Christ Jesus, and called down his blood on them and their children, the "woe" fell on those women who were with child and gave suck; when the Roman soldiers sacked the city, the Christians had to flee to the mountains leaving their home and home-comforts. But those Christians were not wholly sinless, nor were the crucifying rabble wholly destitute of goodness. And this gives a mixed result. So, in our slavery war, the the meanest pro-slavery people were the Northern copperheads and baptized worldlings, and pro-slavery ministers in the churches. So God punished both sides. Though the Legrees and man-monsters who sold their children as slaves, whipped mothers, and sold babes, bore, and are still bearing, the brunt of the terrible "judgments of God."

And, besides, God's providences here project themselves into eternity. And martyrs who stand at the stake here, stand nearest the throne there. These "follow the Lamb whithersover he goeth." But even here, as a rule, it goes well with the righteous and ill with the wicked. "Thou shalt not be afraid for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon day. Only with thine eyes shalt thou see the reward of the wicked. But it shall not come nigh thee." Ps. 91. The very same hail-stones of affliction which fall on the heads of the wicked, melt into mercy drops on the heads of the righteous. And when to purify men they are put into the furnace of affliction there is one with them "like unto the Son of God." Dan. 3:11. And the flame does not kindle on them.

This "grip" is plainly a judgment of God; and it is amazing that no church proposes to fast before God, and remove the false altars which are bringing down his wrath.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

This is now one of the most popular mission boards in the world. The mission of Christ was to mankind, but specially to the poor. The field of this Association is the ex-slaves, the "poor white trash" of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the Chinese and the remnant Indians.

The Association was born to correct other mission boards. The Mendi Africans seized and shipped by two Spanish slave-traders who were pirates by American law, were saved and educated by Lewis Tappan, who applied to the American Board to take them and start a mission in the Mendi country. But that Board then had missionaries who were slave-holders, whose slaves were held under laws which forbade their being taught to read the Bible.

Tappan, Joshua Leavitt and others, started the American Missionary Association, which, as its sainted secretary, Geo. Whipple, said: "Was founded for reform." From a despised and hated board, it is now standing as a sword of God over the rights of the least of Christ's human brethren on earth. It receives between three and four hundred thousand dollars a year, and the needs of its work still outrun its receipts.

The lodge, which was the secret shield of slavery, organized the rebellion in its lodge rooms, and still excludes the colored people from its membership, resolved to shut them from schools and from voting, to continue their dishumanized condition, and so continue the national brothelism of slavery.

The A. M. A. has lately sent Joseph Cook's great speech on "Disloyal Secret Oaths," to each of its five hundred missionaries. Secretary Bliss has sent the same to his teachers in Utah; and Dr. Tompkins has sent the same to his Illinois home missionaries, who are in connection with the old mother American Home Missionary Society formed in 1816.

We regret that Secretary Clark of this venerable old society takes the ground that secretaries, as such, should express no opinion against the lodges which are night vampires, sucking the life-blood of their churches, while they fan them to sleep by the wings of their non-committalism. They have seventeen hundred ministers in their employ; and some of them have been Masons, in sworn brotherhood with Jews, deists, and infidels. This state of things cannot stand. Dr. Morehouse, Secretary of Baptist Home Missions, has sent Mr. Cook's speech to his eight hundred missionaries, and we trust that by the time our next conference meets, we shall be able to report that Secretaries Kincaid and Clark will have given their regiment of 1,700 clergymen, the information and argument contained in Mr. Cook's address.

The Congregationalists who pay to that great society half a million dollars yearly, when they learn the state of things, will object to supporting missions which hob-nob with the murder and blasphemy of Masonic lodges, and the swindling puerilities of their imitating offspring.

*THE CHRISTIAN APOSTOLATE.

REV. DR. EVARTS' LAST BOOK.

The day before Dr. Evarts died he finished the writing of this book. When his wife remonstrated with him about the exertion, saying that he should spare himself, he is reported to have said: "My time is very short." It is a solid, valuable volume, packed with important truth, and is, we believe, by all means the most useful of his literary labors. He may well be satisfied to have this the final effort of his earthly life. It is an attempt to bring into rapid review the main facts as to the composition and results of the Christian religion,—a study of "the philosophy of the plan of salvation."

Part first gives us the "Factors of the Christian Apostolate." The testimony of miracles, the testimony of prophecy, the testimony of atonement, the testimony of the Holy Spirit, the testimony of probational promise, and consecrated individualism, are its chapters. They constitute an interesting and rapid review of Christian evidences, and are exceedingly valuable as confirmations of the faith of believers who have not access to large numbers of books bearing on such topics.

Part second treats of the church as an evangelizing power. It is the most overwhelming indictment of the "Board" system of carrying forward mission work at home and abroad that we have ever seen. It is a plea for direct missionary labor on the part of individuals and churches. He holds that the work of the missionary society should not be to receive money and employ secretaries whose business it shall be to judge of the qualifications of intending missionaries, but to diffuse information and encourage churches to send out laborers, in whose ability and piety they shall have confidence to do the work.

That there are many evils connected with the present system all know. Salaries are in many instances too high, and there is an air of commercialism about the whole work that is as far removed as possible from the spirit of the Gospels and the acts of the Apostles. Whether it would, however, be best to make each individual church responsible for the character and ability of men laboring in foreign fields, is a grave question. Such men as Hudson Taylor and Bishop Taylor, are not to be set forward as representatives of a numerous class. Those who believe in free missions will, however, find much ammunition in this book.

Another special feature is the earnestness with which Dr. Evarts protests against sectism among our churches, we do not remember to have seen the criminal waste and folly of denominationalism more forcefully set forth by any writer anywhere. "Is it no evil that in evangelizing new territories, instead of forming one church, with common ordinances and discipline, conciliating fellowship and unity, sometimes half a dozen churches are formed, and supported by missionary funds, fostering the rivalry if not the antagonism of sects?" he says, and we all answer: It is, but what shall we do? There is no doubt but that these sect divisions are a shame and weakness to Christendom. It is equally evident that personal fidelity to convictions, coupled with respect for the convictions of other persons, would abolish every denominational organization in the world and establish fellowship among all the real servants of Jesus Christ in all localities. We shall have this when Christ comes, perhaps not before. Meantime offenses must come and floods of ink are poured forth in bad logic to justify what is condemned in the Word of God as clearly as the English language can condemn anything.

Part third in this remarkable book, is a review of the progress which the world has made under the influence of the Christian Apostolate. Civil liberty, education, philanthropy, charities, reforms, all are traced to their source in the religion of the man of Calvary.

The book is one which will richly repay perusal, and we hope for it a wide circulation. If we were to make any adverse criticism, it would be that

* THE CHRISTIAN APOSTOLATE. By Rev. Dr. W. W. Evarts. Price $1.50. Pp. 533. Fleming H. Revell, publisher, 150 Madison St., Chicago; 12 Bible House, Astor Place, New York.

Dr. Evarts entirely omits the secret lodge question, which is one of the most important of our age. It should not be omitted in such a work as this. The book is printed and bound as Mr. Revell's books usually are, and is a fine specimen of the book-makers' work.

Chicago voters have five candidates for the office of Mayor. Past Grand Master Cregier, who is boosted by the Democratic ward gangs and the lowest of the saloon and gambling slums; Carter Harrison, also a high Mason, who is an independent Democratic candidate with a large personal following; Morgan, the nominee of the socialist and anarchist class; Hempstead Washburne, a lawyer, Republican machine candidate; and Elmer Washburn, nominated by the Citizens' Committee of one hundred. The latter has been tried in public office, and is believed to be a man of strict integrity, whose election would mean the honest enforcement of law against the saloons, the brothels and gambling dens. He is supported by the "patriotic" secret societies so-called, but we do not know as he is connected with any of them. It is a critical hour for Chieago. Two years more of Cregierism would mean ruin.

—The Way of Life, Atlanta, Ga., publishes a portion of Dr. Carradine's sermon in its March 11th number. The Gospel Banner of Berlin, Ontario, Canada, has begun the publication of that remarkable address entire. It will be issued soon from this office in neat pamphlet form.

—The Graphic, our popular Chicago illustrated weekly, makes its March 7th a Congregational number, and gives its first page to a fine large portrait of Philo Carpenter, as the founder of that denomination in this city. An article by Dr. Gilbert of the Advance, with a number of excellent portraits, on the progress of the Congregational churches in Chicago, is interesting history.

—The contribution on the practice of the early Christians respecting Sabbath observance on the 10th page of this number, was sent us by Bro. John A. Conant of Willimantic, Conn. It was written by a brother in that State whose name we have lost. Its practical good sense impressed Bro. Conant, and he immediately copied it for our columns. Dr. Crafts writes to urge the matter of special prayer for the Sabbath upon all Christians. Let the appeal find a hearty response.

—J. E. Wolfe, the evangelist, has begun the publication of a monthly paper with the unique name "John Three-Sixteen," to represent the mission work among the Indians at Vinita, I. T., in which he and his wife are engaged. Bro. Wolfe is an earnest man and guarantees an interesting paper, which deals fearlessly with popular public evils. He needs help for his mission enterprise, for providing buildings, tools, books, etc. The Student's Missionary Band of Wheaton College lately sent $15.00 to aid in providing for the manual labor school.

—The Arkansas Baptist, of Little Rock, seems to be the organ and leader of denominational thought for the Baptist churches of that State. The last number has a large picture of a heathen temple where it is proposed to practice in various rooms as much as possible of the pagan rites with which Greeks and Egyptians were familiar in the centuries before Christ. But instead of condemning such idolatry and showing it to be sorcery, spiritual adultery and devil-worship which all men should condemn, this paper treasonably praises the temple and its orgies. Why? It is for the Masonic lodge.

—The clothing manufacturers of Rochester, New York, have been compelled to break with the Powderly society. This is the explicit language of their manifesto: "About two years ago the Knights of Labor established itself among the employes in this trade in Rochester. Its local exponents have not been generally selected from residents of this city, but from persons who have come here apparently for the purpose of promoting the peculiar traits of that organization; and since the time of its organization it has tried by all means at its disposal to usurp the rights and privileges of employes by interference, threats and extortions. It has fomented distrust and jealously among the employes, and trusted employes have been compelled to violate the confidence reposed in them. These labor agitators have endeavored to divert trade from our markets by threats, and the growth of the clothing business in this city has been greatly retarded and its prosperity checked by improper interference and practices, aside from the tribute in money which has been exacted until now the conditions are unbearable and inconsistent with our vested rights, and we have determined to throw off this tyranny and provide safeguards for future security."

—The secrecy observed during the cremation of Emma Abbott, the well-known singer, three weeks ago, has caused a change in Pittsburg city regulations. It has been decided a dangerous privilege to cremate secretly, and hereafter a public permit must be taken as in the case of burial. Why not as reasonable that societies which pretend to promote the public virtues of temperance or patriotism, or run insurance societies or political parties, should also be open? The whole secret society system is most irrational and our children will be amazed at the folly of their parents in permitting this evil to grow to its present proportions.

—It having been circulated in some quarters that a scarlet fever epidemic prevailed among the students of Wheaton College, President C. A. Blanchard writes to correct the erroneous report. There has been but a single case of that disease among the students, and none of the diphtheria as reported. Several cases of the grip have appeared, but none of serious nature. These diseases have prevailed among the public school children in another part of the town, but by careful isolation the students have been spared with the exceptions noted. The attendance during the winter term has been unusually good. The term closed last Friday to give the young people a week's vacation, and spring term opens on the 31st of March.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul, has been engaged by a number of Swedish Lutheran churches of Minnesota, to deliver a course of lectures on the lodge in different localities in that State.

—Rev. Henry M. Bissell, missionary of the American Board to Mexico, has located at El Fuerte, province of Linaloa. Since his return last December he has canvassed the western part of the Mexican republic in company with Rev. Mr. Crawford, and this location is the result of their investigation.

—Rev. O. B. Milligan, son of the late beloved Dr. A. M. Milligan, of Pittsburg, was recently, with four others, debarred from preaching in the Reformed Presbyterian church at East End, Pittsburg, because of alleged liberal sentiments. He has now formally accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian church of Oil City, Pa.

—A letter from Peter Caulkett, of Allegan, Mich., speaks in high commendation of Agent Hawley's address in that city. It was, he says, "all that could be desired to show the evils of the lodge system. He clearly demonstrated in his argument that Christians cannot be yoked up with unbelievers in the lodge and retain their Christian integrity."

—An exchange writing of a prominent advertiser in the Cynosure, says: "It is a gratifying fact that Mr. James Pyle, one of the most prominent business men of New York, is an earnest, humble and largely generous Christian man. He has struggled against difficulties, being totally blind, yet in spite of this he has succeeded in building up a large business and amid all his cares and infirmities, has honored that God who has honored him."

—A sudden visitation of death early last Friday morning, took from the arms of President C. A. Blanchard and his wife, a dear little daughter of about two and a half years of age, who had until noon of the day before been full of bright and joyful life. Medical attendance had been summoned the evening before, and the little one went quietly into a sleep from which she never woke on earth. The Cynosure readers will join the large circle of friends in their sympathy with the parents in this sudden and sore affliction.

—Rev. John S. Smallwood of Virginia, the young Negro orator, has signed a contract with Right Hon. W. H. Bryan and General Charles H. Claxton, who were sent to this country by the United Literary and Lecturing Society of England, to go to Europe next October and deliver lectures on "The race problem in America," and "The Negro in American politics." The contract is for six months, price $6,980. The Association will pay all expenses and also provide a secretary.

STUDENTS FOR MISSIONS.

The Student Volunteer movement for foreign missions, whose first International Convention was held at Cleveland, Ohio, from Feb. 26th to March 1st, dates its organization from the Mt. Hermon Conference for Bible Study of July, 1886. After a history of less than five years, its roll numbered, at the time of the convention, 6,200 members, of whom 321 had already sailed.

Of general organization this movement has almost nothing. The only bond of union between the bands is the common pledge, "We are willing and desirous, God permitting, to beeome foreign missionaries," and the inspiration which comes from the common watchword, "The evangelization of the world in this generation."

No one who attended the convention was allowed to remain doubtful concerning the entire possibility and practicability of the sentiment of this key-note. "It does not mean," urged Robert Speer, "the conversion of the world in this generation. It does not mean the Christianization or civilization of the world. Our commission reads, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation;' and the situation which we have to face is that this command has not been obeyed. We care, of course, with what success that Word is preached; but the necessity laid upon us is that this generation shall not pass away until every man, woman and child shall have received the message sent him by his Saviour so long ago, and the responsibility for its acceptance or rejection shall rest upon the individual himself, where it belongs, not where it does at present, on the church of God."

The wideness of the call was greatly insisted on. "All should go and go to all," said Dr. Pierson at Northfield in 1886. "Christ says to every sinner, 'Come'; to every Christian, 'Go,'" said Dr. Gordon, at this convention. "The one command is as universal as the other!" Said one and another, "Christ's last command puts us all on the go. It needs the special call, closely defined, to stay at home." "The need is the call." "The presumption is all in favor of the foreign work." More than a hundred missionaries, board secretaries, and others, addressed earnest appeals and counsels to the more than five hundred student delegates assembled, sometimes voicing literal messages from those > "Who call us to deliver > Their land from error's chain."

Few appeals will linger longer in the volunteer's ears than Mr. Wilder's final burning call "to be at the front in what may be the final charge." The convention must have given a decided impetus to this great movement. D.

—The Cosmopolitan magazine which we are enabled to offer to our subscribers at very favorable rates, is widely recognized as one of the most interesting of our illustrated publications. Its publishers are anxious to secure permanent subscribers and make the Cynosure subscribers an excellent offer. It contains yearly some 1,500 pages of reading matter, a large proportion of which is finely illustrated. A profitable investment is offered in the Cynosure and Cosmopolitan for $3.00 to new subscribers to both; $3.50 to old subscribers to both; and $3.25 to all our present subscribers who do not take the magazine.

—Actual experience with garden cultivators warrants the highest commendation of the Manweight Cultivator which we advertise this week and offer free (except freight) to those who get up clubs. The ordinary cultivator is pushed by the arms and is hard work at times. This new machine is pushed forward easily by the simple weight of the body. There is no garden tool a boy likes so well as a cultivator. With this new machine a boy can cultivate a quarter to half an acre and think it play. The wheels are high so he can make a team of his playmates and pull it through the soil. Before the first of May we should be glad to add a hundred clubs of eighteen to our list in exchange for this useful and beautiful implement.

THE HOME.

THE DAY OF LIGHT.

This is the day of light:
Let there be light to-day;
O Day-spring, rise upon our night,
And chase its gloom away.

This is the day of rest:
Our failing strength renew;
On weary brain and troubled breast,
Shed thou thy freshening dew.

This is the day of peace:
Thy peace our spirits fill;
Bid thou the blasts of discord cease,
The waves of strife be still.

This is the day of prayer:
Let earth to heaven draw near,
Lift up our hearts to seek thee there;
Come down to meet us here.

This is the first of days:
Send forth thy quickening breath,
And wake dead souls to love and praise,
O Vanquisher of death!

IS IT RIGHT?

BY PROF. AUSTIN PHELPS, D.D.

Some forty-five years ago the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, then President of Amherst College, used to preach frequently in the adjoining towns. To do this he often crossed the Connecticut river on Sabbath morning in a ferry-boat, and returned by the same conveyance in the evening. In accordance with the pious usage of those times he endeavored to "improve his opportunities," in imitation of Him who taught by the well of Samaria. He unexpectedly met his match one morning in the quick-witted ferryman. "Oh, yes," said the latter, "I want to save my soul; I believe all you say, but the fact is I have no time for such things. On week-days I have to work my farm while the boy works the ferry, till when the nights come I am too sleepy to know whether I have a soul. Then when Sabbath comes I have to be here to carry you parsons across the river. I haven't had a passenger this morning except parsons." So in substance the story ran, as Dr. Humphrey related it to a friend. He went home and revised his observance of the Lord's Day, and the ferryman lost a Sabbath customer.

We pass on about thirty years, and a tall, grave man, over sixty years of age, whose look reminds one of "that disciple whom Jesus loved," is seen walking from the west bank of the river Schuylkill at Philadelphia on a Sabbath morning, and after preaching twice and presiding at a third service in the evening, walking back to his country home, while horse-cars, a score or more, are passing him back and forth. The distance is over three miles each way. It is Rev. Albert Barnes who thus endeavors to honor his faith in the Christian Sabbath, which he devoutly believes to be violated by the running of the street-cars on that day. He has lately led his brethren and the good people of Philadelphia in a protest against the innovation, and his Sabbath walks are his individual tribute to the same end.

We pass on fifteen years more. The scene is shifted, we will suppose, to an academic town not a thousand miles from either the Connecticut or the Schuylkill river. The steam-cars run to and from the neighboring metropolis, not as frequently, but as regularly, on the Lord's Day as on any other. Conductors, brakemen, engineers, oilmen and other adjuncts of a railway train—and we are told that a well-manned train requires the service, on the average, of about twenty men—are employed as on a week-day. They know no difference between secular and holy time. Life to them is one long treadmill of secularities. If they should chance to be moved by a tract given to them by a Sabbath traveler to petition that their right to the Lord's Day and its refreshing liberties should be restored to them, they would probably be told that railway trains cannot run on scruples; that they require a steel conscience as well as steel rails, and that if the petitioners do not think so their services are no longer wanted. A hundred hungry men to each one of them stand ready to take their places; wife and children at home must have bread, and if the petitioners try to reason the matter with their superiors they probably end with pocketing their wages—and their scruples. The train runs as before, and twenty men have no Sabbath; and the consciences of twenty men are indurated, it may be for a life-time.

On the line of that railroad some two or three hundred preachers, more or less, live; and many of them, not a large minority, perhaps, but an increasing one, use the cars as freely on Sabbath as on Monday. Anomalies easily grow to usages in such things. Distance appears to have little concern with the license which these itinerant ministers take with sacred time. They ride any distance which can be traveled in season for the morning service, and nobody audibly questions it. Nevertheless it is questioned. The traveling ministers on the Lord's Day are surrounded by a great crowd of witnesses, in more worlds than one. Approving angels, we trust, hear their faithful sermons and devout intercessions—approving, that is, the sermon and the prayer; but three or four hundred young students in the academic town listen also, thinking the while not so much of the prayer and sermon as of that which went before. They ask each other and ask their instructors: "Is it right for these ministers to go and come in the Sabbath trains? If right for them, why not for us?" Next Sabbath they ask leave to go to Boston to attend a "sacred concert" on the Common—one of the improvements of these latter days for the spiritual culture of that goodly city and its suburbs. And when they receive a negative, and are required to attend church and hear the ministers instead, they do not quite see the reasons of things. Is anybody else wiser?

Dr. Humphrey, Mr. Barnes and these later itinerant divines have all doubtless agreed in one thing. They have all lauded with unmeasured respect that act of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, in 1620, in which they bore witness to their reverence for the Christian Sabbath by remaining with their sick ones and little children another day in the cabin of their leaky ships, after a tedious and unhealthy passage, that they might not use unworthily the Lord's time.

Which of these reverend, and we would willingly believe, equally conscientious men, have been right about this thing? If the query admits of doubt, which have chosen the safer side? Have the Pilgrims probably discovered, in a more tonic atmosphere than that of Plymouth Bay, that they bore ascetic penance in the Mayflower and the Speedwell for a sickly scruple? In the deed which we recall so reverently on Forefathers' Day, was their tribute to history to the end of time only a freak of superstition—the thing which above all others they abhorred? Did Dr. Humphrey and Mr. Barnes, in their modest imitation of the fathers, expose to the world's contempt the fussiness of a pettifogging conscience? Ought we to place all these reverend men, in our estimate of character, by the side of George Fox in his praying over the cut of his Quaker coat, and the width of the rim of his Quaker hat? If so, it is time that we all see it thus, and see the reason why. Such feeble brethren as Dr. Humphrey and Mr. Barnes let us shield in compassionate silence. On Forefathers' Day let us frankly place the scrupulous delay of the landing at Plymouth along side of Tower Hill in Salem. Let us teach our children that both represent obsolete blunders of a conscience not illumined by the dawn of these better days. Then, for ourselves, let us endeavor to mount the spiritual heights of the "sacred concerts" on Boston Common, in which the "Metropolitan Band" shall lead our devotions in (we quote from the advertisements of last July and August) the "concert waltzes of Strauss" and "La Somnambula of Cavallini."

An eminent Boston merchant, a man not given to narrow Sabbatarianism, puts this whole question of the observance of the Lord's Day in a nutshell, in words which suburban ministers may wisely take in admonition to themselves. He says, in a letter which lies before me: "The wedge once entered, there is no resisting its progress. We bid fair to have a Parisian Sabbath here before long, unless Christian people are willing to deny themselves, and do nothing which may give their neighbor an excuse for taking another step." The suburbars of a large city are to a great extent responsible for its moral decline. They help to fill its theatres; they patronize its "sacred concerts," which are a burlesque on the name; they fill large spaces in its Sabbath trains. Cut off the suburban patronage, and could one of these sources of detriment to public morals be supported? Doubtful.—Congregationalist.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

ON WHICH DAY OF THE WEEK IS IT?

Let the Word of God decide. Please read Matt. 28: 1–8; Mark 16: 1–9; Luke 24: 1–12. Here we learn and it is admitted by all Christians that Christ rose on the first day of the week, and appeared to his disciples. And in John 20: 26 we learn that on the first day of the next week he appeared to them again. And in Acts 20: 7 we learn that the disciples came together to celebrate the Lord's Supper on the first day of the week, and Paul preached unto them ready to depart on the morrow. Now if the seventh day was to be the Christian Sabbath, why did not Paul preach and celebrate the Lord's Supper on the seventh day, and depart on the first day? In 1 Cor. 16: 2 we find the apostle teaching that the collection for the poor churches should be taken on the first day of the week. Now if Paul did not mean to have the first day kept as the Christian Sabbath, why did he and the disciples not come together on the seventh day and preach the Gospel and have the collection taken upon that day? for surely it would seem to be the time to take up a collection when the church was together to send to the poor churches. We may search the New Testament through and nowhere do we find the apostles preaching to believers in Christ on the seventh day of the week. Neither do we find that they came together on the seventh day to celebrate the Lord's Supper. Now we ask those who believe the seventh day is the Christian Sabbath to tell us why the apostles did not preach to the Christians on that day?

Now let us turn to another class of passages, that I think will help us to understand the Sabbath question. In Acts 13: 14 we find Paul in the synagogue on the seventh day. Read through the chapter and note from the 38th verse to the end, and we shall learn the result of his being there. The seventh day was and still is the Sabbath of the Jews, and when Paul would preach to Jews he went into their synagogues on their Sabbath. Again, 17: 1–4, we find them in the synagogue on the seventh day, and we learn what for. Again in the 18: 4 we learn that Paul reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath day. Read verses 5 to 8, and learn the effect of his being there.

Here I rest in this, that when Paul preached or reasoned, and persuaded the Jews he went into the synagogue on their Sabbath which was the seventh day. But nowhere is it said they came together on the seventh day to celebrate the Lord's Supper, or to preach to the Christian church. But it is said they did come together for this purpose on the first day of the week. Here we may learn that the seventh day Sabbath was in commemoration of the world; and the first day Sabbath was in commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, and was to be the Christian Sabbath, as is plain from the teaching and the practice of the apostles, and we will do well to follow them.

Here were two Sabbaths together. The Mosaic dispensation died on the Sabbath, and the dispensation of grace commenced on the first day of the week and was thenceforward to be the Christian Sabbath in commemoration of Christ's resurrection, and the celebration of the Lord's Supper shows forth his death until he comes. Now I submit that all those who believe in the seventh day Sabbath, should keep all the ceremonial law. But this will not do. Please read Heb. 10: 1–9. This is plain, I think, to all who will accept the Word of God as the only rule of faith.

LITTLE GIRLS WISER THAN OLD MEN.

Sleighing was just over. The snow still lay in the dvors, and little streams ran through the village. In an alley between two dvors a large pool had collected from the dung-heaps. And near this pool were standing two little girls from either dvor,—one of them younger, and the other older.

The mothers of the two little girls had dressed them in new sarafans,—the younger one's blue, the elder's of yellow-flowered damask. Both were tied with red handkerchiefs. The little girls, after mass was over, had gone to the pool, showed each other their dresses, and began to play. And the whim seized them to splash in the water. The younger one was just going to wade into the pool with her slippers on; but the older one said:

"Don't do it, Malashka—your mother will scold. I'm going to take off my shoes and stockings—you take off yours."

The little girls took off their shoes and stockings, held up their clothes, and went into the pool so as to meet. Malashka waded in up to her ankles, and says,—

"It's deep, Akulka—I am afraid."

"This is nothing. It won't be any deeper. Come right toward me."

They began to get nearer each other. And Akulka says,—

"Be careful, Malashka; don't splash, but go more slowly."

But the words were hardly out of her mouth when Malashka put her foot down into the water; it splashed straight on Akulka's sarafan. The sarafan was well splattered, and the water also flew into her nose and eyes.

Akulka saw the spots on her sarafan; she became angry with Malashka, scolded her, ran after her, tried to slap her.

Malashka was frightened at seeing what mischief she had done, leaped out of the pool, and hastened home.

Akulka's mother happened to pass by, saw her little daughter's sarafan spattered and her skirt bedaubed.

"How did you get yourself all covered with dirt, you good for nothing?"

"Malashka spattered me on purpose."

Akulka's mother caught Malashka, and struck her on the back of the head.

Malashka howled along the whole street.

Malashka's mother came out.

"What are you striking my daughter for?" She began to scold her neighbor. A word for a word: the women got into a quarrel. The muzhiks hastened out; a great crowd gathered on the street. All are screaming. No one listens to anybody. They quarrel and the one jostled the other; there was a general row eminent: but an old woman, Akulka's grandmother interfered.

She came out into the midst of the muzhiks, and began to speak: "What are you doing, neighbors? What day is it? We ought to rejoice. And you are doing such wrong things!"

They heed not the old woman: they almost strike her. And the old woman would never have succeeded in persuading them, had it not been for Akulka and Malashka. While the babas were keeping up the quarrel Akulka cleaned her sarafanchik, and came out again to the pool in the alley. She picked up a little stone, and began to clear away the earth by the pool so as to let the water run into the street.

While she was cleaning it out, Malashka also came along and began to help her to make a little gutter with a splinter.

The muzhiks were just coming to blows when the water reached the street, flowing through the gutter made by the little girls; and it went straight to the very spot where the old woman was trying to separate the muzhiks.

The little girls are chasing it, one on one side, and the other on the other, of the runnel.

"Catch it, Malashka! catch it!" cries Akulka. Malashka also tries to say something, but laughter prevents.

Thus the little girls chase it and laugh as the splinter swims down the runnel.

They ran right into the midst of the muzhiks. The old woman saw them, and she says to the muzhiks:

"You should fear God, muzhiks! It was on account of the same little girls that you picked up a quarrel, but they forgot all about it long ago; dear little things, they are playing together lovingly again."

The muzhiks looked at the little girls, and felt ashamed. Then the muzhiks laughed at themselves, and went home to their dvors.

"If ye are not like children ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—Leon Tolstoi.

If you could endow the smallest insect with the sense of the beautiful and the infinite, it would see God, and this vision would render it immortal.

The arms we sharpen for a conflict to-day may be used, perhaps a century hence, in contests we have not as yet anticipated.

TEMPERANCE.

HIGH LICENSE IN ELISHA'S TIME.

At the Walnut Avenue Congregational church yesterday, says the Boston Daily Traveler of March 9th, Rev. Dr. A. H. Plumb read the following paper instead of a short sermon to children before the regular discourse, introducing it by a few words of explanation.

The last two Sabbath-school lessons, he said, have shown Elisha healing the fountain of bad waters at Jericho, and raising to life the Shunammite's son. The cure of Naaman the leper, narrated in the next lesson, seems to have occurred considerably later in the prophet's life, after an interval concerning which but scanty records have been preserved. The following manuscript, however, which has lately come to light, if it could be deemed genuine, would seem to belong to this period, and properly to follow the fourth chapter of the second Book of Kings. While its antiquity is not vouched for by scholars, and, as all can see, its charges of wicked conduct in the good Elisha are utterly incredible, still, it has been thought by some to resemble certain ancient records in at least one point, for we read they "are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, and for instruction in righteousness."

1. And it came to pass after many days that Elisha the man of God said unto Gehazi his servant, Arise, let us return unto Jericho and drink again of the spring whereof the Lord said, I have healed these waters.

2. And they arose and went.

3. And as they came over against Jericho, and were yet afar off, behold an evil report met them, and it was noised abroad throughout all the region round about.

4. And men said unto the prophet, Alas! Master, for the bitter waters are broken out again, and sorrow and death are upon all the land.

5. Now the thing was on this wise.

6. For there dwelt nigh unto Jericho a certain great man, whose name was Nabal, and as was his name, so was he, for Nabal was his name and folly was with him, for he was a son of Belial, and he did evil in the sight of the Lord continually.

7. And he said within himself, What man is there that knoweth not that certain men of this city, lewd fellows of the baser sort, aforetime, ere the waters were healed of the prophet, did delight themselves in the bitter waters, and ofttimes drank thereof themselves and became drunken, and gave to their companions and made them drunken also.

8. Go to now, peradventure I shall be able to recover the bitter waters, thereby shall much gain come to me, and my house shall be made great.

9. As he spake in his heart so did he.

10. For straightway he called unto him his young men, and said unto them, Dig.

11. And they dug therefore and with much travail they clave the rock asunder and dug exceeding deep, even unto the slime.

12. For as it was in the vale of Siddim, which was full of slime pits, where the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fell as they fled, so was it in the plain of Jericho, save that the rock covered the slime.

13. Then drew Nabal and his young men bitter waters from the slime pit, and sold unto all the sons of Belial who came thither by thousands and tens of thousands to drink thereof.

14. And when they were well drunken they strove mightily among themselves, and many fell down sore wounded, and many were slain, and their wives and their children made great lamentation, and the land groaned by reason of the burden thereof.

15. But Nabal waxed exceeding great, and he had silver and gold in abundance, and flocks and herds without number, and men servants and maid servants to do his bidding, and in all the land none was so mighty as he.

16. And when Elisha the man of God heard thereof he was grieved in spirit.

17. And when he was come to Jericho, he entered into the school of the prophets and sent and called Nabal, and said unto him,

18. Why doset thou such things?

19. For I hear of thine evil doings by all this people.

20. Nay, my son, for it is no good report that I hear, thou makest the Lord's people to transgress, for thou hast wrought folly in Israel.

21. Now this Nabal was a crafty man, and a spirit of subtlety was in him.

22. Therefore he humbled himself before Elisha and spake softly unto him, and said:

23. I beseech thee, O thou man of God, be not wroth with me concerning this thing.

24. As for these men of naught, as the Lord liveth a curse had fallen upon them for some evil that they had done, and if they had not lifted up their hands against each other, perchance the Syrians had cut them off, or a pestilence had come upon them, or they had been torn of bears.

25. And as for their substance, behold now is it not in thine hand?

26. Speak now, I pray thee, unto thy servant and appoint unto him a portion of silver and of gold, and it shall be that every month at the feast of the new moon, thy servant shall send it unto the sons of the prophets.

27. For thou knowest they are very many, and lo! they are very poor; silver and gold have they none, and their raiment is waxed old, and their corn is consumed, and ofttimes they are an hungered, and grievously distressed.

28. Then shall their basket and their store be full, and the school of the prophets shall flourish like a palm tree, and thy name shall be great throughout all Israel.

29. Then there came out a spirit and stood and said, I will go out and be a lying spirit in the mouth of the prophet.

30. And thus it came to pass that Elisha was deceived, and he said, the thing proceedeth from the Lord.

31. And he hearkened unto Nabal and gave sentence that it should be as he required.

32. And he appointed unto him a portion, month by month, of silver and of gold for the sons of the prophets, yea, and of corn also, even a set store.

33. And he said, no man shall set upon thee to do thee harm.

34. Thus did Elisha make a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.

35. And Elisha turned and gat himself unto Carmel, and he wist not that the Lord had departed from him.

36. And after a long time Elisha said, I will arise and go into the valley of Jordan.

37. And as he journeyed he drew nigh unto Shunem.

38. And he said unto Gehazi, his servant, Run, now, I pray thee, and say unto this Shunammite

39. My Master hath heard how thou returnedst from the land of the Philistines when the years of the famine were ended, and how the King restored unto thee thy lands, and how thou dwellest here in peace these years;

40. Now, therefore, if it please thee, as he passeth by, he will turn in hither and eat bread as aforetime.

41. And Gehazi did so, and the Shunammite answered and said, Go, call thy master.

42. Then came forth the Shunammite to meet Elisha, and she bowed not before him to do him honor, as had been her wont; but as she looked steadfastly upon him, Elisha perceived that her countenance was exceeding sad, and her soul was vexed within her.

43. Then spake she unto him and said, Enter thou not into mine house, neither come nigh my dwelling. The chamber upon the wall is not for thee, O thou false prophet.

44. Did I desire a son of thee? Did I not say, Do not deceive me. Wherefore didst thou restore my son to life that a worse thing might come upon him?

45. For lo! on a certain day he went down to Jericho and fell among thy thieves, and they stripped him and wounded him and left him half dead.

46. For he was enticed of thy servant Nabal, whom thou hast set up, that no man can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?

47. And when my son revived, he said, I will seek it yet again, for because of the bitter waters he had drunken, an evil spirit hath taken hold upon him that he cannot escape.

48. And behold he hath wasted my substance with riotous living, nay, ofttimes he hath lifted up his hand against the mother that bare him, and hath smitten me to the ground, and hath cursed me to my face.

49. Oh, wo is me! Would God thou hadst left him when he died in his innocency! Depart from me, for mine eyes cannot look upon thee. And she veiled her face, and turned and entered her house, and she wept aloud.

50. Then was Elisha astonied with a great astonishment, and he answered her never a word, but immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales, and he saw his sin, and he set his face towards the way by which he came, and he tarried not, but returned speedily unto Carmel.

51. And he entered into his house, and hasted and put sackcloth on his loins and ashes on his head, and sat in the dust, and fasted and prayed before the Lord seven days.

52. And the Lord hearkened to Elisha and forgave him his great transgression, and the Spirit came again upon him.

53. And he arose and came to Jericho and said unto Nabal, Thy money perish with thee. I have sinned in that I have shed innocent blood. Thy covenant with death shall be annulled, and thy agreement with hell shall not stand.

54. Then called he mightily on the name of the Lord, and the Lord hearkened, and fire came down out of heaven and smote the mountain that was over against the slime pit of Nabal, that it was cleft in twain.

55. Then the Spirit of the Lord came upon the whole multitude of the people, and they rose up with one heart, and every man and every woman brought a stone, of those which fell from the mountain, and they cast them into the pit, and it was choked.

56. And thus it was that no man thereafter even unto this day could draw forth the bad waters from the pit of slime.

57. Then called Elisha for men that had skill to carve upon stone, and they graved upon the face of the rock which the Lord had smitten, these words:

58. Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken also.

59. He that walketh righteously, he that despiseth the gain of oppression, that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, he shall dwell on high, his place shall be the munitions of rocks, bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The fate of the scoffer.—vs. 1, 2. Samaria, besieged by the Syrians, was in the last extremity of famine. The king, horrified by a case of cannibalism of the most revolting type, which had come under his own personal notice, vows the instant execution of Elisha. It does not clearly appear why he held the prophet responsible, when he himself, a worthy son of Jezebel (ch. 6: v. 32), had brought this heavy judgment on the people by his evil conduct. But wicked men in times of public calamity are apt to ascribe the cause to everything but their own sins. He knew that Elisha was a wonder-working prophet, and he concluded that he either could not or would not use his miraculous powers to raise the siege. The hasty order for his execution was entirely in keeping with the character of an Eastern despot, for it is noticeable that just so far as the kings of Israel and Judah departed from the Lord, just so far they departed from the constitutional idea under which the monarchy was first established. Rulers, who in their private life do not recognize God, are never in their public capacity safe custodians of the people's rights. Elisha seems to have been holding a prayer meeting in his lodgings, doubtless interceding with God for the city, when the messenger of death broke in upon him; so that we have in our lesson another remarkable instance of the prevailing power of prayer, and also a proof that even in those remote times there was such a thing as "neighborhood meetings"—little gatherings of the faithful in private houses, thus keeping alive the fires of true religion, when the visible church was most deeply corrupted with the prevailing spirit of idolatry. But as the most gracious promises of the Gospel have been made the butt of the profane wit of scoffers, so Elisha's promise of an abundant supply on the morrow was openly ridiculed by the king's favorite courtier. In consequence a judgment was pronounced upon him, which, though couched in most mysterious language, was fulfilled to the letter (vs. 17–20). He saw the abundance but never tasted it, just as our Lord prophesied to the scoffing unbelievers of his day, that they would see multitudes who had accepted him sitting down to the Gospel feast, and they themselves excluded forever. The sorest punishment of those who reject Christ will consist in seeing what rich and wonderful bounties of grace they are shut out from ever tasting by their own deliberate refusal.

2. The unlooked-for deliverance.—vs. 3–11. If these four lepers had not felt the wretchedness of their situation, they would never have come to this decision. So until the sinner feels his need he will not be roused to action, but will stay idly waiting in the gate of the City of Destruction. But here the parallel fails, for they grasped at a mere chance, while the sinner who throws himself on the mercy of God, has the sure anchor of promise. There is no "if" or "perhaps" with Jesus. It is always "I will" to the famished soul that goes to him for the Bread of Life. We find here several important lessons. (1) God is never at a loss for means to deliver his people, and it is always folly, if not something worse, to question how he is going to fulfill any promise that he has made. Though so hedged in by temptation and trial that we can see no way out, it is always wrong to be anxious and fearful, knowing that he will not lay any heavier burden on us than we are able to bear. (2) They who have seen and tasted the rich provisions of the Gospel "do not well" if they are content to enjoy the feast alone, without making any effort to bring others to it. If these lepers considered themselves deserving of punishment had they withheld the good news from the starving people in the city, ought not every Christian to feel a sense of blood guiltiness, if they fail to extend the Gospel invitation. (3) They took no credit for doing their plain duty; so we, after we have done all, can claim no reward except in grace.

3. The promise proved true.—vs. 12–16. As these joyful tidings came in the night, so the darkest hour of trial is often succeeded by some great and sudden deliverance. The king's caution, however prudent in the abstract, shows his unbelief. Had he trusted God he would have been spared his anxious fears that this was only a strategem of the enemy; or he would at least have inquired of the Lord through Elisha. How many a troubled, perplexed hour would be saved if we always sought divine guidance, instead of leaning to our own understanding!

Religious News.

—The Board of Managers of the American Bible Society met March 5. Letters were read from Mr. Penzotti, who on the 9th of February was still a prisoner in Callao, for the alleged offense of violating the constitution of Peru by holding religious services not approved by the Roman Catholic priesthood; from Mr. McKim, of Cuba, who also had had a taste of prison life, as a man on whom suspicion was cast because he was selling the Scriptures in Bahia Honda, a confinement which soon ended with apologies. Upon the application of the Rev. George F. Pentecost, D.D., a grant of one thousand English Testaments and two thousand Gospels was made to him for use in connection with his preaching services in Calcutta. A letter was received from the Rev. A. P. Happer, D.D., of Canton, and other missionaries, commending a new movement organized by native Chinese to promote Christian evangelization on a wide scale by the loan of approved books of various kinds. The Board voted to supply a limited number of volumes of Scripture for this purpose. The issues from the Bible House during the month of February were 69,531 volumes; issues since April 1, 1890, 942,317 volumes.

—The United Presbyterian says that Mr. Moody recently obtained several hundred copies of the "Bible Songs," music book used in the U. P. church, for use in his Training Schools at Northfield. "It took Maj. Whittle some time to become reconciled to their use, but at length he got fairly in love with them. We would not be surprised to hear soon that he prefers them for all his meetings."

—The Baptists of the United States unite in calling a meeting of Baptist young people, to be held in Chicago, July 7 and 8, 1891, to form a Baptist national organization for young people in Baptist churches; and to adopt measures to extend and develop State and local church societies, with the view to the education of young people in denominational principles and work.

—The census report reveals the fact that during 1890 Christianity gained in this country over one million adherents, and 4,867 preachers, and 8,494 churches.

—Dr. James Martin, the Reformed Presbyterian missionary, states during the recent outbreak of cholera in Antioch, there were days during which the deaths reached a hundred a day; the total numbered 1,059. The population of the city is 25,000. A multitude of the inhabitants fled. Dr. Martin was absent at Alexandretta, Syria; but Mrs. Martin remained in the midst of the dying and the dead, feeling it would be undutiful in her to go out of town and leave behind those of the congregation who could not get away.

—Largely through the instrumentality of Dr. Sheldon Jackson, six denominations are now at work in Alaska. Their stations are generally some distance apart. The Presbyterians have established their posts on the "thirty mile strip," as the southern portion of the island is called. The Friends have a mission on Douglas Island; the Methodists have taken up Oonaiaska and Unga; the Episcopal church has a station on the Yukon river at Anvik; the Swedish Missionary Society has two posts, one at Yakutat, the other north of St. Michael's, at Unalaklik; the Moravians have two posts—one on Nushakak river and one on the Kushokwim river; Mr. Duncan's New Metla-katla on Annetta Island, and a church of England mission at Nuklukaoyet; on the Yukon river. This makes a total of eighteen Protestant missions established in Alaska.

—The first Sabbath-school held in the territory now included in the State of Ohio, as well as the first in the northwest territory, including, besides Ohio, the present States of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, was the work of Mrs. Mary Bird Lake, a native of Bristol, England, who came to Marietta soon after the landing of the second "Mayflower." She was, we are led to believe, organizer, superintendent, secretary, and teacher, all in one. The scene was within the stockade built by the settlers to protect themselves from the Indians. The time was early in the year 1791. It is not unlikely that this devoted woman had known in England of the Robert Raikes movement. She afterwards moved a short distance up the Muskingum Valley, and there taught the children living near her house, in a Sabbath-school organized by herself.—United Presbyterian.

—Union revival services have been conducted in East Boston, Mass., for some weeks. They have been attended with great success, and the interest among the different congregations which have engaged in the work has been unflagging. The meetings have been conducted by evangelist E. E. Davidson, who has been energetically supported by the pastors and their churches. Mr. Davidson is a young man, and has had great success in evangelistic work, the greater part of which has been performed in the Middle States. He is a powerful and persuasive speaker and appeals directly to the reason of his hearers. He has been instrumental in converting several hundred persons during his short stay in East Boston.

—At revival services conducted at Cheboygan, Michigan, by Rev. G. H. Cate and the Methodist pastor, over eighty persons have expressed their determination to become Christians.

—Dwight L. Moody began a series of meetings at Newburyport, Mass., Feb. 24. Meetings were held in City Hall, where large audiences gathered. It was at times filled to overflowing. Mr. Moody remained until the following Saturday.

—The Calcutta Statesman, one of the leading English papers of India, speaks very highly of Dr. Pentecost's series of meetings. It says: "No such continuous evangelistic effort as this, so far as we know, has ever before been attempted in Calcutta. It was feared by some of Dr. Pentecost's friends that it would be impossible to hold the attention of the audience for so long a time night after night. These fears have happily not been justified."

—Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., editor of the Missionary Review of the World, is delivering a course of lectures before the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, N. J. The general theme of the course was announced as "Christian Missions a Divine Enterprise."

—Beginning with the 15th of January, a series of meetings were held at Mt. Vernon, Mo., by J. E. Wolfe, the missionary evangelist of Vinita, Indian Territory. They continued four weeks, and while the conversions were not very numerous, yet the Lord blessed his word to the good of believers. "We found," says Bro. Wolfe, "quite a number of earnest, zealous Christians, who were eager for the Word. The devil raged, for he never likes to have his favorite hobbies denounced,—intemperance, sectarianism, secretism, and formalism."

—The burning of the main edifice of the college at Aintab, Central Turkey, is a serious loss to the Protestant Christians of Central Turkey, which includes such towns as Aintab, Marash, Adana and Tarsus. The loss is fully 11,000. A strong appeal is made by President Fuller for means to replace the building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

United States Treasurer Huston left his office in Washington Thursday afternoon owing to ill health, and it is said the delay of the President in accepting his recently tendered resignation has personally embarrassed him.

Acting Secretary Nettleton denied an application for the exchange of $1,000,000 in gold bars at the New York Assay Office for gold coin, for exportation, for the reason that it is not believed to be the duty of the Government to furnish gold in its most convenient form for shipment from the United States at the present rate of exchange, viz, 4 cents per $100.

The Interior Department has issued orders for the purchase of a large quantity of additional beef supplies for the Sioux Indians.

THE MAFIA.

In reply to a communication from the United States, Michael Basso, an Italian interpreter at Toronto, Ontario, says that Canada can be depended on to supply 4,000 armed Italians to avenge the men killed in the New Orleans jail in the event of the Italian Government failing to secure redress from the United States Government.

The great hall of Cooper Union, New York, was packed with 5.000 Italians Friday night to denounce last Saturday's tragedy in New Orleans, and outside, notwithstanding a drizzling rain, more than as many more were unable to gain entrance to the hall. A number of people were injured in the rush. One hundred and fifty policemen were kept busy a quarter of an hour to drive the new arrivals out of the hall. Denunciations of the tragedy were most terrifying in their vehemence.

Mayor Shakespeare, of New Orleans, received a letter purporting to come from a committee of 3,000 Italians notifying him that Parkerson, Wickliffe and himself must die at the hands of the aforesaid committee. In conclusion the letter states that the chief assassins are not caught yet. Chief of Police Gaster thinks all such letters are a hoax.

Dr. Rivogli, Italian Consul, at Cincinnati, Ohio, to-day received a threatening letter signed "Mafia," from Chicago. It was a wretched scrawl, part Italian and part English, and it informed the Consul he was doomed to die this year.

News has reached Wheeling, W. Va., that about 2,000 Italians working on the Pittsburg, Ohio Valley and Cincinnati Railroad and pipe line, about eighteen miles below Bellaire, are organized and drilled in companies and a regiment.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tire all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. HOME AND HEALTH.

LESS MEDICINE, MORE EXERCISE.

It is remarkable how people welcome any medicine that promises great cures. Even though they may not need it, they take the keenest pleasure in its discovery, and if their imaginations are abnormally active, they easily persuade themselves that a dose or so would do them good. It is an age of medicine, are era of prescriptions, a season of individual experiments. The general craze for cures of ills real and ills imagined supports a dozen drug stores where one formerly struggled, builds up enormous fortunes for patent medicine proprietors, and makes millions of invalids out of people who ought to be healthy. There is a great need for a change in the popular mind. The craze for cures should cease to monopolize everything and allay itself with the gospel of prevention. In other words, the people should take less medicine and more exercise, should give up some of their doses and substitute allopathic allowances of fresh air. Already there is a noticeable improvement manifested, especially in our best schools and colleges. Common sense is having a say in the cut and arrangement of clothing. More attention is being paid to out door sports. The girl who can take a long walk or play tennis or ride for an afternoon is worth a half dozen of Miss Languish, to whom five squares is exhaustion. Men and women are beginning to see the tremendous importance of physical soundness, and to appreciate its absolute necessity as an element of domestic happiness. The young man of to-day wants a healthy wife, and the young woman wants a healthy husband. Invalidism is becoming less fashionable and less popular than it was, and the woman of to-day is trying to grow pre-eminently vigorous. The more she succeeds, the better men like her and the better she likes herself. Exercise, of course, is not all. There are rules of health, simple but rigid, that must be observed. Wholesome food, regular hours, moderation and perseverance are essential. Spasmodic efforts will not satisfy the demands of health any more than spasmodic eating will satisfy the stomach. The people are improving in these things, however, and the tendency is, undoubtedly, in the direction of more common sense. It will take some time to counteract the craze for cures, but the work has been begun and its results grow constantly. It is gradually teaching the people that it is better to keep from being sick than to get sick and depend upon cures.—Baltimore American.

WARNINGS.

ROCKFORD, Ill., March 13.—This afternoon the 3-year-old son of W. J. Thompson secured a bottle of carbolic acid and gave his sister, aged 9 months, a tablespoonful or more of the liquid, from the effects of which the child soon died. Some of the acid was spilled on the child's face, burning it horribly.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., March 13.—Wednesday evening the family of John Deppinger of this city after eating supper were taken violently sick, with indications of poisoning. This morning Mrs. Lizzie Woods, one of the family, died in agony. The four remaining members of the family, although improved, are not yet out of danger. Moldy cheese was the cause of their sickness.

It is not the extremes of heat and cold so much as the sudden changes in temperature that cause certain climates to be unhealthful. When, however, the system is invigorated with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, these changes are rarely attended with injurious results.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

gives tone to the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, and Bowels, quickens the Appetite, and imparts to the system a healthful feeling of Strength and Vigor, which cannot be obtained by using any other medicine. AYER'S Sarsaparilla is prepared from the Honduras sarsaparilla root. All other tonics and alteratives which enter into this preparation are selected because of their well-known remedial qualities. are the months in which to purify the Blood. The medicine to take is AYER'S Sarsaparilla. This remedy stands alone as SUPERIOR in combination, proportion, and appearance, and SUPERIOR in all that goes to strengthen and build up the system weakened by disease and pain.

"For several years, in the spring months, I was troubled with a drowsy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so had, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least sudden motion causing me severe distress. Occasionally, a rash covered my body, the skin apparently becoming thickened, accompanied by intense itching. Frequently, boils would break out on various parts of the body. By the advice of my family physician, I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my system was completely eradicated. I believe that everybody would be benefited by taking a bottle or two of Ayer's Sarsaparilla each spring." — L. W. English, Montgomery City, Mo.

"Every spring for the last nine years, I have been in the habit of taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I can truly say that I never used any medicine that did me so much good. I am convinced that it is the best medicine of the kind in the market, and recommend it to all in need of a reliable and effective blood-purifier." — J. A. Shepard, 246 Pearl st., New York City.

Farm Notes.

SKIM MILK FOR CALVES.

Mr. Ralph Allen, of Delavan, Ill., one of the most successful raisers of calves in the State, in a talk on raising skim-milk calves, held the following: "The skim-milk calf makes a great deal better cow than the calf that is allowed to suckle the dam. I will give an instance of this from my own experience. A few years ago I had a grade Jersey cow, and she dropped two calves, which I raised on skim milk. She was an excellent cow, and the two calves so raised made excellent cows also, inheriting their great milking qualities from their mother. I sold the cow, and the gentleman that bought her also raised two calves from her. The first one he was particularly generous to and kept her with the cow. He also fed it new milk and kept it fat. That calf is now two years old, and the owner recently told me that the heifer was a failure. I saw her only two weeks ago and she looked like anything but a milch cow. The second calf he fed on skim milk, and she has the appearance to-day of making a good cow.

"I raise my calves for dairy purposes. My manner of raising them is this: When the calf is a day old I take it away from the cow, but do not deprive her of the milk of that cow, which is at that time especially adapted to the use of the calf, and is necessary to it, to put its digestive organs in the right condition. I feed it on new milk for thirty days, and at the same teach it to eat a little corn. At that time I put it on skim milk, and feed it on that for six months. The feeding of corn I find to be a very essential element in the handling of skim-milk calves. Our scientists tell us that our calves should be raised on a well-balanced ration. That is, it should have a suitable amount of carbo-hydrates and other food elements. Now new milk is rich in carbo-hydrates, and the skim milk needs corn to restore the carbo-hydrates to it. The temperature of the milk is another important consideration for the growing of skim-milk calves. It should be ordinarily warmed up to 90 degrees, and if the weather is cold it should be warmed up to 100 degrees. If I had the choice of using cold skim milk for feed, or not using skim milk at all, I would not use it, but after the calf is six months old the cold milk will not hurt it. In feeding calves each one should be fed by itself, and with its milk ration measured out. Some calves will drink three times as fast as others, and if they are fed together some of them will get too much and others not enough. For this reason I have stanchions and fasten them up when I feed the milk. I then turn them loose and feed them corn right after giving them the milk, because a calf always wants to suck just after finishing drinking the milk. If you do not give them corn or some such ration they will begin sucking each other's ears, and in cold weather some of their ears will be frozen from being wet. I have had several such cases."

The discussion following the address elicited the following facts: The corn is fed dry and not ground, and from a box where all the calves can take it at will. It is thoroughly ground down between the teeth, and thus promotes the flow of saliva. Begin with a small quantity and increase as the needs of the calves require. If corn and oats are fed the calves will select the corn. Experience with oil meal has not been satisfactory. Had not fed ensilage, but calves take kindly to good hay.—Prairie Farmer.

If our farmers, instead of attending Grange and Alliance meetings, would devote the time thus spent, in reading some good agricultural paper or book and practice more real good farming, we believe that their exchequer would make a better showing at the close of the year, and there would be less cause for complaining than there now is. For people to try to legislate money into their pockets is of doubtful propriety.—Gospel Messenger.

Baldness ought not to come till the age of 55 or later. If the hair begins to fall earlier, use Hall's Hair Renewer and prevent baldness and grayness.

TAM-O-SHANTER'S RIDE.

"Yes," said he thoughtfully, puffing ring after ring of smoke into the air above his head, "Tam-o-Shanter's ride through the midnight wind with the uncanny witches pursuing him, was a strange fancy of Burns'. It always reminds me of a certain time in my life when I seemed pursued by every demon of disease. Indigestion, dyspepsia, almost constant sick headache, weak lungs, boils and ulcers, everything seemed to ail me, and my physicians had finally given me up as a sure victim of consumption.

You know, in Burns' story, just as the foremost witch was seizing Tam's horse by the tail, he reached the middle of the magic stream—and his pursuers vanished. Well, just as I was giving up in despair, a friend sent me a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which I took. In an incredibly short time my disease entirely vanished. To-day I am as strong as any man in the room—thanks to the 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Consumption is Lung-scrofula. For Scrofula, in its myriad forms, and for all Liver, Blood and Lung diseases, the "Discovery" is an unequaled remedy. It's the only guaranteed one. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you get your money back. It's the cheapest, Liver, Blood and Lung remedy, sold by druggists, because you only pay for the good you get.

Can you ask more?

"Golden Medical Discovery" strengthens Weak Lungs, and cures Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections. Don't be fooled into taking something else, said to be "just as good," that the dealer may make a larger profit. There's nothing at all like the "Discovery." It contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion. As peculiar in its curative effects as in its composition. Equally good for adults or children.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES of Lime and Soda

is endorsed and prescribed by leading physicians because both the Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites are the recognized agents in the cure of Consumption. It is as palatable as milk.

Scott's Emulsion is a perfect Emulsion. It is a wonderful Flesh Producer. It is the Best Remedy for CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Colds.

They are also receiving guns. It is said that they have organized on account of an order issued from Chicago. The people in the vicinity are considerably alarmed over the matter.

COUNTRY.

The Governor of Arizona Tuesday signed a bill exempting from taxation for twenty years all railroads built within three years.

The farmers of the Nebraska House have voted to meet at 6:30 A. M. A good move, and promising for a wide awake people.

The Missouri Senate this morning hotly debated the House bill to prohibit blacklisting. The bill made it a felony for any one to publish or circulate any statement, true or false, for the purpose of preventing any person from obtaining employment, and it placed the penalty at from two to five years in the penitentiary. The bill was finally amended by doing away with the provision against publishing the truth and adding a provision against the publication of a list to show that a man is a member of a labor organization.

President Dillon, of the Union Pacific, Friday confirmed the report that the property was soon to be mortgaged for $250,000,000, to take up underlying liens and pay off the floating debt.

The famous Laguna de Tache ranch in Tulare county, California, was sold to an English syndicate, Thursday, for $1,000,000,

The Keystone National Bank, of Philadelphia, closed its doors Friday by order of the Comptroller of the Currency. The city of Philadelphia has a deposit of $400,000 in the bank.

Joseph Perrien, a wealthy flour manufacturer of Detroit, was enticed from his home Thursday night, and his whereabouts are now unknown. A letter was left at his residence later asking $30,000 for his ransom.

Two lives were lost and twenty-two families made homeless by a fire Thursday which gutted the six-story double tenement at No. 215 East Twenty-ninth street.

At Silverton, Col., last week five men were buried fifty feet deep by an avalanche. Three were rescued alive. At Crested Butte, Col., three men were killed by a snowslide; it is not known just where.

Tuesday at Cleveland, Ohio, Edward Stein was attacked by three big mastiffs, the dogs violently chewing the flesh from the upper portion of his body and arms. If he recovers he will be crippled for life.

In a wreck near Greencastle, Mo., Tuesday, Mrs. Sarah G. Campbell was killed outright, the conductor was fatally and eleven others were seriously injured.

The entire business portion of the village of Highland, N. Y., was destroyed by fire March 16. Clarence Ellis, 8 years old, living in a tenement house, was burned to death. The loss will not be less than $100,000. At least fifty families are homeless. Many women and children were forced into the street in their night clothes, and the weather being cold there is much suffering.

A New York fire that started, no one knows how, in the sub-basement of the nine-story mansard-roof brick and iron building on the southeast corner of Bleecker and Green streets, Tuesday, ruined it, and spreading to two buildings east of it, destroyed them as well as another one in the rear that ran from Green to Mercer street. The loss will reach $2,000,000.

Silverton, Col., has been completely isolated from the world for several weeks by banks of snow which vary from ten to forty feet deep.

A mob last week Monday went to the house of Mrs. Wigginton at Mount Sterling, Ky., and hanged her to a tree. Her husband and son are charged with the poisoning of Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Watts. A search was made for Wigginton, but he had fled. Two of Wigginton's sons are in the jail, which is strongly guarded.

FOREIGN.

The British steamship Utopia from Italian ports bound to New York with 700 Italian emigrants aboard, collided with the British ironclad Anson anchored in Gibraltar bay. The Utopia sunk within a few minutes. Boats were immediately lowered from the British ironclads and also from the Swedish man-of-war Freya. These boats rescued 180 persons. Many others who were rescued are lodged in government buildings on shore.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, member of Parliament, announces that he intends to actively oppose Parnellism by all the legitimate means in his power.

Capt. McKeaug, of the Utopia, has been arrested at Gibraltar on the charge of wrongful acts, improper conduct, negligence, and mismanagement in the control of his steamer before and at the time of the disaster.

The official report of the number of persons on board the lost Anchor line steamer Utopia shows that when she left Naples the steamship had 880 souls on board, including passengers and crew. Of this number only 311 have been saved. Thus 569 of her passengers and crew are either drowned or missing.

Mr. William Henry Smith, the first lord of the treasury, in the British House of Commons announced that the government had come to the decision that no woman representative of labor or of other organizations could be placed upon the labor commission.

The Roxburgh Castle collided with the British ship British Peer 120 miles southwest of the Sicily islands. The Roxburgh sank immediately, and of the twenty-four men aboard twenty-two were drowned.

The first conversation by telephone between London and Paris was exchanged March 17, and was highly successful.

The St. James' Gazette says that it is curious to find the people of Italy lamenting the death of the Mafia conspirators at New Orleans. They were wretches who had been driven out of their own country as pests of society. The grief of the Marquis di Rudini for the men who were lynched would not be long or very profound. If the Mafias had not emigrated they would have received equally short shrift from Sicilian vigilantes.

Hawaii's volcano is again very active. Several cones have sunk from seventy-five to one hundred feet and some have disappeared altogether. There have also been many earthquake shocks.

DONALD KENNEDY of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Price $1.50. SPECIAL RATES, ETC.

Read on last page the latest offers for new and old subscribers.

FOR APRIL ONLY.

To help all our local and traveling agents in working for subscribers, we will give to all new subscribers during the present month a copy of Prof. Henry Drummond's latest work, "Love, the Supreme Gift; or The Greatest thing in the World." There is now an immense demand for this work. It has been issued by some publishers at 20 cents per copy; by others at 35 cents, and $1.00 for an illustrated edition. We will send it to every new subscriber that can be obtained before May 1st, whether by agent or directly. Considerable theological controversy has arisen over this work of Prof. Drummond's, and for its size it has attracted as much attention as the same author's famous "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston, has written a supplementary pamphlet on Faith, "The First thing in the World." Messiah's Herald of Boston, says: "There has been no work of its size issued during the last decade that has been more severely criticised than Drummond's 'Greatest thing in the World.' Many have warmly commended it, and thousands of copies of the work have been sold. The great objection to the work has been that Prof. Drummond paid little attention to the value of faith." Dr. Gordon makes up this deficiency.

We have secured a special rate on this work. Free to new subscribers in from this time to May 1st

Chicago sent to the State Legislature a low-lived and ignorant liquor-seller, who was under indictment for violation of the election laws. He has been in Springfield, we suppose, drawing his salary from the tax-payers of the State, and laboring according to his capacity for the good of all the citizens. This is the result: He has succeeded in getting from the Representatives of both old parties, in their committee, an approval of an act to insert the word "knowingly" in the dram-shop act, so as to let saloon-keepers escape the penalty for selling to minors. The law punishing these human harpies for selling to children was about the only one that could be enforced against them. The Citizen's League has troubled them much because of it. They hope to be rid of this annoyance, and be free to kill all the children they can get into their dens.

The Jesuit son of the late General Sherman administered extreme unction and anointed the dying actor, Lawrence Barrett, last week in New York. Barrett was a Royal Arch Mason. He was dying and the priest understood he had permission to anoint him, if there should be no Masonic burial. But the actor did not renounce Masonry, nor was he asked to do so. What difference could it make to a Jesuit, anyhow?

The favorable view taken by our Washington letter of the late order of the Treasury Department, we wish heartily to endorse. The United States government should neither license liquor-selling, nor should its certificate of a tax collected prevent punishment for the crime of liquor-selling. But will the State Department dare say that its efforts in South America, for the beer-makers and sellers, is not in the nature of a license for their trade? General Nettleton, who issues this order, denied with emphasis that the Vice President had a saloon in his new hotel. An order from Mr. Morton that drinks should no more be sold by the glass, proved the mistake. We hope no such fatality will overtake this new order.

The disgraceful riots daily reported from Ireland are shaking the confidence of all reasonable people in the Home Rule theory. Between Parnell and his late comrades in that movement there seems to be unending strife; and both have plenty of followers. But it is some relief in the midst of this tumult to hear the voice of Gladstone, as in his speech the other day at Hastings, declare that a man of Parnell's moral character can never have the endorsement of the Liberal party. Respecting that decision he said: "That is final. We are ready to face defeat, exclusion from power and political misfortune, but we will not create a constitutional leadership for Ireland under such guidance." Thank God for such an exhibition of moral courage in the politics of our day.

Perhaps President Harrison will awake some morning with the bright thought that it is unsafe to tamper in any way whatever with the liquor business. He may not sell or drink, but when he and two policemen have a hard fight with a drunken man, who has threatened that he was "going to do up the President," and breaks in the windows of the White House at night,—that is a personal argument which Mr. Harrison cannot evade. It should be an easy question to answer, whether the licensed saloons of Washington are not more responsible for this attack upon his life, than the poor inebriate whose life had been poisoned and brain fired at their bars. If he cannot answer it he ought not to be President; and we trust the day approaches when no man can be President who will not be ready to close such bars from Washington to the farthest hamlet under the flag.

The New York Tribune remarks that a reform is threatened among the school teachers of Boston, more than one hundred of whom are officially recognized by the School Board by their pet names. One member of the Board, a woman who has some care for the dignity and honor of her sex, has offered a resolution that hereafter the baptismal names only of teachers be recognized. One could wish that resolution adopted in every quarter as they glance over the Frenchy adaptations of good, old-fashioned, honest English names in the girl-student lists of our college catalogues. The Boston Transcript, speaking of this reform, says: "It is not a small matter that there are more than one hundred Susies and Kitties and Hatties teaching school in Boston. They are not, however, exactly responsible for their names. Probably most of them regret that they are not Susan, Katherine and Harriet, since it is very much the fashion now to have the more dignified names. The women's colleges cultivate this dignity in the manner of names. Look through the next Wellesley list. You will find no girl named Pettie Dere. You will find plenty of names that will roll under the tongue like Semiramis Hypatia Johnson."

THE SHEKINAH.

BY J. W. WOOD.

A concise definition for this term is, "The Jewish name for the visible manifestation of the Divine presence which rested in the shape of a cloud over the Mercy-seat, and from which God gave forth his oracles with an articulate voice."

In Exodus 25th particular directions were given for the construction of the furniture of the Holy Place, the Ark, the cherubims, and the Mercy-seat. In verse 22 we read, "And there I will meet with thee and I will commune with thee from above the Mercy-seat from between the two cherubims which are upon the Ark of the Testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel." In Exodus 40th we read that the Tabernacle was reared with its courts and altars, and "so Moses finished the work." "Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation and the glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle."

We have details of the manner of approach to the Holy Place given in Leviticus. We there learn that the two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, were devoured by the fire, when they offered "strange fire before the Lord which he commanded them not." Even Aaron was warned not to come at all times into the Holy Place, but particular directions were given him, by following which he could enter in safety. This he did once a year, but "not without blood which he offered for himself and the sins of the people." We soon have the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and again fire flashed out from the Shekinah and consumed Korah with two hundred and fifty princes of the people, who offered incense before the Lord which the Lord had not commanded.

These lessons teach us that God accepts of no worship self-projected by men. Man is in rebellion against him; he offers full and free pardon to all who will ask for it in the way which he has appointed—"No man cometh unto the Father but by me," John 14: 6. These terms, God as a sovereign has a right to make. To come to him in any other way is going "in the way of Cain."

Passing now to Solomon's time when the Temple was built, we learn in 1 Kings 8th, that after the priests had deposited the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy Place, and arranged its furniture and were come out of the Holy Place, "the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord." The Shekinah remained in the Holy Place of the Temple about four hundred years. It was the place where the Lord could be inquired of concerning the administration of the affairs of the kingdom. The circumstances attending its departure are the subjects of this paper.

The first intimation of this is found in Eze. 8. We there read of the pollutions of false worships which were introduced into the Temple and practiced by the priests. It was the office of these priests to conduct the true worship of God, and they doubtless did so in accordance with the Temple ritual, while at the same time they were practicing in secret the rites of Baal worship. Have we not its complete parallel in our own day?

Ezekiel was brought by the Spirit of the Lord to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north, where he beheld the glory of the God of Israel; and he saw, too, the "image of jealousy in the entry." God said to him, "Son of man, seest thou what they do, even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary." This is the first intimation which we have in Holy Writ of God's purpose to leave his sanctuary. For him to leave it was to consign it to destruction, for the king of Babylon, even then, stood at the parting of the ways using divination as to whether or not he should march on Jerusalem. "At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem." So he marched upon the fated city, the Temple was destroyed, the crown was cast down, and the kingly succession is still held in abeyance "until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him."

God made the reason for his course entirely plain. Have we any reason to believe that false worship is any more acceptable to him now than it was in the days of Cain or Korah or Ezekiel? Will he judge "us upon whom the ends of the world are come" by any lower standard than he did the early Jews? I judge not, for we boast that we now see clearly what they saw but darkly.

The whole drift of Scripture shows us that false worship has always been, and must forever remain, hateful in the sight of God. It is the corrupt means by which Satan has ever sought to defeat the beneficent works of God among men, and it culminates in the devil worship of Rev. 13.

But to return to Ezekiel's narrative. God next showed him the "chambers of imagery," a room in the Temple veiled with all the care of secretism, with its walls ornamented by the symbols of its false worship. And I here submit the question, could there be a more wretched and unclean symbol devised than that of the "point within the circle," bounded by the two parallel lines, as explained by Mackey on page 56 of his "Manual of the Lodge?" This underground worship, which always suggests to me the peep-hole of a Good Templars lodge, involved seventy men of the "ancients of the house of Israel," each with a censor in his hand and a thick cloud of incense went up. "Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord has forsaken the earth."

"He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do." Ezekiel was then shown the "women weeping for Tammuz." They were not allowed in the secret chambers with the men, but they could run a side show off somewhere by themselves. Kitto identifies this "weeping for Tammuz" with a ceremony of the old sun worship as practiced in Egypt. It was held at the time of the summer solstice and mourned the departure of the sun in its southern declination.

"Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again and thou shalt see greater abominations than these. And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold, at the door of the Temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the Temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east. Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger; and lo! they put the branch to their nose. Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eyes shall not spare, neither will I have pity; and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them." The branch put to the nose above referred to is still represented in Masonic symbolism by the sprig of Acacia at the head of Hiram's grave.

We next read in the 9th chapter that God called for the ministers of his vengeance and ordered them "to slay and not spare." "Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house. And he said unto them, Defile the house and fill the courts with the slain: go ye forth. And they went forth and slew in the city." In the meantime he had ordered the man clothed with linen, with the writer's inkhorn by his side, to "Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." Those persons with the mark were to be spared and the destroyers were to begin at his sanctuary. Judgment is always to begin at the house of God.

In the meantime we notice in verse 3 of the 9th chapter that "the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house." This was the first step in its departure; from this point the fearful judgment of the slaughter was executed. It next lifted itself up and stood over the threshold ready to depart, as recorded in chapter 10, verse 4, "And the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the Lord's glory." It will be noticed that this was the same glorious manifestation of God's presence that illuminated the house when it took possession of the Holy Place in Solomon's time, as recorded in 2 Chron. 5.

After a wonderful description of God's flaming chariot in this 10th of Ezekiel, we read in the 18th verse, "Then the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house and stood over the cherubims, and the cherubims lifted up their wings and mounted up from the earth in my sight." May not this have been the chariot of fire in which Elijah was taken up?

We afterwards read in chapter 11: "Then did the cherubims lift up their wings and the wheels beside them, and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above; and the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city." "So the vision that I had seen went up from me."

It is well known that the mountain "which is on the east side of the city" is the Mount of Olives. We learn from Acts 2 that our Lord went up from this Mount of Olives, "which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath day's journey." Possibly, may I not say probably, he went up from the same spot from which the Shekinah had ascended more than five hundred years before.

We learn, too, from Zechariah that when our Lord returns "his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east." Again, we read in Eze. 43 that after the restoration of the Jews and the rebuilding of a far more glorious temple than has ever yet stood on Mount Moriah, of which the prophet Haggai said, "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former," the visible glory of the God of Israel comes again "from the way of the east,"—the same glory that departed in Ezekiel's day, and on certain conditions, declared by the prophet, it will "dwell in the midst of them forever."

Now, what we want to observe in this connection is, that the sins of the Jews culminated in Baalism, and that the practice of sun-worship by the ministers of his Temple was what led God to withdraw from it, and deliver it up to Nebuchadnezzar for destruction, so that the spot where his glory had dwelt for generations became to him the most obnoxious spot on earth. Three Temples built on this site were destroyed in succession, for similar reasons, and when Julian would have built a fourth, fire broke out from the earth and destroyed his workmen. God would have no more mockery on that spot. Some time afterwards the Mosque of Omar was built there, and dedicated openly to heathenism. This has stood in quiet for more than 1,250 years, and, doubtless, will stand until the "times of the Gentiles are fulfilled."

We learn from this history that open and unadulterated heathenism is not so offensive to God, as is a corruption of his true worship. He will not have a divided worship, nor will he share his glory with another.

Now for an application of this. It is always and openly claimed by the learned men of Freemasonry that its ceremonies are derived from the rites of the old sun-worship. This could be abundantly sustained by quotations from their literature, were there room for them in this article. Albert G. Mackey, a prominent author in Masonry, brings this to the front at every opportunity. In his "Manual of the Lodge" he makes this matter plain; he also gives many of the symbols which appear on the walls, in the "chambers of their imagery." The sun, moon, stars and comets are shown there, and other symbols in profusion. He claims that Freemasons had a hand in building Solomon's Temple. If they did, it throws light on God's reasons for its destruction, for these reasons culminated in the sun-worship practiced then. But the fact is, that Masonry is but a modern rehash of that old Baalism, and possesses none of its dignity. It only possesses the same evil spirit which inspired the ancient rites.

The symbolism of the point within the circle, as given by Mackey, on page 56 of his Manual, is too unclean to be explained here, but he refers to it as a "type of the prolific power of nature" which the ancients worshiped under this form. This worship was practiced in Pompeii as witnessed by the relics found in its ruins, and is a sufficient reason for God's covering that city up with hot ashes, as he had formerly done to Sodom.

This same Baal worship is found threaded through and through many of our Christian churches, and there is not enough of the Holy Spirit in them to keep their members, their elders, nor even their bishops, out of the grip of Masonry.

Be sure, these men would say that they do not really believe in sun-worship, but does this help them any? We have a name for men who practice Christian rites without believing in them. Would not this name apply in full force to those who practice Masonic rites without believing in them? Paul speaks of a time of dense pagan ignorance which God winked at. Can men today find refuge under that cover? Have we any reason to suppose that God thinks any better of Baalism now than he did in Ezekiel's day? If it defiled his Temple then and rendered it uninhabitable to him, can he be reconciled to dwell with it now?

Paul speaks of Christians as being the Temple of the Holy Ghost. "Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the Temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the Temple of God is holy, which Temple ye are." This Temple is only susceptible of self-defilement. "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man."

Do not the awful oaths of Masonry, of which the penalty in every degree is a death penalty, seldom rising to the dignity of common butchery, but consisting in throat-cutting, tearing out the heart, bowel-burning, skull-cracking, and so on, —do not these defile the man who voluntarily mouths them over? Can a man realize that he "is not his own, but has been bought with a price," who voluntarily offers his throat to be cut if he either does do, or does not do, some foolish thing which God has never required of him?

What of a Christian minister, possibly a doctor of divinity, whom Paul exhorts to be an "ensample to the flock," who allows himself to be stripped to indecency, hood-winked and cable-towed, neither bare-footed nor shod, and then goes prancing around an altar lighted by three tallow dips in search of light?—a spectacle which must provoke the titter of godless men. The only symptom of grace in the whole thing is, that they do exclude the name of Christ from their pagan ceremonies.

That Masonry is a religion there is no doubt. It claims to be one; and we may say in a general way that anything is a religion which professes by prayers, ceremonies, incantations, or what not, to secure the favor of God. According to Mackey's Manual, the lodge is always to be opened with prayer, and this because "Masonry is a religious institution." It would still be one, even if its manuals and members denied it. It is as much a religion as is the Messiah craze of the Indians, or the practice of Fetishism in Africa.

If it is a religion, it is a self-projected religion, for God is addressed by names and in terms which he has never authorized. It is a "going in the way of Cain," and the Holy Spirit says of such, "Wo unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and run greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are spots in your feasts of charity when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds: trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots: raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

THE LODGE AND THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

In 1840, the Lord, by his Word and Spirit, brought me out from the world, its pleasures, spirit, maxims, and affiliation with its associations. By faith in the saving efficacy of the blood of Christ, he accepted me as a son, cleansed me from sin, took me into his "secret" revealing treasure-house, and began to show me by his "guide-book" the wonderful, glorious, unfading and eternal treasures he had to bestow in this life and the life to come, upon all who were, and would become, his true followers. For fifty-one years he has continued to reveal, and never conceal, these wonderful things. They captivated my HEART and I loved and admired them more and more. I am shown things day by day which are new to me, challenging my admiration and making me glad.

During all this time the Lord has been my shepherd, saving me out of troubles, guiding me in peace and hope. He has been my shield and buckler, my "stronghold in the day of trouble," my fortress, my hiding-place from the enemy. And I am instructed by my "guide-book"—the key to this covenant-bound institution—that what I have "seen through a glass darkly," and so much enjoyed, is only a prelude—"the earnest"—the sample of the stock which he has in this treasure-house. So I conclude that when he comes in his glory, and "mortality is swallowed up of life," eternity will be occupied in examining, admiring, and enjoying the grandeur and glory of the things in "the world to come," which world and all it contains was created by and for our Redeemer. And while "eternal life is the gift of God through Christ," the world to come and all it contains will be bestowed by Christ upon his bride as rewards for "doing well." So we shall have "the gift" and the rewards all our own. Can the secret societies do as much for us?

Allow me now to say that during the first twenty or thirty years of our history as a people, whenever the Gospel we preached reached a "secret society" man and led him to Christ, and to decide to come with us, he entirely abandoned the lodge-room, the regalia, the public parades, and association in the mock ceremonies at funerals of their order. And when a church-man—a member of a lodge—fully embraced the doctrine we preached (and we did not preach much against secret societies), he also left the lodge-room, the parades, and the ceremonies, and publicly confessed that his former relations prevented him from living a faithful Christian life.

But "their bands are strong." Some of their oaths are so terrible as to chill the blood of sensitive men. Only a few dare break away, yet the true Gospel and its obligations reach some and bring them out. I can count more than a score of such in my circle of labors, who came with us in early days, and who were among the most conscientious and faithful Christians ever after; several of them were able ministers of the Gospel. I have also known many, very many, ministers and layman, of denominations which then permitted their members to join secret societies (several churches would not), who after being well informed, by seceders, of the anti-Christian character of secret societies and their oaths, persisted in remaining and affiliating with them; and others, being persuaded and joining lodges, wandered wholly away from the Lord; and others became so backslidden as to be useless and cumbersome members of Christian churches.

Formerly there was no necessity for asking a candidate for membership in our churches whether he belonged to a secret society. It was then fully understood by both parties that "oath-bound secret societies" were anti-Christian; with a religion at whose altars "the name of Christ must not be mentioned."

Since those days secret societies have greatly multiplied, for the morals of "the last days" require a covering to shield the mischief workers from the law and from church discipline. Yet they must "have a form of" and be a substitute for "godliness." Now a large brood of secret societies has been organized, professedly for various benevolent objects. These are less obnoxious, and without criminal oaths. And to gather in the scrupulous, the women, those who lack self-reliance and faith in God, they offer premiums, "benefits," mutual insurance projects. These "benefits" tempt a large class of weak Christians. By these apparently innocent prudential measures all classes are becoming "confederates," and spending their money for "initiations" and "dues," which goes to build costly temples, support officials, and to provide suppers; and spending their evenings in entertainments and plays.

By these institutions the churches are being depleted of the means, the presence, and the labors of many of their members from whom they have the right to expect and demand help in the cause of Christ; and by these institutions the mass of unconverted men and women are drawn away from the places of Christian worship and Gospel preaching. Is it not probable that these apparently innocent young lodges will prove to be primary lessons to prepare their pupils to enter the oath-bound lodges, whose temples, religion, and altars, are a growing menace to the religion of Christ, to his temples and altars?

We admit that the growing evil has effected a breach in our Advent Christian churches and drawn away some of their members to join "secret societies," to the great grief and sadness of our faithful, spiritually-minded members, who are crying to God in secret closets, to open the eyes of these brethren.

SECRET TEMPERANCE ORDERS.

After fifteen years of intimate and candid observation we are forced to the conclusion, that no one force operates against the success of real temperance reform so effectually as the effort to organize the work under secret society methods.

We have discovered the following:

First. The lodges divide the workers and thus impede the work. There are many earnest temperance workers who are kept out of all secret orders by conscientious convictions that all such orders are wrong. Of course if, for conscience's sake, many cannot go into a secret lodge to do temperance work, and others, against such conviction, or without any conviction at all, go into the secret lodge, there will result no little division of the workers, and the work will be hindered. Who is at fault when such a division results? We unhesitatingly charge the fault upon the secret lodge workers. We do this for the reason that they are the introducers of an innovation. Secret orders were not divinely instituted; they are the creature of man's desire to gain advantage over his fellow men, and to find protection that is not afforded a guilty man by ordinary processes of law. Secret lodge temperance work is neither the normal nor the original method of reform work. It is a turning aside from the established methods of carrying forward good enterprises. Many good people remain in the old paths of open, honest work, and call to those who have departed therefrom to return from their wanderings, and their unholy alliance. If they refuse the call the unfortunate result of a divided force, and the consequent responsibility for much delay and many defeats remains with the innovators.

Again, the lodge people themselves are much divided. A lodge of Good Templars, another of Sons of Temperance, another of Rechabites, and still another of the Royal Templars of Temperance, all in a villiage of six thousand inhabitants. It is a multiplication of ways for spending money not demanded by the work, and the same is true of time and energy. Either they are alike or unlike in all the essential features. If secrecy is essential, then one order would be sufficient. If they are different, then they are not pursuing temperance as the one end to be gained, and should not pose before the community as temperance orders.

2. This leads to a second and serious charge, that the lodges have encumbered the work by loading it down with many merely incidental and other foreign issues. For instance: How can life insurance be made a condition of temperance work? as in the case of the Royal Templars. Again, the Rechabites exclude women. Surely they have a work to do, and has any set of men a right to monopolize the work?

3. The fact that the lodge is a secret order is a source of weakness in itself. It is cowardly to take a good work from before the public and enshrine it behind sentinels, pass-words and grips, to be served by persons with high-sounding but meaningless names. Many a man is bold against the curse of rum when he is where all his hearers are pledged to "never reveal but always conceal the workings of this lodge," but when face to face with the enemy, he is a coward. It is said we cannot successfully prosecute the work and let our enemies know our plans. We reply, any moral reform that cannot take the open field of free and full discussion and effort is unworthy any one's attention or thought.

Whatever be our object, it is unmanly to plot and scheme in secret to gain an advantage we have not courage to win in open conflict.

The principal reason why the secret lodges are a certain hindrance is, in the fact that they are contrary to the divine order and therefore cannot count on the blessing of God. When God would lead the children of Israel into Canaan did he organize the various tribes into secret societies? When Jesus would establish the Christian church did he organize a secret lodge? When God would purge the corrupt church by the reformation fires did he organize Martin Luther and his co-adjutors into a secret lodge? When British Christianity had become only a name behind which was a spiritual deadness most shocking, and a moral corruption disgraceful and ruinous, did God organize John and Charles Wesley into a secret lodge? Nay, but God's ways are ever open, frank and honest, and if men would obtain God's blessing they must be in the divine order. Does any one suppose God can bless a work that is directly opposed to truth and righteousness? Those who do good come to the light that their deeds may be manifest. Evil only has need of concealment and secrecy.

4. Finally, these orders are a hindrance because they are Christless. They are not co-workers with the church; the church does not need any co-workers. They are rivals of the church in every community where they exist. This is the necessary fruit of their Christless character. That they are Christless may be seen from the following facts:

(a) Many men receive the lodge and its teaching in place of the church and frequently remind us, "If a man lives up to his obligation he is all right. He will go to heaven." This is not only unrebuked by the lodge, but is the only legitimate conclusion from the unwritten and much of the written work of the lodge.

(b) They offer morality without an atonement for sin, or penitence.

(c) The lodges pass resolutions upon the death of its members declaring that they have gone to the grand lodge above, as if heaven is the place of holding the lodge meeting of some secret society. This goes on unrebuked by the grand lodges and the men in authority.

(d) Their obligations and pledges of secrecy shut out Him who never spake anything in secret.

If we have demonstrated the Christless character of the lodges, the inference is very easy that any method of reforming the world without Christ, our only Lord and Saviour, must hinder the work.—A. T. J. in the Bible Standard.

One of the greatest evils of the present day is secretism. Just as in the former case it finds protection in the bosom of the church. Some opposition, of course, exists in all branches; but but while secret orders are so largely in the church, and even in the pulpit, what does it amount to? The pulpit is in a large measure silent. And the religious press pursues the same course. Secret orders are too strongly entrenched in the church to allow it to be otherwise. Thus the church is like Samson shorn of his locks. While it thus fails of its duty to stand in the way and to dispute every step of their progress, these orders have multiplied till their name has become "Legion."

We are frequently reminded that these secret orders may become an element of no ordinary danger. We are not frightened by the question, "What do you know about them?" Freemasonry stands revealed—revealed by such testimony as would compel belief, unless we discard all human testimony, for none more reliable has ever been given. In the face of such revelation and exposure, how sad the position of a great part of the church of Christ, nurturing in her own bosom this great evil!—Rev. R. I. Hammond in the Christian Instructor.

A BOSTON MAFIA.

BY REV. J. P. STODDARD.

St. Patrick's day was duly observed by his honor, Mayor Mathews, the city officials, and the Romanists of Boston, but popular interest in "fraternities" centers just now in the Mafia and the New Orleans tragedy. The press has spoken, and the pulpit will undoubtedly be heard in time. It would be neither popular or safe to favor the violent measures of the mob, but those criticisms which have come to my notice are temperate, qualified and conditional. If the press reflects the sentiment of the people, it is quite evident that stiletto societies are not popular in Boston, and that where the law fails, summary justice to assassins would at least be tolerated as a last resort. The burden of censure is not upon those who rashly executed outlaws in defence of their homes and the peace of the city, but upon that timid policy, general apathy and lax administration which emboldened the assassins of Hennessy and resulted in the Parish prison slaughter.

There is force in these strictures, for the existence of the Sicilian murder societies in New Orleans were well known. The Mayor declared, "For years past the existence of stiletto societies in this city have been asserted;" and adds, "No community can exist with murderous societies in its midst. The society must perish or the community itself must perish."

The Cincinnati Enquirer is authority for saying that "The price paid for killing a man is from $10 to $100." The existence and the cost per capita for executing the decrees of the Mafia were matters of newspaper notoriety, and Chicago's experience in dealing with a like criminal brotherhood had given additional warning and emphasized the necessity of "eternal vigilance" and prompt action on the part of the guardians of the public weal. It is certainly highly commendable in the Boston press to direct attention to the derelictions of the New Orleans authorities, and such disclosures should lead to careful scrutiny into existing dangers in the "old Puritan city." A kennel of wolves in sheep's clothing may be nearer and more dangerous to our homes than the "Blood Atoners" of Salt Lake City, or the Clan-na-Gael in the valley of the Mississippi, or the hireling assassins of Louisiana. Is there any cause for apprehension?

In the Herald of March 3, 1890, I find a long article detailing the methods of a "Sworn Band existing in Boston," telling "how it has entered into recent criminal prosecutions in the courts," etc. As the Mafia is composed chiefly of Italians, so this Band, with a Boston membership of over 1,200, is largely of Chinese nationality. Both are of foreign material, and seek similar ends by identical methods. "Its prime objects," says the writer, "are the protection of its members, and the injury of those who are not its members." "It has a creed of thirty-six articles which every member must solemnly swear to obey and keep secret from the outside world." The penalty for divulging secrets or disobeying orders is death. In case of execution, "they stick a knife into a man in the society room or elsewhere, cut up his body into pieces sufficient in number to go around and give one portion to each brother, who is expected to convey his share to an appropriate place and get rid of it as best he can." Anticipating public incredulity, the writer adds, "It is hardly conceivable that a society having so frightful a regulation should exist in the center of this civilized community, and still it does." These, and many other facts of bribery, perjury and blackmailing, be it remembered, were brought out in a "judicial investigation," and hence well known to the authorities, and yet we hear nothing of any effort during the more than twelve intervening months to suppress the Wi-Gee-Hong society in Boston. On the contrary the same Herald, speaking editorially in its issue of March 18th inst. of the Mafia, says:

"There is some reason to believe that the rudimen s of a secret society of this murderous character exists in our city. The members of our police force certainly think that this is the case, and more than one crime that has been committed during the last five years, has been attributed to this form of conspiracy."

The police ought certainly to know. Mark: he does not say the Wi-Gee-Hong, but a secret "conspiracy" to protect its members. Against what? Where is this secret protective league located, and what is it anyway? Is it some embrio Mafia located in a dark, unknown haunt of the vicious and outlaw refugees from justice in foreign lands? or is it the slaughter-house of the "Celestials" on Harrison avenue, mentioned in the Herald of March 3, 1890? or is it the stately, silent granite temple at the juncture of Tremont and Boylston streets? Who are these sworn secret "conspirators," and where do they hold their nightly conclaves? The people whose rights, and even lives, are endangered, would like to know. If they evade the vigilance of the police and escape the ubiquitous reporter, it might be well for the Legislature to appoint a committee of competent persons free from entangling alliances and invest them with power to search every nook and corner of these secret haunts of men and report through the press. It is impossible to determine whether the writer in the Herald refers to the Mafia, the Clan-na-Gael, the Wi-Gee-Hong, or the Freemason society, since they all administer oaths of obedience and secrecy, enforced by death penalties of the most revolting character; since all meet at night in some secure place and guard the approach to their asylum with sedulous care; and since all have been judically convicted of murder, surely to except Masonry would be an injustice to others, since it silenced Morgan in 1826 and according to Prof. L. T. Townsend, D.D., is still practicing its old-time barbarities in Mexico by assassinating Roman priests who will not recognize its priority of right to lodge secrets at the confessional.

Let us have the facts, something definite, Mr. Herald, and then if the people of Boston prefer to follow the example of New Orleans rather than to take warning and flee from the wrath to come, your skirts will be clear from their blood.

A PETITION FROM ALASKA.

Dr. E. P. Thwing of New York, writes us: "When a student in the Medical College, instructions the most minute and exacting were received as to the tender ministry one needs during the period of maternity. These are now recalled as my son, Dr. Clarence Thwing, in charge of the hospital at the Training School, Sitka, Alaska, writes for help in providing for the needs of Alaskan women. Let him tell his own story: 'Returning from a patient in the Ranch last night, as I walked along the back street of the Indian settlement, I spied in the moonlight a vacant lot. The thought came to me, there is the place for a native hospital. The need of this I have seen more and more since my work among the natives has been increasing. There is a particular call for a Lying-in Hospital, a Maternity, as the native custom is to turn women out-of-doors when about to be confined. To-day as I passed the vacant plot by daylight, I saw adjoining it a rude hut, or shelter, of poles and boards. Some more humane native had constructed this for the very purpose of giving partial protection from the weather to some of these outcast women in childbirth. Now if I can claim and fence in this unoccupied piece of ground it will be a very suitable location for the beginning of a hospital for sick women and children. Two hundred dollars would put up a building adapted to immediate needs. This work would be undertaken as an independent or private charity, involving no additional expense to the Presbyterian Mission.'"

Offerings for this most urgent need may be sent to Sitka direct, or to Dr. E. P. Thwing, 156 St. Marks Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The plea for these poor creatures is a very tender one, and gives to Christian women especially, an opportunity to express their appreciation of the blessings which civilization has brought to them in the hour of their supremest need.

Will not every one reading these lines respond to the call of Jesus through these suffering ones and send at once a gift that will gladden many a weary heart in these sad Alaskan homes? He loveth a cheerful giver. T.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An instance of the degradation of words.—Lodge blasphemy.—The Royal Knights.—Dr. Storr's missionary address.—Other matters.—A city child's idea of the country.—Wine in the Boston cooking classes.

I wonder if a hundred years of prohibition will suffice to take the smirch off that word saloon—which the lowest bar-room now claims for its own—and give it back its old place in the language. It is certainly a striking instance of the degradation of words from noble to ignoble meanings. Used in its French form salon, how it conjures up visions of wit, and wisdom, and beauty; of Mesdames De Stael and Recamier holding their intellectual courts, and now—the synonym for everything brutal and disgusting! But this is a small matter beside the degrading of sacred terms by the lodge. I noticed the other day in the report of the convocation of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Massachusetts, just held at the Masonic headquarters in Boston, the following item: "Previous to the session the order of High Priest was conferred on a large number of candidates." An inquiry into the character and occupation of some of these newly-made High Priests might elicit some curious facts. Infidelity lives on this profaning of things the most sacred. I do not envy any professed follower of Christ who can read an item like the above and not feel shocked to his very soul at the blasphemy of thus taking a title which belongs only to the Saviour of men, and bestowing it on—perhaps a liquor-seller. Now that the lodge has gained in so many of the daily papers a regular space for its own use, Christian people have a chance to read its utterances and judge for themselves. We can all remember when secret societies were scarcely mentioned in the daily press, and this new departure on their side shows that constant agitation has at least obliged them to take the defensive, and come out in a measure into the open light of day. This is the beginning of the end, for light means death to all creatures that love darkness.

"Good opportunities in these days for the poor man to save a few dollars, to put by a little for a rainy day, are rare." So says a new endowment order, rejoicing in the name of the Royal Knights, which has just started, ostensibly with the generous purpose of offering the poor man one of these "rare" opportunities, with the honors of royalty and knighthood thrown in. We have all the materials for an American Don Quixote; we only lack a Cervantes to use them, and the only wonder is that so rich a field for the humorist is suffered to lie fallow.

Seldom has an address on missions so stirred the religious heart of Boston, as did Dr. Storrs' at the recent Foreign Missionary Conference in Park St. church. The real greatness of it consisted in the fact that he took up the subject from its discouraging side—the declining interest in the foreign work—and yet handled it in such a masterly way as to draw inspiration from what seemed most depressing and unhopeful, as Samson took honey from the dead lion's skeleton. It was a splendid appeal to Christian manhood and womanhood to live their best, think their best and do their best for the evangelization of the world.

Yet in this same city which gave Dr. Storrs an audience as thoroughly appreciative and as keenly awake to the needs of the hour as could be found anywhere in the world, a French actress with a very unsavory reputation can make her pile of money and be feted and fawned upon by society women who would on no account touch the hand of a fallen sister of the street, though her sins against the law of purity be not half so black in the sight of God or of good men. All this is not reassuring to one who desires to think that public morals are improving instead of retrograding.

The question of biennial elections has suffered another defeat, which will lay it to rest for the present. There are disadvantages attendant on our system of frequent elections that every one knows and nearly every intelligent citizen has experienced; but there is a general feeling in the popular mind that on the whole the result is beneficial. A long tenure of office is apt to make rulers forget that they are the servants of the people, and movements in this direction are generally the first step towards despotism.

Gen. Butler's foolish talk that "it is time for the country to have another war," if reported correctly does not do him much credit. That every generation of Americans has seen war may be true, but must a bad precedent once established be forever kept up? This is reasoning too much a la John Chinaman.

A most pathetic little incident connected with the Open Air Mission for city children, is that of a little girl who utterly refused to walk on the grass which was all white with blooming daises. "I don't like to," she finally faltered when urged to give her reason. "It looks like graves. I never saw any country before except graves." Poor little waif, who had never known every country child's delight of telling her fortune with a daisy, and could only associate its starry beauty with the shadow of the grave!

I am thinking that it would be well for the W. C. T. U. to labor with the ladies who are at the head of the various cooking classes in Boston, for some of their recipes sin grievously against temperance. If confectioners who manufacture and sell "brandy drops" must feel the weight of the law, why should it be allowable to teach the girls and women who attend these cooking schools to use wine as a flavoring to sauces and soups, thus laying a foundation for untold domestic misery by developing the alcoholic habit in some husband, or son, or brother in whom it might otherwise have always lain happily dormant? Many of the teachers have taken a course of education abroad where the use of liquor is fashionable, but it is not foreign dishes, but plain, honest, American cookery that needs to be taught. When shall we have a school of cookery that shall be thoroughly national, and taught by a white ribboner, posted in all the latest discoveries in heredity and hygiene? What better opportunity for some millionaire to do good with his money than by endowing such an institution and calling it the Lucy Hayes school?—and doing it in his lifetime too instead of waiting for death. It would be of more practical benefit by far than giving it to already wealthy colleges whose wants seem to grow in proportion to the number and munificence of the benefactions they receive.

Reform News.

A QUESTION FOR DR. STORRS AND OTHERS TO PONDER.

Boston, Mass., March 20, 1891.

A strong plea for missions, and a "revival of the old time zeal for missions," was made at Park Street church yesterday. The announcement of Richard S. Storrs, D.D., as the speaker, brought out an evening audience of Boston's most cultivated and pious citizens. A previous engagement prevented my attendance, but the press reports are unusually full. According to the Herald, in numbering the causes which had produced "a relative decline in missionary zeal," Dr. Storrs omitted one which might very properly have been mentioned. The 684 lodges in Boston, and their corresponding numbers throughout the country, have more to do with abated ardor, depleted treasuries, and self-consecration to mission work, than is publicly expressed at these grand enthusiastic rallies. Not only do these lodges absorb money, time and thought needed to carry forward the work of the church, but many of them, like the Masons and Odd-fellows, teach and practice a religion of ceremonies in which their principal rites are borrowed from the very paganism the missionary seeks to destroy. A church board, indorsing at the communion table at home, and even in some instances commissioning and sending out lodge devotees, could hardly expect the smile of heaven upon its work, or a very enthusiastic support from the really pious people whose eyes had been opened to discern the truth. I do not believe Dr. Storrs favors the secret lodge religion either in this or other lands, but his reticence upon that subject is being used to lure pious young men into these snares of Satan.

A man who had taken ten degrees in Masonry said to me but recently, "My first favorable impressions of Masonry were received from R. S. Storrs, D.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y." If this is true, the Doctor has (it is to be hoped unwittingly) led one man into paganism in Boston, while so ably pleading for the emancipation of Africa and all heathen in foreign lands, from this same blighting curse. I hope the Doctor will not overlook this factor in his next enumeration of causes of abated zeal in missions, and will put himself in a position not to be *mis*quoted in support of paganism in civilized lands. Bethany mission held its third anniversary at Tremont Temple yesterday. It was my good fortune to listen to addresses by Mrs. Gleason, Mrs. Dr. Gordon and Bro. O. P. Gifford; each unlike the other in expression, but one in spirit and aim, and perfect gems of pure Scriptural and inspiring incentive to lift the fallen, to instruct the believer more perfectly, and to seek out and succor the perishing.

Quietly pursuing my special mission I met a gentleman from Woburn who gave me the hand of most cordial fellowship. He related a number of instances that had come under his own observation where promising young men had been ruined by their lodge associations. This reminds me of a man who called for books, etc., at the office one day this week. He said, "I have been in business over forty years, and I have seen many men ruined by their lodge associations, but I have never known a single one who was really benefited or helped in that way." He had read the Cynosure, and been a close observer, which gives weight to his testimony.

On the lodge influence we are nearing a point when there will be but one opinion among Christian people. The really pious and well-informed have but one opinion now, but it is hard for the average mind to admit the truth of the exposures.

At our regular Monday evening meeting this week I gave a "Chart Talk" on the Jewish and pagan features of Blue Lodge Masonry. There was present a pastor who had been "entered, passed and raised," and who said when invited an hour before the lecture, "I know all about it, but he don't know anything about it, if he has never been a Mason," etc. There was also present a theological professor and his wife. The usual opportunity for questions was given and a number were asked and answered. The professor and his wife could hardly credit the revelations to which they had listened, so abhorrent did they seem; but if the minister's silence is not to be construed as a confession, he certainly failed to make any denial when he had ample opportunity to do so. The professor took a copy of Finney's book, and both himself and wife assured me they should accept his statements without question, as he spoke from personal knowledge.

Last week I spoke in Providence to a company of earnest Christian workers assembled from several States. They received the truth with "readiness of mind," and asked many questions intelligently, which it is always a great satisfaction to hear and answer. This meeting was in striking contrast with meetings at Tariffville, Conn., where I spoke five evenings the week before. The lodge element was out in force, but offered no personal opposition. There was one gentleman whose friendship to the cause and its advocates provoked the hostility of the ruffians, and on my way to the depot the morning after my last lecture I noticed that the front of his store was daubed with the old pro-slavery arguments, which I suppose they thought the speaker could not appreciate, and so fired their eggs against Bro. Loomis's front door. J. P. Stoddard.

A LAWYER'S CHARACTERISTIC SPEECH.

Cannonsburg, Pa., March 25, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—This part of the earth has been shrouded with clouds for a week or more past, but this morning the sun shines undimmed. Many will welcome the dawning day with glad hearts, as much of the prevailing sickness is attributed to damp weather. I have much to be thankful for in the good health which I enjoy, and am having many spiritual feasts.

Last Sabbath the door opened for work in Burgettstown. I had the privilege of speaking to about 300 souls in the Presbyterian church in the morning, and about the same number in a union meeting held in the United Presbyterian church in the evening. The Presbyterian pastor, Rev. Weaver, is a young man who believes in proclaiming God's Word as he understands it, "whether men will hear or whether they will forbear." All he knew of the Masonic lodge, he said, was unfavorable to it. My temporal needs were amply provided for by the pastor of the United Presbyterian church, Dr. Carson, and his pleasant family. Rev. Irons of McDonald, and Rev. Atchison of Mansfield, received me kindly and will try and give me a hearing before I return.

For the past two evenings I have spoken in United Presbyterian churches in this place. The attendance last evening was fully double that of Monday. Rev. Smiley was necessarily away, but Revs. Lewis, McDonald and Scroggs were on hand. I am indebted to Rev. McDonald for the arrangement of the lectures.

Extra interest was given the meeting of last evening by a lawyer, named Brown, accepting my invitation to defend the lodge. He argued that the lodge did not affect outsiders, and—using his language—"they have no right to kick." "Supposing," said he, "it be true that we do many foolish things, is that anybody's business but our own? We swear to love one another, but we go out and hate one another. There are many Masons that I hate," said he. He thought we had no right to ridicule the Masons for wearing their peculiar regalia, even if it did look foolish. He had the profoundest respect for the Catholic with his beads, though their counting looked foolish to him. He said he had been a great fool once when he marched through the streets of Pittsburg until his feet were sore in Knights Templar garb. He would never do so again. But he thought if the people were foolish enough to stand along the sidewalk and look, they had no right to complain if the marching was foolish. If a man who was a Mason should come along and want a quarter, he would give it to him. He wanted the audience to consider that George Washington was a Mason, etc.

As will be seen, his talk was that of a man "without God and without hope." Mr. Brown said he would allow me to ask him questions, but in reply to the first one he said, "I am not at liberty to answer," thus admitting his slavery in the lodge, which was very evident.

I replied to his assertions and insinuations, but space does not here permit a review. The absurdity of such talk will be evident to Cynosure readers.

I go to-night to Houstonville for an address in the school-house. To-morrow evening I speak to those who may gather in Venice.

I have stopped at two hotels here and neither can I recommend. The first was first-class only in price; the proprietor of the second was up much of the night under the influence of liquor, looking for a revolver, killing imaginary rats, etc. How long will this curse of strong drink continue to make desolate homes!

W. B. Stoddard.

ONE CHURCH PROBLEM IN COVINGTON.

Covington, Ky., March 25, 1891.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last Sabbath morning I preached in the 7th St. M. E. church, and at night in the Union M. E. church, Covington, Ky. Dr. Robinson, the Union Church pastor, was absent. He has a large, wealthy church. One of his members pays $1,800 for the choir per year. They have a richly furnished church and a parsonage fit for a king's palace. One would think, surely the Gospel would flourish under such favorable circumstances. But it does not. The churchless masses avoid the place; and the members cannot be mustered for more than one service.

Something is wrong. What is it? My humble opinion is that secret oath-bound societies are the first great cause. They absorb the means, time and interest that should be devoted to the church; and until this monster is smitten, the problem of the churchless masses will be unsolved. It is true that the great work of the churches is to save the perishing. But there is a stone in the way of the church's progress in that work that must be rolled away before any progress can be made. How much it would help the church in her evangelistic work, to have all the saloons closed! How the work of saving souls would be facilitated if the railroad and postal service were discontinued on Sabbath, and Sunday newspapers abolished! How the work of rescuing the perishing would be promoted if we had a uniform national divorce law, doing away with speedy and easy divorce! How the church's work in winning the masses would be helped, if only God-fearing, upright and pure men were eligible to office! And what untold advantage would come to the church if this nation would honor the King of kings and secure his promised blessing of the Spirit upon the whole people! This is National Reformation. And until the Christian citizens in this land are ready to unite and make these reforms an accomplished fact, the problem of the churchless masses will be unsolved. J. M. Foster.

INSURANCE ON EARTH AND IN HEAVEN.

New Concord, March 7, 1891.

Editor Cynosure:—I would like an answer to the following queries:

1. Is giving and taking risks in the insurance organizations, one of God's ways of supplying the needs of his people; or is it a legitimate business in God's sight?

2. Are there not other branches of business in which to invest, and which would give better results?

THE ONLY RELIABLE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

President—God, our Father.

Cashier—Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

Secretary—The Holy Spirit, our Comforter.

Capital Stock—"The unsearchable riches of Christ."

Liabilities—"Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."

Assets—Real Estate—"An inheritance, incorruptible, and fadeth not away."

Supplies—"Able to do more abundantly above all we ask or think."

Condition of policy—"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Dividend—Heaven.

THE EXALTATION OF CHRIST.

Topsham, Vt., March 19, 1891.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I would say through your paper to W. N. Willson that I agree with him that civil government is a Divine institution, if it is set up according to God's law, resting on Christ's shoulder, as we have it in Isaiah 7: 6. But a government that does not acknowledge God nor take his law for its rule is not a Divine institution, for we read in Hosea 8: 6: "They have set up kings, but not by me; they have made princes and I knew it not." Have we not as a nation put the Constitution of the United States and the will of the people in the place of God and his law.

I do not believe the Lord is calling for a curse on the Covenanter church for not coming up to his help, for we seem to be doing more for his cause in some respects, according to our numbers, than most of the other denominations. Statistics show that we pay a larger average per member for the support of the Gospel at home and abroad, than any other denomination. And some think we are head and shoulders above others in National Reform work. We have a number of secretaries, which, together with the editors of the Christian Statesman, are spending nearly all of their time in this great work, with marked success.

"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up." The brazen serpent was to be lifted high on a pole so that all could see it; so we hope and pray that our secretaries will so exalt our Saviour in his meditorial office that the whole nation will see his beauty and majesty as ruler of nations and accept of him as their king and law-giver. I would say to W. N. Willson, if a church did not take God's law for its rule and refused to acknowledge Christ as ruler of nations as our chief magistrate did in his last Thanksgiving proclamation, I would stand aloof from such a church. I think it much easier to lift a tub out of the mud, when you are out of it, than to be in it, but if any think otherwise we will not quarrel with them.

I have taken the Christian Cynosure and Statesman ever since they were first published. They are the two best papers that I know of. In my younger days I got subscribers for them. Now I am in my 85th year, but I am trying still to help forward these reforms. I got a few subscribers for the Statesman this last year, but did not succeed with the Cynosure. I wish every family in the United States would take these two papers and follow their teaching. Then the nation would soon be reformed. I have been circulating the St. Louis sermon among the Methodist people in Topsham. It ought to be put in pamphlet form and sent broadcast over our land.

When the Israelites were bitten by serpents all they had to do was to look at the brazen serpent, which represented Christ, and they were healed. So now those bitten by the liquor serpent can be healed by looking to the cross of Christ, and so escape a drunkard's grave; but how can we expect any such thing while our government continues to carry on the accursed license system to such an alarming extent. More saloons all over the land than churches! Yet we read in our Bibles that "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ," and > "His large and great dominion shall

> From sea to sea extend;
> It from the river shall reach forth,
> Unto earth's utmost end."
> —Psalm 72: 8.

Then, the "kings shall become nursing fathers, and queens nursing mothers to the church," and the nations "shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruninghooks and learn war no more," and the voice be extended to all nations, "Bring forth the royal diadem and crown Him Lord of all." Josiah Divoll.

PITH AND POINT.

SECRET INSURANCE SOCIETIES.

As one of the best ways to destroy error is to hold up the truth and compare them together, will you please investigate (if not already in possession of such knowledge) and show a comparison between the reliable insurance companies and the secret society insurance departments, as to rates, etc., through the columns of your paper. I am a young man and have been asked to join the Oddfellows because of death and sick benefits to be derived from them; but as I think that all the benefits can be obtained at less cost outside of secret societies, I refuse to join them. I will add, however, that I object to them for other and more important reasons.—Wm. F. Tower.

The great hue and cry of the secret assessment societies that their rate is cheaper than can be obtained in any legitimate society is false. The Total Abstinence Life Association gives as low rates as any secret, irresponsible body in the country, and is far more reliable. There are others of like character. We are having prepared by a competent authority on life insurance, some statistics on this subject.

A SECEDER'S OPINION.

You ask me if I am a Freemason; and if so, what is my opinion of them. I will tell you in as brief a space as possible: It is a fraud from beginning to end, and of the worst type. When any man, whether a Mason or no, says that if a man will live up to the very letter of Freemasonry, and by so doing is as much of a Christian as he can be, he is a liar and the truth is not in him; and I honestly believe there are thousands now in Masonry, who, if they could have positively known the obligations and penalties they would have had to take upon themselves to become free and accepted Masons, they would sooner have gone through with the penalties than joined such a society. I also believe that there are thousands, if they could be made to believe and know the real secrets of Masonry, who would lift up their eyes with scorn and contempt on this fraternity. Let this suffice. You understand me in relation to Masonry for I speak from what I know honestly and truly before God and man.—X, Cadyville, R. I.

INCLUDE ALL THE LODGES.

I heartily agree that all the people in all the places and under as favorable circumstances as may be, should be invited to discuss and study the problem of secretism, and that as often as may be possible. I wish in all your calls and all the work against the lodge, that the word oath-bound might be dropped. Among many people it marks a distinction which destroys the force of the truth. —A.F. Jennings, Editor Gospel Record.

THE CYNOSURE AS A COMMENTARY.

I am greatly attached to the Christian Cynosure. It is the one nearly perfect religious paper, and I wish it to be a constant visitor to my house. And while the Cynosure is not designed to be a commentary on every passage of the Bible, yet it so well unfolds the great principles of divine truth, that no minister can afford to be without it in his study.—Levin Wilson, Cynthiana, Ind.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

It has been fully demonstrated to me in my dealings with Masons in courts that they will perjure themselves by testifying contrary to the truth which they have sworn to tell, in order to keep their lodge oaths, which are illegal. The first step into Masonry the candidate voluntarily swears to do something he knows not what. Lev. 5: 4, 5, where it is forbidden. Also in Mat. 5: 34–6. In joining a lodge the candidate voluntarily receives the mark of the beast, or of his image, and his doom is described in the 19th of Rev. and 20th verse. The government of pagan Rome in Scripture is evidently represented by the first beast, and papal Rome by the second beast; and Freemasonry is the "Image of the Beast." Read the 13th chapter of Revelation. Masonry by its own showing is a separate and distinct government of itself, acknowledging no allegiance to any other but its own; and is the only government fulfilling the prophecy. So that whoever subscribes to Masonry has the mark of the beast.—Harris Johnson.

THE TEN-HORNED BEAST AND NATIONAL REFORM.

I find a notice of Bro. Chamberlain, that there is a book, "Bible Readings for the Home Circle," which claims that the ten-horned beast (Rev. 13) is the National Reform Association in the United States. Bro. Chamberlain wishes that some one would do justice to the subject and criticise said work. I assure him that the work is all false. This beast has long been in existence in the Christian church. It dates back to the fourth century, and was a terrible creature in the Dark Ages, when the Roman church ruled over the minds of men.—B. Appel, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

THE GOOD MAN ARGUMENT.

The good man, made so by grace, the Christian, is a representative of Jesus Christ, "showing forth his praises" in the world; but be careful where you go to find him. "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth;"—he has not gone into hermitage, as devout Catholics do,—"Behold he is in the secret chambers (lodges); believe it not." You won't find him there. Believe it not. Christ could not go into such places, and he knew his real followers could not without denying him. No man can follow Christ into a lodge nor take Christ into a lodge with him; so Christ is left out; therefore, the claim that good men are in the lodge, is only false and deceptive, for no man is good only while he has Jesus Christ with him as his Saviour and Lord. "Behold, he is in the secret chambers;" believe it not.—R. Canning, Galva, Ill.

After having had the Cynosure in my family ever since it has been two years old, it is pretty hard now to get along without it.—J. B. Crall.

May God bless your efforts to spread the light through the Cynosure so that men may leave the hidden works of darkness and seek light in Christ.—J. W. Snively.

We wish you success. We are always glad to receive the paper, and when we are through reading it, we almost always send it out for others to read.—A. Knox.

LITERATURE.

The Tonga Islands and other Groups. By Emma H. Adams, author of "Savonarola," etc. Pp. 160. Price 50c. Pacific Press Pub. Co., Oakland, Cal.

The history of many of the interesting island groups of the Pacific are comparatively unknown to ordinary readers except through the writings of missionaries. When international complications arise, as a year ago at Samoa, or more lately at Ponape, so little is known of the locality or the people that it is like showing pictures to the blind. This little volume gives something of the history of the Tongas, the Hervey group, and the Marquesas islands, before they were visited by the missionaries, and indeed were hardly known to the first navigators of those seas. The habits of the people, their government, the vegetable wonders on shore and the great wonders of the sea about them, are graphically told in a manner that cannot fail to entertain and instruct young readers.

Prof. H. M. Scott, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, writes the opening article in the current number of Our Day, on the "New Theology in Japan." It is a very scholarly article on the modern phase of liberalism in the church, which is the "fire-in-the-rear" of orthodoxy. Prof. Scott shows briefly how this covert infidelity is taking some root in Japan and threatens great evil there. Rev. Dr. R. H. Howard's article on "John Wesley, Evangelist and Reformer," is almost as entertaining as Dr. Buckley's address at the Memorial celebration at the Auditorium on the 19th of March. But Dr. Howard places Wesley among the reformers, and pleads ably that he should have a noble place in the ranks of men who have turned the world about toward God. Joseph Cook's first prelude in the Monday lecture course of 1891 also appears. It is on "Misleading Mormon Manifestos," a topic which his recent investigations in Salt Lake City enabled him to speak upon with assurance and with convincing power.

Scribner's Magazine for April marks the beginning of the richly illustrated series on "Ocean Steamships" which, it is believed, will be as successful as the "Railway" and "Electric" series. "The Meaning of the Dakota Outbreak" gives both sides of the question, and suggests three definite remedies. Herbert Welsh, the author, has studied the subject for nine years, and is a nephew of William Welsh, of Philadelphia, who was one of President Grant's Indian Commissioners, and gave constant attention to the Indian question for twenty years. Mr. Herbert Welsh has three times visited the Dakota Sioux, and travelled through all parts of their reservation. This paper should enable fair-minded people to arrive at a reasonable conclusion concerning the recent outbreak, and the whole Indian question. "A Kangaroo Hunt," by Birge Harrison, the American artist, who has been living for some time in Australia, gives much information about the habits of the Kangaroo. A. J. Mounteney Jephson (one of Mr. Stanley's trusted lieutenants) completes his story of the relief of Nelson, and incidentally discusses the horrors of the slave-trade, with some suggestions as to their cure. "Where the Ice never Melts" is the account of a most noteworthy voyage to Point Barrow, the northernmost part of Alaska, by the U. S. steamer Thetis, which was sent to build there a house of refuge for shipwrecked whalers. Robert Gordon Butler tells the story from the diaries of Captain Stockton, who commanded the Thetis, and from conversations with him. Professor Thomas Dwight discusses "What is Right-Handedness?" "The Story of the Fresh-Air Fund" is by Rev. Willard Parsons, the originator of the idea and manager of the fund. It was started by giving nine poor city children a two-weeks' country vacation in 1877, and last year, under the auspices of the New York Tribune, it sent 11,000 into the country.

The Missionary Review for April opens a strong table of contents with an article on the Jesuit Mission work in India, by Rev. E. Storrow of Brighton, England. He says the condition of the natives affected by the doctrine of these secretists is worse than that of the Samaritans described in 2d Kings, "who feared the Lord and served their own Gods." Dr. Gracey writes on "Missionary Methods officially Reviewed." Rev. C. B. Ward of Secunderabad, India, writes of the Telugu Mission in that country, in which he has labored with much success for years as a self-sustaining missionary. Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston, taking the text, "Your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace," writes on the "Missionaries' Shoes." "Why Missions are Modern," "Light in Darkest England," "Mission Work in Darkest England," are other articles of interest.

The frontispiece is a portrait of General Sherman, drawn by Gribayedoff, and Sherman and Bismarck come in for the major part of Murat Halstead's Review of Current Events in the Cosmopolitan for April. The executive mansion, the "White House," one of the first points to be visited by those who go to Washington, is described by Mr. George Grantham Bain, the Washington correspondent, while the interior is illustrated with many views taken specially for the Cosmopolitan by permission of the President. Perhaps the feature which will appeal most strongly to literary people, is Brander Matthews' article on the Women Writers of America. The Nicaragua Canl is described and illustrated by Harvey, and the Japanese theatre by Miss Scidmore. Samples are given of the best work of Meissonier, and Frederic Villiers tells the curious story of a war correspondent's life.

General Sherman, shortly before his death, by written contract, put his memoirs in the hands of Webster & Co., of New York. They, carrying out the spirit of the contract, are about to bring out a cheap edition of his celebrated work; with a brief appendix by Hon. James G. Blaine, including the closing years of General Sherman's life, his last illness, death and funeral pageant. The work will be in one volume and will contain the full text of the original memoirs. It will be sold at $2.00, all former editions having been sold at $5.00. The proceeds of the work will be devoted to the interests of those whom General Sherman has left dependent for support upon the income of the estate.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, Editor.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, Associate Editor and Publisher.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1891.

The President of the Wisconsin State Association has seldom written for the Cynosure, but when he does write he has something to say. None of our readers can afford to omit or read lightly the article on the Shekinah in this number; nor should they trifle with the question that must be forced upon every reader: Will not God now withdraw from the church which too long commits spiritual adultery with the secret lodge worships?

ARE THEY CHRISTIAN OR POPISH?

A dozen or so able and interesting papers came to us last week ablaze with Easter,—pictures on the cover, Easter poetry, and other like articles, representing Easter and not the Christian Sabbath as the day to commemorate the resurrection of Christ. The Cynosure has endeavored, and will still endeavor to treat our cotemporaries with due courtesy. But if Romish festivals once cast off are to supplant in their columns the Christian Sabbath as Christ's resurrection day,—as Easter, like the lodge, is a simple human religious contrivance, and as every such contrivance strengthens every other, and weakens whatever is Divine—we submit to our readers whether they approve of their reputed organs foisting these Romish festivals upon Puritan and other non-ritualistic churches.

It goes without saying that "Easter" is not Scriptural. The word occurs but once in the whole Bible (Acts 12: 4), which is gross mistranslation. The word (Pascha) is everywhere else translated Passover. So say Henry, Adam Clark and all others. So our revised version translates it. So the very name "Easter" is not in the Bible; and if it was, there is no authority for a religious festival of that name. The cool, calm, clear-headed Dr. A. Alexander of Princeton, says: "All the rites of worship invented by men are altogether unworthy of God; and truly, in the nature of things, it is impossible that men should devise a form of worship acceptable; for no service which he has not himself appointed can be pleasing in the sight of God." (Alex., Evidence, p. 36.)

God says, Deut. 4: 2, "Ye shall not add to the word which I command, neither shall ye diminish aught from it." A man who should have then instituted an uncommanded festival like Easter would have been capitally executed; and the New Testament is no less strict, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you;" and who can authorize as a part of religion anything else?

Easter (spelled Eostre) was the name of the Saxon goddess of strumpet-women, "the Northern Venus.' The heathen Saxons instituted a feast in her honor, and Romish priests took down her image and turned her festival into a day of merry-making and rejoicing for the resurrection of Christ. And surely the history of this festival makes nothing in its favor.

But the Puritans, the men who founded and framed the United States, "detested Romanism as a fiction of human contrivance." (Palfrey I 274.) And Bradshaw in his Apology in the days of Queen Elizabeth (Neal, Vol. I., p. 248) says: "The Puritans hold and maintain: that all inventions of men, especially such as have been abused to idolatry, are to be excluded out of the exercises of religion." Easter is an invention of men which has been abused to idolatry." The Puritans and their descendants abhorred and excluded it. And they have never even been charged with error, much less proved to have erred in excluding it. How can such papers as the Advance, then, by any principle of reason, honesty, or Scripture, restore this Romish festival and declare it "The foundation of the world's hope," and still claim to represent Puritanism and oppose popery?

Will the Advance point out one spot on our globe where this festival has taught the people reverence for the glorious resurrection of the Son of God? Nay, one spot where it has not run down and destroyed the sanctity of the day on which Christ actually arose; and which his apostles, who were inspired church-founders, observe and kept as "The Lord's Day?" (Rev. 1: 10.)

Surely the bull-baitings of our neighbor republic, Mexico, which are a leading feature of their observance of "the Lord's day," while all the Romish festivals are kept sacred after their manner, are no justification of these papers in foisting on our churches a religion which ignores the Bible and which the founders of the United States abhorred.

DR. HOWARD CROSBY.

As the sun set Sabbath evening last, Dr. Crosby passed to his reward at his home in New York. He had been for days seriously ill, and the dispatches told us for days of the improbability of his recovery. His death was peaceful. Just before the end he asked by sign for paper and wrote a few lines to the members of his family, those at his side, and the son and daughter in Egypt. The writing began, "I know I have to go." Thus calmly passed this eminent man to his God.

The Cynosure published a biographical sketch of Dr. Crosby Oct. 20, 1887; and last December (11th) we reprinted his condemnation of secret societies, written for the Congregationalist of Boston in 1871. The sentiments of that paper have been several times since referred to by their author as a conviction that was unalterable.

Few ministers of the Presbyterian church in America were more honored than Dr. Crosby. The force of his natural ability was early manifested, and to the last had its influence over men. He entered college at 14 and graduated at 18; and in the same institution, the University of the City of New York, he was professor in 1851, Chancellor in 1878, and Vice-chancellor up to the time of his death. In 1863 he became pastor of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church in New York; and he died in that office, having been also moderator of the General Assembly in 1873 and delegate to the Presbyterian General Council in Edinburg in 1877.

Soon after his appointment as pastor, he began a crusade against vice and intemperance which made him famous. A cotemporary says: "He had not at first much success in inducing either the clergy or the laity to join in his crusade, but in 1877 he organized the Society for the Prevention of Crime. Its object was to put down illicit drink traffic, to suppress concert saloons, low theaters and to purify criminal courts. He was continually in collision with excise commissioners and police captains. His attack on Police Captain Williams in 1887 was one of the most important of these encounters. Dr. Crosby was decidedly a moderate man. He declared that total abstinence was not called for by the Gospel and he did not urge it in practice. A few years ago he had a serious disagreement with a number of Presbyterian ministers on account of his expressed opinion that the law should give workingmen a chance to buy beer Sundays. He was also moderate as a theologian, and at the Hartford congress of churches said he aimed at bringing together the different Christian sects."

There is no doubt his position on the temperance question, so tenaciously held, was the source of untold evil. His celebrated address, "A Calm View of the Temperance Question," given in the Boston Monday Lecture Course in Tremont Temple Jan. 10, 1881, was widely circulated by the liquor sellers, and called out the ablest replies from Wendell Phillips, Drs. A. J. Gordon, Mark Hopkins, T. L. Cuyler and others.

His father was an eminent philanthropist, and Dr. Crosby inherited his spirit, and it must be regretted that his record was so seriously darkened in this one particular. He is now gone into the presence of his God, where all such questions are more truly and quickly decided than here.

THE FLAG IS STILL THERE.

Mr. Moody, first of evangelists, and Joseph Cook, first of lecturers, have both lately repeated their warning against secretism. Messiah's Herald of Boston in last week's number reported briefly Mr. Moody's address on March 11th, we suppose in the same city. The subject was communion with God, walking with him in separation from the world. He urged with his well-known frankness and force, that we should not be "yoked together" with ungodly men. He applied the truth to lodge companionship, thus:

"So of the Odd-fellows and Freemasons. You will not have much Holy Ghost power until you get out of them. Why don't you say amen to this? ('Amen!' cried a few.) But you couldn't say amen until I reminded you of it. One man told me he belonged to seven lodges. All his time was given to them. He had none for meetings."

This is the abbreviated report in the Herald. It is cheering. As God gives Mr. Moody a testimony on this great evil he gives it plainly and in terms that cannot be misunderstood.

Last Wednesday evening Mr. Cook lectured before a large audience in the College Hall at Wheaton. His subject was "Leaders and Misleaders." He discussed the Southern problem, the labor question, prohibition as a political issue, Henry George and single tax, the public schools and Romish aggression, the Sabbath rest question in its relation to the World's Fair, and secret societies, as he alone can.

On the latter topic his words were about as follows:

"We are again face to face with the question of secret societies. There are two kinds of these societies, the gilt-edged and the guilty-edged. The late developments at New Orleans, the Clan-na-Gael murder in Chicago, teach us that we should have done with the latter. The principles of this College within whose walls we meet to-night are surely permeating the mass of American mind on this subject; and the venerable champion of this movement present with us may live to see them everywhere vindicated. I hear more and more of secret societies as I meet with men here and there over our country. The Sunday papers give six or seven columns to these lodge matters and one or two to religion, which is a forecast of their character. The creed of all these societies may be to casual observers very good, but the effect of their work on society, even of those which aspire to be gilt-edged, is mischievous in an exceeding high degree; and as for the Mafia, the Clan-na-Gael, and like organizations, they are destined to be swiftly overthrown and banished by an aroused popular conviction. The American people all do well to heed the word of Wendell Phillips that secret societies are needed for no good purposes. Come out of these societies, young man, if you have been unwisely persuaded to join. Come out of them; and if you are out, stay out. The mischief of secret societies approaches that of the saloons in its widespread and evil effects. It should be abated in our country."

Thus do these great men cheer on the people of God. They are not of the number of those who yield a position once conscientiously taken, because the winds of popular favor do not blow flatteringly about it. Because of the truth they have set up a banner and they stand by it. God bless their words, and give them wings and power.

CHICAGO'S NEXT MAYOR.

The bands parading the streets daily, the great mass meetings in every part of the city, the columns of appeal and crimination in the papers,—all show that Chicago is passing through a grave crisis. Next Tuesday a mayor and a number of aldermen are elected. We have spoken briefly of the five candidates: Hempstead Washburne representing the Republican "machine," and Cregier the Democratic. Thomas Morgan nominated by the socialists; Carter Harrison by his personal friends of the Democratic party and by the Personal Liberty League of saloon-keepers; and Elmer Washburn by the "committee of one hundred," representing, in part at least, various secret orders opposed to Romanism and foreign aggression.

Cregier and Harrison are notable Freemasons, but just what effect this fact has upon their interests it is not easy to say. The former has been maintained in a long course of office-holding by the lodge. His main secret society support, according to the city press, is now from the infamous Clan-na-Gael. It is believed that the hold of this order upon the police force was never broken. Public sentiment made some demands last year during the Cronin trial, but little heed was given them. There were plenty of Clan-na-Gael members on the force, as appeared from the evidence at the trial, but they are there still.

The Personal Rights League is composed largely of German infidels and saloon-keepers, who are organized under this name to resist the enforcement of prohibitory and Sunday laws. The career of their candidate is known all over the country. Mr. Washburne has a Catholic wife, and is supported by the gang of "outs" who want the offices for their party. While personally he may be an amiable man, he cannot, it is feared, withstand for a moment the demands of his party backers, who are hardly more to be trusted than those of the Democratic candidates.

The really non-partisan candidate seems to be Elmer Washburn. Many of his backers have most objectionable relations in the secret lodge; but many, too, have not. He himself is a man who has been tried, and his integrity and capacity for organization and government is known, and can be trusted. He is not a secretist, as the following letter, published in the Inter Ocean in reply to a Democrat, shows:

My Dear Sir: Your communication of the 23d inst., is at hand, and in reply I have to say that:

1. I am not and never have been a member of a Know-nothing or other secret organization of any kind or description.

2. I am not and never have been pledged to discriminate against any nationality or any religious sect, and I never have so discriminated, nor has any such pledge ever been requested of me.

3. I am not pledged to give the city patronage to any individual or to a member of any society, clique, clan, party, or religious sect, oath-bound or otherwise. I have never promised a position pending any nomination or election.

The platform of principles adopted by the "citizen movement" is familiar to all. I am simply pledged to stand upon that platform. It means, among other things, that public servants should not practice such discriminations as those to which you refer. And I am surprised that the substance of your inquiries should have been regarded, even, with a suspicion of truth by any persons in this community.

In further reply I will say that, as there is nothing of a confidential character involved in this correspondence, I shall not object to any use you may make of my letter. Very sincerely yours, Elmer Washburn.

The writer of such a letter would be a good mayor for Chicago during the World's Fair. We hope he will be elected.

—Rev. Alexander Thomson, pastor of the Congregational church of Bartlett, Ill., and president of the N. C. A. Board, contemplates a change in his church work.

—James A. Chalmers, late elder in the United Presbyterian church of Topeka, Kansas, and father of Rev. Thomas M. Chalmers, an esteemed co-worker in our reform, died at his home in Lawrence, Kan., on the 15th of March. He had been a sufferer for years. He is remembered in the church as a most earnest officer and faithful Christian.

—The Associate Reformed Presbyterian of Due West, S. C., commenting on the Mafia affair in New Orleans, says: What a striking illustration in this humiliating record of the evil of these "secret," oath-bound orders. They are a standing menace to the peace and safety of the community. They love the darkness because their deeds are evil. The supreme mystery of such organizations is the mystery of iniquity.

—Since the address of Pres. C. A. Blanchard at the Northwestern University, the Massasoit Club, who invited him, have been pushing their cause of open work among American students with commendable zeal. They have appointed three of their number, William Ferris, Benjamin Rist and C. B. Earnhearst, a committee to correspond with other colleges in regard to forming a national non-fraternity organization. This will be cheering news in many institutions.

—The Gospel Messenger, representing the German Baptist (Dunker) church, publishes an able article on the incompatibility of the principles that control the lodge and those of the Christian church. The writer urges that the ministers and teachers be faithful in their public efforts to warn their hearers of the lodge curse; and recommends that the Cynosure be taken in all families to prevent the boys from joining the secret orders.

—Our Washington agent finds western Pennsylvania a great field. From McDonald, the county-seat of Washington county, he wrote Friday: "Several months' work in this county would be of great profit to our cause." But the roads are almost impassible, and threatened sickness in his family at Washington inclines him to return thither and follow out his plan to give the month of April to New York city and Brooklyn.

—The report about the removal of the corner-stone of the Masonic Temple in this city we gave last week on the authority of the Inter Ocean and the News. The Journal says the story is not true. Let that be as it may, God has removed the corner-stone and moving spirit of the affair. Last week N. T. Gassette died after a few days' illness. The temple was of his planning and so far he seems to have been the executive head of the organization building it.

—Rev. D. W. Wise of Granville, Ill., has accepted the call of the College Church, Wheaton, to be their pastor, and will remove about May 1st. The church of which he has been pastor for five years excludes secret societies from its communion; and Bro. Wise assisted the Congregational Council which met at Wheaton, March 27, 1888, to its important decision, that churches of that persuasion have the right to adopt a rule separating the followers of Jesus Christ from the secret lodges.

—The Cosmopolitan magazine which we are enabled to offer to our subscribers at very favorable rates, is widely recognized as one of the most interesting of our illustrated publications. Its publishers are anxious to secure permanent subscribers and make the Cynosure subscribers an excellent offer. It contains yearly some 1,500 pages of reading matter, a large proportion of which is finely illustrated. A profitable investment is offered in the Cynosure and Cosmopolitan for $3.00 to new subscribers to both; $3.50 to old subscribers to both; and $3.25 to all our present subscribers who do not take the magazine.

—Actual experience with garden cultivators warrants the highest commendation of the Manweight Cultivator which we advertise this week and offer free (except freight) to those who get up clubs. The ordinary cultivator is pushed by the arms and is hard work at times. This new machine is pushed forward easily by the simple weight of the body. There is no garden tool a boy likes so well as a cultivator. With this new machine a boy can cultivate a quarter to half an acre and think it play. The wheels are high so he can make a team of his playmates and pull it through the soil. Before the first of May we should be glad to add a hundred clubs of eighteen to our list in exchange for this useful and beautiful implement.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., March 25, 1891.

The Treasury department has made a change in the form of stamp to be issued to retail liquor dealers that will be pleasing to temperance people in all States that have a prohibitory liquor law, and also in cities and counties that have a "local option" law. Across the face of every stamp issued by the internal revenue bureau to liquor dealers after July 1, will be the following, conspicuously printed:

"This stamp is simply a receipt for a tax due the Government, and does not exempt the holder from any penalty or punishment provided for by the law of any State for carrying on the said business within such State, and does not authorize the commencement nor the continuance of such business contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law."

This change was made because of numerous letters received at the department saying that retail liquor dealers were openly defying the local laws, claiming that the United States license was a permit to do business, and it seems in many cases succeeding in convincing local officials, not well informed, that their claim was a valid one. The United States issues no license or permit to carry on the liquor business, and the stamp represents simply a revenue tax placed upon the business by Congress. It is believed that under this change many places where liquor is now sold will be closed.

Another honorable woman's head bowed with shame on account of the cursed alcoholic fiend. A young man, the son of a good woman and the step-son of a United States Senator, while crazed with liquor, went to the White House, at night, and forced an entrance by smashing the glass in the windows, shouting and raving meanwhile like a madman. He was arrested and carried to the station house, like a common criminal. Long after midnight his fond mother was awakened to be told the story of her darling boy's disgrace. Imagine, dear reader, if you can, the feelings of that mother, when at 2 o'clock in the morning she met her boy in the station house, whither she had gone for him. He was then sober enough to realize the enormity of the disgrace he had brought upon himself and upon his family by his conduct, and let us hope that he was also truly repentant. What a terrible warning this case presents to the young man who persists in swallowing that which destroys his reason, and for that purpose alone it is here mentioned.

In addition to the regular church services this week, Father Ignatius, the Anglican monk, has preached twice each day. His meetings have been up to this time slimly attended, one reason for which, perhaps, is the admission fee he charges. Our people are not accustomed to seeing tickets sold, just like at any ordinary secular entertainment, for religious services. His visit here has accomplished one good result, if no more. Having recently been among the Seminole Indians in Florida, he noticed that a certain class of white people made a practice of supplying those Indians with intoxicating liquors in order to rob them. He called the President's attention to this and told him what a demoralizing effect it was having on the Indians. There is a law against this liquor traffic, and Mr. Harrison told Father Ignatius that he would see that it was enforced.

At a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Sunday afternoon, Senator Peffer, of Kansas, was the principal speaker, addressing his remarks mostly to the young men and women, who are the hope of society. He told them of the benefits, socially, intellectually and physically, to be gained by temperance, and of the great and good work it had done and was doing in his State. He said: "I represent particularly the farmers and the laboring men, and I know that they are nearly all prohibitionists. They see no good in the saloon, and they recognize no argument for the habit which brutalizes men and women. If there had never been any dram-shops in the world many a mother's heart would not have been wrung and lacerated in agony by the fall of her son from the path of rectitude." *

All Reformed Presbyterians who purpose to attend the anti-secret conference soon to be held in Chicago, can be furnished with credentials as delegates by notifying the undersigned. We hope many will find it convenient and see it their duty to attend. By order of Synod. J. S. T. Milligan, Ch'n Standing Com. on Secret Orders, R. P. C,, Denison, Kan.

A soap-bubble party is a pretty way of entertaining children, or even those of larger growth, as there is a fascination about the airy, fairy thing that makes even "a grown up" like to try his luck in producing "a perfect beauty," as the children say. A novel idea for such an entertainment is to have little bats covered with felt; a bubble can be batted up into the air a number of times before it finally bursts into nothing, and it is delightful to see a number of children eagerly keeping the pretty things up above their heads. The bats can be easily made of stiff wire, and then covered with thin felt. Twist the wire into this shape and then tack felt over the circle. At the toy shops they have a little plaything called the soap bubble toy, which is a novelty for this season, and which has an arrangement for blowing the bubbles, a tin for the soap water and a bat; but it is doubtful if the children will like this more elaborate arrangement as well as the penny pipe and the home-made bat.—Selected.

The Home.

"THE FATHER HIMSELF LOVETH YOU."

Be still, my soul, Jehovah loveth thee!
Fret not, nor murmur at thy weary lot;
Though dark and lone thy journey seems to be,
Be sure that thou art ne'er by him forgot;
He ever loves; then trust him, trust him still;
Let all thy care be this—the doing of his will.

Thy hand in his, like fondest, happiest child,
Place thou, nor draw it for a moment thence;
Walk thou with him, a Father reconciled,
Till in his own good time he calls thee hence.
Walk with him now, so shall thy way be bright,
And all thy soul be filled with his most glorious light.

Take courage, faint not, though the foe be strong,
Christ is thy strength! He fighteth on thy side;
Swift be thy race; remember, 'tis not long,
The goal is near; the prize he will provide,
And then from earthly toil thou restest ever,
Never again to toil, or fight, or fear—O, never!

He comes with his reward; 'tis just at hand;
He comes in glory to his promised throne;
My soul rejoice! ere long thy feet shall stand,
Within the City of the Blessed One.
Thy perils past, thy heritage secure,
Thy tears all wiped away, thy joy forever sure!

—Horatius Bonar.

UNCLAIMED TERRITORY OF DIVINE PROMISES.

Beside the literal ground unoccupied for Christ, there is the unclaimed, untrodden territory of Divine promises. What did God say to Joshua in chapter 1:3? "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you," and then he draws the outlines of the Land of Promise—all theirs, on one condition: that they shall march through the length and breadth of it, and measure it off by their own feet. They never did that to more than one-third of the property, and consequently they never had more than one-third; they had just what they measured off, and no more. Now, if we turn to the New Testament, in the Second Epistle of Peter, we read about that other "Land of Promise" that is opened up to us "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Mark the close analogy between those two passages. Here is God's true Land of Promise, "exceeding great," "exceeding precious;" and it is God's will that we should, as it were, measure off that territory by the feet of obedient faith and believing obedience, thus claiming and appropriating it for our own, becoming partakers of the Divine nature, and escaping corruption which is in the world through lust and which was typified by the Canaanites that had to be expelled before the Land of Promise could be possessed.

Now, let us look at these promises. They are marvellous! How many of us have ever imagined the wealth and the extent of that land? And how many of us have ever taken possession of the promises of God in the name of Jesus Christ? It is a territory for faith to lay hold on and march through the length and breadth of, and faith has never yet done it. The faith of the church has, thus far, taken possession only of a very small portion of this exceeding great and precious land, and the rest lies in the "regions beyond."

We are limited by sight; sight makes a great deal of the visible and temporal, and unbelieving disciples prefer that which is tangible to that which is unseen and eternal.

Sight emphasizes numbers. Hear what God says: "One of you shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight." That is God's arithmetic. Twice one thousand is two thousand; but in God's arithmetic twice one thousand is ten thousand. God is sublimely indifferent to numbers. It is not quantity but quality for which God cares. He would rather have one consecrated man or woman than a thousand who are half-hearted in his service; so he keeps sifting down, and down, just as he did Gideon's great multitude, till he gets the choice "three hundred" with whom he can do mighty works.

Sight emphasizes power. See how sublimely indifferent God is to power. While we are seeking the patronage of great, or rich, or mighty men, God is taking up the poor and the weak, and the despised and the base, and the things that are nothing, and with them bringing to naught the things that are something.

Fellow-believers, we have to take possession of this region of unclaimed promises; and inasmuch as we are applying this truth especially in the interest of missions, let us give our attention to a most important distinction. Christ says in Matthew: "Go, . . . make disciples of all nations. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." That is his promise. Then, in Luke, he says: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you, but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high."

The promise of Christ and the promise of the Father are not the same thing. Christ's promise is the promise of his personal presence, and the exercise of his omnipotent power in behalf of his missionary band. The promise of the Father is the promise of a descending Holy Spirit to break down internal barriers in the minds and hearts of men, and to endue his own disciples with the wondrous unction from above. Now, these are two promises—not to speak of any others. Think of them in their bearing on Christian missions.

When Joshua saw a man standing in the neighborhood of the city of Jericho, he said, challenging him, "Art thou for us or against us?" This strange personage said, "Nay, but as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come;" and Joshua perceived that he was the Angel of the Lord, and took off his own shoes in reverence, and waited for his command; and, in accordance with the precise directions that he gave, Joshua moved round that city once a day for six days, and seven times on the seventh day; and then without a blow being struck, the walls fell, and they went into Jericho and took captive all that were within it. What is that but a historical allegory in the Old Testament illustrating the facts of the New? When the Acts of the Apostles opens, which corresponds, in the New Testament, to the book of Joshua in the Old, we have there the hosts of God on the day of Pentecost simply surrounding the fortress of Jewish prejudice, superstition, and alienation from God, with the trumpet-blast, the preaching of the Gospel; and on that day also without a carnal blow being struck, without any human philosophy to account for it, three thousand were pricked in their hearts, and said, "What shall we do?" and were taken captive for God. What is all this but the Captain of the Lord's host going before the missionary band, and repeating the miracle of Jericho? Walls fall at once that might have stood for a thousand years but for his presence. All human calculation is disappointed when the Captain of the Lord's host appears on the scene.

The promise of the Holy Ghost is one of special grace from above on teachers and preachers; and then also on those that hear the Word; as in the house of Cornelius, it becomes converting grace to the hearers as it has been anointing grace to those that speak.

Look at this territory of promise. Suppose that the church should pass all that has been attained, overleap all barriers, disregard the measure of past human attainment, and simply march over the length and breadth of these promises, claim the presence of the Captain of the Lord's host, claim his intervention, the fulfillment of his word, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age," claim the prostration of barriers that no man could prostrate without the power of his presence and influence! Suppose that the Christian church should get down on her face before God to-day, and pray the Captain of the Lord's host to remove the obstacles that prevent our going into Thibet, that has stood there on her heights, walled about by her mountains, and thus far defied even the Moravians to obtain access to the shrine of the Grand Lama worship,—what might we not see in the year 1891, if we believed that this Jericho that could not be taken by the power of any man could be taken by the simple fiat of the Captain of the Lord's host!

And suppose that there was this believing appropriation of the promised Spirit in anointing power on teachers and preachers, and in converting power on audiences that hear the Word in the communities in the midst of which these men are laboring, what new things we might see! It is very noticeable that Peter did not say, on the day of Pentecost, that this was the fulfillment of what had been spoken by the prophet Joel. The more minutely we study the Scriptures the more we shall believe in the inspiration of the very words of Holy Scripture. There is no mistaking the words Peter uses here. He does not say, "This is the fulfillment of what Joel said." He simply says, "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel. This is not spirituous intoxication, but spiritual exhileration. It is not new wine, but is the new wine of the kingdom, even as Joel foretold." This was a foretaste; the fulfillment of Joel's word is yet to come. There is to be a greater Pentecost, to which that was only like the first few drops that indicate the mighty rain that is to come down on the mown grass and refresh the earth; and we ought to pray to-day for, and claim from God, a Pentecost so much greater than the first Pentecost, that it should at last begin to fill up to the full the language that Joel uses in that remarkable prophecy.—Missionary Review.

"I FORGOT IT."

The American Grocer gives the following advice, which every boy will do well to remember:

A successful business man says there were two things which he learned when he was eighteen, which were ever afterwards of great use to him, namely, "Never to lose anything, and never to forget anything."

An old lawyer sent him with an important paper, with certain instructions what to do with it. "But," inquired the young man, "suppose I lose it; what shall I do then?"

"You must not lose it."

"I don't mean to," said the young man, "but suppose I should happen to?"

"But I say you must not happen to; I shall make no provision for such an occurrence; you must not lose it!"

This put a new train of thought in the young man's mind, and he found that if he was determined to do a thing, he could do it. He made such a provision against every contingency, that he never lost anything. He found this equally true about forgetting. If a certain matter of importance was to be remembered, he pinned it down on his mind, fastened it there, and made it stay. He used to say: "When a man tells me that he forgot to do something, I tell him he might as well have said, 'I do not care enough about your business to take the trouble to think about it again.'"

I once had an intelligent young man in my employment who deemed it sufficient excuse for neglecting any important task to say, "I forgot it." I told him that would not answer. If he was sufficiently interested he would be careful to remember. It was because he did not care enough that he forgot it. I drilled him with this truth. He worked for me three years, and during the last of the three he was utterly changed in this respect. He did not forget a thing. His forgetting, he found, was a lazy, careless habit of the mind, which he cured.

IN A MINUTE.

"Don't fret. I'll be there in a minute." But, my friend, a minute means a great deal, notwithstanding you affect to hold it of no consequence. Did you ever stop to think what may happen in a minute? No. Well, while you are murdering a minute for yourself and one for me, before you get ready for the business we have in hand, I will amuse you by telling you some things that will happen meanwhile. In a minute we shall be whirled around on the outside of the earth by its diurnal motion a distance of thirteen miles. At the same time we shall have gone along with the earth on its grand journey around the sun, 1,080. Pretty quick traveling, you say. Why, that is slow work compared with the rate of travel of that ray of light which just now reflected from that mirror. A minute ago that ray was 11,160,000 miles away. In a minute over all the world, about eighty new-born infants have each raised a wail of protest, as if against thrusting existence upon them; while as many more human beings, weary with the struggle of life, have opened their lips to utter their last sigh. In a minute the lowest sound your ear can catch has been made by 990 vibrations, while the highest tone reached you after making 2,228,000 vibrations. In a minute an express train goes a mile, and a street-car thirty-two rods; the fastest trotting horse 148 rods and an average pedestrian has got over sixteen rods.

Each minute, night and day, by the official reports, the United States collects $639 and spends $461. The interest on the public debt was $96 a minute last year, or just exactly equal to the amount of silver mined in that time. The telephone is used 595, the telegraph 136 times. Of tobacco, 925 pounds are raised, and a part of it has been used in making 6,673 cigars, and some more of it has gone up in the smoke of 2,292 cigarettes. But I am afraid that you will forget that we are talking about a minute, sixty seconds of time. No? Well, then, every minute 600 pounds of wool grow in this country, and we have to dig sixty one tons of anthracite coal. In the same time the United States mints turned out coin to the value of $121, and forty-two acres of the public domain have been sold or given away. —Cleveland Press.

STEPPING ON A SHADOW.

One dark night a man who was about to leave a steamboat saw what he supposed to be a gang-plank, but it was only a shadow. He stepped out upon it, and of course fell into the water below. He thought he was taking the right way, but his thinking so could not make any difference in the result, so long as he really did take it. Just so in matters of far greater importance. You must be right, not merely suppose you are right, if you are to avoid the evil consequences of wrong-doing. This man might have put it to the proof whether it was the gang-plank or not before trusting himself upon it. Do not be like him, but test your beliefs and see if they are all well-grounded. Many a young man has been ruined by a course of conduct which at first he felt sure would do him no harm. Many a man has followed his own notions of what is right, instead of taking God's Word as a guide, and awakened in eternity to find that he had stepped upon a shadow and fallen.—Exchange.

OPENING THE HEART.

I knew a little boy whose heart was touched by a sermon on the words, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." My mother said to him when she noticed that he was anxious:

"Robert, what would you say to anyone who knocked at the door of your heart, if you wished him to come in?"

He answered: "I'd say, 'Come in.'"

She then said to him: "Then say to the Lord Jesus, 'Come in.'"

The next morning there was a brightness and joy about Robert's face that made his father ask:

"Robert, what makes you look so glad and joyful to-day?"

He replied joyfully: "I awoke in the night, and I felt that Jesus was still knocking at the door of my heart for admission into it. I said to him: 'Lord Jesus, come in!' I think he has come into my heart. I feel happier this morning than I ever was in all my life. How ungrateful and wicked in me to keep him waiting outside so long!"—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

DRUNK AS A BEAST.

Drunk as a beast, who says so? Say?
Did ever beast go down that way?
A horse, an ox, or donkey? Nay!
Nay, nay, nay, nay;
Never a beast goes down that way,
No, never, nay!

Say, do beasts ever sink so low,
As in the gutter's filth to go,
Stuttering and staggering so?
O no; O no;
Never a beast so vile and low,
As so to go.

Where's the horse that ever took gin?
Do sheep or dogs such stuff take in?
E'en monkeys don't commit that sin!
O my; O my!
They all exclaim, beer, brandy, gin—
No, no, not I.

So all the beasts the thing did scan;
And from such horrid things they ran;
Charging this nastiness on man;
They always do;
They charge this nastiness on man;
What's worse, it's true.

The foul saloon, a human den,
Whose drinks the swine refuse their pen,
Where beasts leave drunkenness to men.
That's so! that's so!
To drunken boys, girls, women, men:
O no. That's so.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

BY E. THOMPSON.

I mean for the murder of the man whose dead body was found lying on, or very near, the railroad, within a little less than two miles from where I pen these lines, on Sabbath morning, March 1st, by a young man of our neighborhood while on his way to church that cold March morning, the mercury being about at zero. He was not killed by a passing train, as none had passed; neither was it the work of any weapon of death in the hand of an assassin; but the man was murdered, nevertheless.

The mystery, if any, is easily explained. It requires no philosopher to tell the cause,—frozen to death while in a state of intoxication. Rum, that fiend implacable of humanity, did the fatal work on that cold night which preceded the morning of the day above named. The poor, unfortunate man died without any friendly hand being near to give any aid in the hour of his sad calamity. He was only relieved by the cold arm of the grim monster, death, when he came as the dark winged angel to bear his spirit away to that eternal world from which there is no return.

"Tell me I hate the bowl;
Hate is a feeble word;
I loath, abhor—my very soul
With strong disgust is stirred
Whene'er I see, or hear, or tell,
Of the dark beverage of hell!"

To all intents was this man murdered, and his wife left an indigent widow to struggle through life as best she can, with four dependent children, as their issue, to endure the ills and privations of this life, as may be their allotment in the journey of life as the years of time may roll by in their future earthly history.

I repeat the question at the heading of this sketch, "Who is responsible" for the terrible deed which resulted so fatally and left behind it such sorrowful consequences? Most assuredly there is great responsibility somewhere. This is too evident to need argument. All will admit it at once. I presume that every reader of this article will, without any hesitancy, at once agree that the man who sold Frank Walters the whisky that intoxicated him and was the means of causing his death on that sad night, is a guilty party in the case. And the saloonkeeper's responsibility is most fearful, and by no means to be envied by anybody. Surely, very true we all agree in saying. And for the sake of ten thousand worlds we would not stand in his shoes and take his place in the morning of eternity when every hidden work of darkness shall be brought to light, and all things be made known just as they are.

But then what shall we say of our government which for the sake of a paltry sum of money licenses the saloonkeeper to traffic in that which produces such results, of which this instance is but one of its legitimate fruits. Who will dare say there is no responsibility here? Ours claims to be "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people," and if this claim is true, is it a possibility for "the people" to set up the claim of innocency in such cases as above given, and shirk all responsibility, while we sustain men in power as law-makers and executors who give their votes and influence in favor of the nefarious rum-traffic which is constantly multiplying its victims in its work of misery and death? Can we exonerate ourselves from all responsibility in such instances as long as we give our consent or influence, in any way, in favor of either "license" or "taxation," which is just its equivalent, viz., six of one and half-dozen of the other?

"Licensed" whisky and "taxed" whisky make drunkards out of men and boys just the same. Never will we entirely free ourselves from all responsibility, as a people, until we arise in our strength and drive out all subterfuges and sweep away every refuge of lies, and forever interdict the manufacture, sale and using of the soul-destroying beverage of death. When entire prohibition obtains and prevails over this broad land of ours we may consider our work on this issue accomplished. Then will tranquility, peace and joy take the place of misery, blasting and death. Then will the sighs and tears of many widows and orphans be hushed and dried up, and peace, temperance and good will, be enthroned among men. All to the praise and glory of God, and good of our fellows. For this grand and glorious consummation, let us live, labor, vote and pray until we shall be permitted to behold its uninterrupted triumph.

AN INEBRIATE INSTITUTE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

A recent visit to the Inebriate Hospital at Dwight, Ill., where 150 persons are being treated for drink, opium, or tobacco habit, deeply impressed me with the extreme danger in the use of these poisons, and the importance of moral fortification against their use and their influence in society. The men I met there (and so far as I know, no women are being treated) were all persons in good circumstances and of cultivated minds. Nothing but the disgrace of drunkenness had driven them to seek relief in medical treatment. The men who conduct the institution were most courteous and deeply interested in their work. The universal testimony was, that excellent results attended the medical treatment.

But I was strongly impressed with the almost entire absence of moral influences. Drunkenness, and not the drink habit, is what is sought to be cured. The former is regarded a misfortune, a disease, to be treated like any other affliction,—the latter only to be avoided when it becomes a source of personal danger. Conceding all that is claimed for this institute and its treatment, it seems to me only the more clearly to emphasize the importance of Christianity as the great remedy for this, our greatest social evil.

There is no true freedom except that which comes to us through faith in our Divine Lord. The dominion of appetite is the real evil to be overcome. No medical treatment can be anything more than a temporary adjunct. The real remedy is in knowing how to keep our bodies in subjection to righteousness, and this can never be secured except through the Gospel of Christ. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

Out of six hundred prisoners in our State's Prison, in Auburn, confined there for committing crimes while under the influence of drink, some 500 of them, it is said, testify that they were led into intemperance by the use of tobacco.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jehu's hypocrisy.—vs. 18–25. Elijah had been commissioned at the time he fled from Jezebel, to anoint Jehu king in the room of Ahab, but for some reason—probably because Ahab repented—this work was left to his successor, Elisha. The army at once proclaimed Jehu king, which shows his great popularity as a commander, but it is no proof—rather the contrary—that he possessed any very high moral qualities. The rough, lawless soldiery which surrounded him had small veneration for the religion of Jehovah, or for his minsiters, as we see by chap. 9, v. 10. There have been military men who were Christians, but the spirit of the battlefield and the camp is never the spirit of Jesus Christ. War is always demoralizing; and though it may once have been an necessary evil, it is now in these enlightened times as much a relic of barbarism as slavery or polygamy. Jehu was thoroughly a military character, according to the standard of eastern generals, and when there was "stern work to do," he was the one to do it. History has recorded many instances of those who have "waded through slaughter to a throne," but surely none ever waded deeper than Jehu. Absolutely without a touch of tenderness or compunction, he seems, as he moves across the stage of Bible history, more like a destroying demon than a human being. But our lesson shows him in a new and still less advantageous light. It is seldom that a fierce, impetuous nature will combine with the subtlety and smoothness of the finished hypocrite. But extraordinary and antagonistic as such a combination seems, we find it in Jehu, whose capacity for deep dissimulation comes out in this scheme to entrap and massacre all the worshipers of Baal. He pretends that it was zeal for the Lord, when it was really a stroke of astute policy. He knew that the adherents of Baal would be likely to remain at heart loyal to the fallen dynasty, and his throne would therefore be in continual danger from plots and conspiracies unless he devised some such measure for their wholesale destruction. He was a type of those in every age who seek to advance God's cause by unrighteous means. Religious persecution has ever been justified under the plea, "Come, see my zeal for the Lord;" yet Christianity has never received such stabs as from the bigotry and fanaticism of its professed friends. It is true that the worship of false gods was a capital offense under the Mosaic code, but it never justified treachery or falsehood. His desire to get the countenance of Jehonadab was for the same reason that wicked men to-day seek to get the alliance of the good. He made Jehonadab ride beside him in his chariot, just as the lodge will give a minister the place of honor,—with no higher motive than mere selfish craft. It would gain him popularity to show that he had the support of a man so pious and holy.

2. Baalism destroyed.—vs. 26–28. Jehu seemed bent on thorough work. He was not content till Baalism had been destroyed with every expression of public ignominy and contempt. But the reform thus inaugurated was entirely outward. If we read carefully the history of genuine reformations, such as took place in the reigns of Joash and Hezekiah, we shall see some very striking points of difference. "Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel." But there he stopped. We do not read that he sought the Lord for guidance, or in any way acknowledged his need of the Divine arm; but everything was done in his own strength. A reformation that is merely political and involves no turning to the Lord, may accomplish much good and yet be only temporary in its results, as we see in this case, for Baal worship came back in the next reign. See chap. 13, v. 16.

3. Jehu's hypocrisy proved.—vs. 29–31. Because Jehu hated Baal was no proof that he loved Jehovah. It is possible for a man to hate the lodge and the saloon, yet be far from being a Christian. The question is, from what grounds does his hatred spring? It may be an entirely selfish one, as in the case of Jehu. To "hate what is evil" does not prove a changed heart unless we carry out the rest of the command, and "cleave to that which is good." Jehu failed when his sincerity came to be tested, for he committed exactly the sin of Jeroboam in setting up calf worship, probably for the same reason,—to keep his people from too close an alliance with the neighboring kingdom of Israel. We are not obliged to think that because God commended Jehu for his thoroughness in extirpating idolatry, that he commended the way he did it. He was chosen to execute God's righteous sentence against Ahab, not because he was a good man, but for just the opposite reason,—because he was fierce, unscrupulous, unmerciful, and thus fitted to be a sharp sword in the hands of Almighty Justice.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Some months ago Presiding Elder F. A. Burdick called a meeting in Aberdeen, S. D., of all the Methodist pastors of the district, and put before them the plan of sowing acres of wheat for the liquidation of church debts. The pastors took to the idea, and after talk with their people found the farmers would furnish the land and do the work if the church would furnish the seed. The general societies of the church, which have their headquarters in the East, then took hold of the matter, and shortly announced that the money for the seed should be forthcoming. Much good is expected to result from the plan.

—The resignation by Prof. J. K. McClurkin of the professorship of Systematic Theology in the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, Pa., is announced. It is stated that it is his intention to unite with the United Presbyterian church, and that he will probably engage in pastoral work in connection with a mission congregation in Pittsburg.

—Rev. John C. Lowrie, D. D., senior Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, has tendered his resignation, after a service of forty-one years. His "salary is to be continued, and his office kept open at his disposal."

—One hundred Australians have volunteered for service in connection with the China Inland Mission. A domestic servant in Tasmania has given £20 of her savings to this mission and £5 for the work in Africa.

—Milne offered himself as a missionary to China, but was refused. He offered to go as a servant, and was accepted; blacked Morrison's shoes and did a servant's work until he acquired the language and was ready for work; then he became the greatest missionary of Southeast Asia.

—Rev. Charles S. Goss, formerly pastor of the Moody church in this city, is now in Kettle Falls, Washington, where he has secured a gift of thirty lots in that new town, which he has the privilege of giving to churches. The place is only a few months old; but a Presbyterian church is being erected, and there are free sites for other churches whenever they are ready to claim them.

—In St Petersburg there are 83,000 Protestants. Of these 42,000 are Germans, half of them Russian subjects. They are organized into 14 congregations, served by 30 pastors. The church work among them receives no support from the State, the voluntary contributions of each member averaging about six or seven dollars annually. One of these congregations is building a church costing $250,000.

—The change in the attitude of the authorities on the Continent toward the Salvation Army is quite marked. The King of Denmark has given fifty krones to Major Wilson of the Army to help its work in that country, a gift, which, as an expression of royal interest and sympathy, is worth a good deal more than its money value. In Amsterdam, Holland, the Army has opened a large room for the purpose of relieving distress, and on the second night after the opening over two hundred outcasts were sheltered.

—Corea presents a striking illustration of the irresistible advance of the Gospel. One of the most remarkable works of grace known in modern missions is that among the Coreans. Without having heard or seen a missionary, thousands of people have heard of Christ, and turned from vain things to the service of the living and true God. These converts are the fruit of the circulation of copies of the New Testament in Corea by Rev. John Ross, late missionary of the Presbyterian church of Scotland in Manchuria.

—Mrs. Baertz, the evangelist converted from Judaism to Christianity, is soon to begin a series of sermons and Bible readings in Dr. A. J. Gordon's church in Boston. She is described as a most intensely interesting speaker, a close reasoner, familiar with the Bible and Bible history, earnest, logical and fully given to her work.

—The editor of the Chicago department of the Christian Instructor tells this story of Sabbath desecration and the sequence: "Some months ago we referred in sorrow and disapproval to the laying of the corner-stone of a Presbyterian church near our home in this city on the Sabbath day. It was largely advertised in the dailies and by circulars from door to door. A number of the leading Presbyterian ministers of the city were on the program, thus involving that body, as far as possible, in this act of desecrating the Lord's day. The work of erecting that church has gone on all winter, and now the timbers of the roof are in place. But we learn that the building has fallen into the hands of the sheriff, and the pastor has been sued for fraud amounting to some $5,000 in the management of a paper which he sold to a company here, of which he was the leading spirit. In turn he has sued this company for $25,000 for slandering him. The end is not yet."

—The Methodist denomination has perfected arrangements for building a large university near Portland, Oregon. About six hundred acres have been selected below the city. The building is expected to cost $300,000.

—A dispatch from Indianapolis, Ind., Friday, says: "There was a strange scene at the Christian church tonight. An old man of 62 named Henry C. Berg, who had for many years been a monk, formally announced his renunciation of the Catholic belief and was baptized as a member of the Christian church. He had taken the necessary vows of celibacy and poverty on becoming a member of the order, and given his inheritance, amounting to $15,000, to the cause. The latter he asserted was not returned when he seceded. He had for nineteen years been in a monastery at Milwaukee, and later in one at Columbus. He was in the latter institution when he decided to leave the order, which he did a year ago. He was poor and without a profession, so he chose the only calling apparently open to him—selling books."

A RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

An especially interesting program for the coming spring and summer has been planned by the Bible Institute at Chicago, of which Mr. Moody is president. About the middle of April Prof. W. G. Moorehead, of Xenia, Ohio, whose scholarship and ability as a Bible teacher are well known, begins a three months' course of lectures. Rev. James Stalker, whose life of Christ is familiar to Bible students, will be at the Institute a few days in May. In July and August, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Regent Park Chapel, London, will be the leading lecturer. Mr. Meyer's personal work among the poor of England has fitted him to be a competent authority on work among the masses, and his books on spiritual themes are among the most reliable and helpful now published.

Three Gospel tents, accommodating variously from 350 to 1,000 people, will be located in neighborhoods where the Gospel is sadly needed, and placed in charge of experienced evangelists.

Ministers, evangelists, missionaries, lady teachers and Christian workers of every class will have an opportunity to learn the best plans and methods along aggressive lines in these tents, and in the various forms of mission work connected with the Institute. Mornings are spent in the class-room, and afternoons and evenings occupied with study and personal efforts among the unconverted.

The entire course covers two years, but the school is open the year round and students may enter at any time and stay as long as convenient. Four dollars per week will cover all necessary expenses in the Men's Department, and in the Ladies' Department the cost of board is three dollars and a half per week. As far as possible, all will be accommodated in the Institute buildings. Those obliged to room outside will find the cost a trifle more. No charge is made for tuition. Any who desire to attend should write at once to the Supt., R. A. Torrey, 80 W. Pearson St., or Mrs. S. B. Capron, Supt. of the Ladies' Department, 232 LaSalle Avenue, Chicago.

Spring is now here in earnest. Get your garden tools ready. First of all you need a Garden Cultivator. The Cynosure has one for you—and it is the best! We have made special arrangements with the manufacturers, so that all our subscribers can get one at very advantageous rates. See! For your renewal and a new subscription, or for two new subscriptions and $4.00 additional, we send you a $6.00 machine, or you may say you pay for the machine $6.00, and get your subscriptions worth $3.00 for $1.00.

But the two-wheeler is what everybody wants. We send this for a new and old subscription (or two new subscriptions) and $5.50 additional. That gives you the two copies of the Cynosure for a year for the trifle of 50 cts. Freight or express extra in all cases, unless four machines are taken at once.

This is our best offer yet. The Cultivator is a grand help in the garden. You can get over from six to eight times as much ground as with a hoe, do it easier, and do it so much better, that you will be amazed that you did not try it before.

News of the Week.

CHICAGO.

The Grand Jury, after examining several persons regarding the insolvent banking-house of Kean & Co., returned an indictment against S. A. Kean.

It is charged that the street railway companies of this city and the steam railroads having terminals here have made a combination to control the next Board of Directors of the World's Fair, with a view to reconsidering the action of the present board in refusing to put any of the Fair buildings on the Lake Front.

Mr. McKnight, of Rawlins county, Kansas, is in the city as special agent to come East and solicit seed, provisions, clothing and money for the suffering farmers. The credentials borne by Mr. McKnight say there are 434 farmers in distress, but the special agent says that he is informed that there are nearer 800 who must have seed and feed before they can put in a crop.

The number of deaths in the city week before last was 809, a rate of about 30 per thousand never before approached in the history of the city.

What is lacking is truth and confidence. If there were absolute truth on the one hand and absolute confidence on the other, it wouldn't be necessary for the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy to back up a plain statement of fact by a $500 guarantee. They say—"If we can't cure you (make it personal, please,) of catarrh in the head, in any form or stage, we'll pay you $500 for your trouble in making the trial." "An advertising fake," you say. Funny, isn't it, how some people prefer sickness to health when the remedy is positive and the guarantee absolute. Wise men don't put money back of "fakes." And "faking" doesn't pay.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

Home and Health.

ECONOMY IN A FAMILY.

There is nothing which goes so far toward placing young people beyond the reach of poverty, as economy in the management of their domestic affairs. It matters not whether a man furnish little or much for his family, if there is a continual leakage in the kitchen or in the parlor. It is the husband's duty to bring into the house, and it is the duty of the wife to see that nothing goes wrongfully out of it—not the least article, however unimportant in itself, for it establishes a precedent—nor under any pretense, for it opens the door for Ruin to stalk it, and he seldom leaves an opportunity unimproved. The husband's interest should be the wife's care, and her greatest ambition should carry her no farther than his welfare or happiness, together with that of her children. This should be her sole aim, and the theatre of her exploits in the bosom of her family, where she may do as much toward making a fortune, as he can in the counting-room or in the workshop. It is not the money earned that makes a man wealthy—it is what he saves from his earnings. A good and prudent husband makes a deposit of the fruits of his labor with his best friend, and if that friend be not true to him, what has he to hope? If he dare not place confidence in the companion of his bosom, where is he to place it?—N. Y. Ledger.

DON'T MULTIPLY DISHES.

"But, doctor, if I am to take a light, early supper I think I ought to have more than a little mush for breakfast!" "I didn't say a little mush," replied the doctor, with a smile, "eat as much mush as you like. Why multiply dishes? Oatmeal and the various whole-wheat preparations used for breakfast mushes contain every element needed by the system—what is the use of changing their form?" I say to our busy housewives the same—"Why multiply dishes?" especially during the hot months, when it seems all one can do at times to just exist. Cook simple food, which may be "hearty" enough for working men and growing children, but which will not require so much exhaustive labor near a hot stove.—Farm, Stock and Home.

DEATH RATE IN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

The birth-rate in France is 23 per 1,000, while in England it is 31. The death-rate in France was, during 1883–8 22.3 per 1,000, as against 19 on this side of the Channel. Thus the death-rate in a given population is as seven to six between them and us. Such are the omnious figures which a Times correspondent has worked out, and he attributes much of this abnormal mortality amongst our French neighbors to "filth diseases." There is three times as much fever over there as here. Typhoid fever carried off in Paris during three years 1,072 victims, and in London, which is twice as populous, only 612. There is, in fact, nearly four times as much fever in that city, and three times as much diarrhœa, as in our Metropolis. All the leading French towns exceed even our Manchester, which has just now an unenviable notoriety, and there are two of them whose mortality has actually risen to 53 per thousand.—London Herald of Peace.

Count Von Moltke, being asked in his ninetieth year, "To what do you ascribe your healthy old age?" replied, "To God's grace and temperate habits." One of these habits was ten hours' sleep in the twenty-four during youth, and eight hours all his life. Another was out-door exercise in all weather. No day was spent entirely indoors.

"Gentle Spring" loses many of its terrors when the system is fortified by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. With multitudes, this wonderful tonic-alterative has long superseded all other spring medicines, being everywhere recommended by physicians.

Odd-fellowship: Its History and its Work. By President J. Blanchard. A neat pamphlet with cover. Postpaid, 5 cts.

HELP! HELP! THE LADY FAINTS.

"'Tis the twink of an eye,
'Tis the draught of a breath,
From the blossom of health,
To the paleness of death."

When sudden fainting spells come upon a lady, you may always suspect some uterine disturbances or trouble, or some great disorder in the circulation and nerve centers. A remedy that has always proved successful in warding off and removing the tendency to a recurrence of fainting spells—that removes the cause of them, corrects the circulation of blood, and gives to the system that even running nervous energy so essential, is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to ferment in the stomach and derange digestion, is a legitimate medicine, not a beverage.

The "Prescription" is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. Nothing else does as much. You only pay for the good you get. Can you ask more?

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at the critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The change of Life."

Brimful of confidence in it—the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It's a faith that means business, too—it's backed up by money. This is what they offer: $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which they cannot cure. They mean it. They're willing to take the risk—they know their medicine. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of chronic Catarrh in the Head. It's doing it every day, where everything else has failed. No matter how bad your case, or of how long standing, you can be cured. You're sure of that—or of $500. You can't have both, but you'll have one or the other.

Farm Notes.

Without further explanation of the stand I take, I shall proceed to show the amount of labor the farmer has to perform and the advantages he has over the merchant, manufacturer, banker, artist, laborer and others, who have to buy every article they need: Their meat, butter, potatoes, etc., have to pass through several hands, each one getting pay for handling, cartage, freight, storage, interest on investment, etc., therefore paying twice the cost of producing the same on the farm. The farmer does not have to pay freight or profit on the portion of his produce that he consumes. Keep in mind that the consumer pays the freight. There is no freight on the produce of the farm that is consumed thereon; therefore the farmer is oppressed less by the overcharges of railroads. The farmer does not need money to exchange that part of his produce he consumes, therefore he is oppressed less by scarcity of money than the other class mentioned, who have to sell all they produce and buy all they consume.

A stagnation of business from any cause, whereby goods cannot be sold, brings starvation face to face with the laborer and others. Not so with the farmer; he raises what he eats of the coarser or main foods on which life subsists. It may be argued that the net price of farm produce at places it is raised is governed partly by transportation, therefore the farmer loses the freight. The value of land decreases in proportion to distance from market, therefore the interest on investment balances the difference in freight. Not so with the manufacturer, who has to pay the same for material and prepay the freight to distant points; machinery being sold to the farmer as cheap or cheaper in the far West than at home in Illinois. Thus the farmer in the West can compete with the Illinois farmer and sell his corn for $3 per acre less, or 8 to 10 cents per bushel, on account of less interest on investment in land, or rent of his farm.

The increase in value of land in the past thirty years in Illinois has been over 1,000 per cent, and the farmers have become wealthy on this account, while the improvements put upon the land is worth far less than the rent for ten years. I want to know where the manufacturers, laborers or merchants have received such a nest egg as this.

In computing the profit a firm makes in declaring a dividend, no account is taken of interest on the investment. Therefore in showing the cost of farm produce, no account should be taken of the investment in land, or machinery, horses, fences, barns or houses. They are to the farmer what the plant is to the manufacturer; the stock, fixtures and store to the merchant; their dwelling not being considered a part of the investment at all.

I will now show how much labor is required to raise corn ready to husk, allowing that 3½ loads of fertilizer from the barn yard is put upon each acre each year, which is four times as much as is usual; land so treated will yield 60 bushels of corn per acre, but I will allow for part failure and place it at 50 bushels.

Estimated labor on 100 acres corn.

Hauling 350 loads fertilizer	35 days
Plowing	30 days
Harrowing	4 days
Planting	10 days
Harrowing, 3 times	12 days
Cultivating, 3 times	34 days
Total	125 days

125 days of 10 hours each, 1250 hours, 75,000 minutes, to produce 5,000 bushels corn, just 15 minutes per bushel. If you leave off the 35 days fertilizing and say it yields 36 bushels, you have 90 days, 10 hours each, 900 hours, to produce 3,600 bushels, just the same result, 15 minutes per bushel; just about the same time it would take to husk it.

Will any farmer tell me where I have made an error in this calculation. Let us find where the oppression comes in. A laborer has to work 2½ hours to buy a bushel of corn to feed his chickens.

This article is already too long but I want to add that there is very little business done that will yield a profit of more than eight per cent on the money invested, including labor as an investment, besides paying the ordinary price of labor, to-day. Such a business is just what every man is trying to find.

I want to add that the farmers have a grievance imposed by law upon them. They are disfranchised on the liquor question; they have no vote in granting license; municipal corporations vote license, receive the money, and the farmers are taxed to build jails, prosecute criminals, and support paupers directly made by the saloon. Yet the farmers hurrah for Harrison and hurrah for Cleveland and their respective parties, and humbly kiss the hand that smites them.—M. H. Daley in the Patrol.

Cooks to clean the kitchen sink.	Artists to clean their palettes.	Soldiers to brighten their arms.
Painters to clean off surfaces.	Wheelman to clean bicycles.	Renovators to clean carpets.

EVERY ONE FINDS A NEW USE.

Between Two Opinions: OR THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. By Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc., etc. Everyone who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, interesting in narrative, should read this book upon the power of secret societies in politics, and the remedy. 389 pages; cloth, postpaid, $1.00.

Now.

The benefit to be derived from a good medicine in early spring is undoubted, but many people neglect taking any until the approach of warmer weather, when they wilt like a tender flower in a hot sun. Something must be done to overcome that tired feeling and give the strength necessary to do daily work. Vacation is earnestly longed for, but many weeks, perhaps months, must elapse before rest can be indulged in. To impart strength and to give a feeling of health and vigor throughout the system, there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It seems peculiarly adapted to overcome that prostration caused by change of season, climate or life, and while it tones and sustains the system it purifies and renovates the blood. We earnestly urge the large army of clerks, book-keepers, school teachers, housewives, operatives and all others who have been closely confined during the winter and who feel the need of a reliable medicine, to try Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you good.

EVERITT'S MAN-WEIGHT

HOE, CULTIVATOR PLOW, ETC., SINGLE AND DOUBLE WHEEL.

Will Revolutionize Hand-Power Cultivation—Makes Keeping a Horse an Unnecessary Expense in Many Cases.

This new Invention is a Great Boon to all Cultivators of the Soil, and must be Classed with the Great Inventions of the Age, yet it is so simple that the natural question with every one is, "Why did I not think of that?" And so nicely does it fill a want existing with thousands of gardeners, nurserymen, seedmen, florists, and farmers, that after the first trial they invariably conclude to "never do without it."

All other Garden Tools, Seed Drills, Rollers, etc., can be attached and run with our propeller with many times the power and greater ease than by hand power.

SINGLE WHEEL cultivator, with attachments, price $6.00. W't, 15 lbs.

DOUBLE WHEEL, with attachments, $8.00. W't, 20 lbs.

With every Double Wheel Machine the extra parts are furnished necessary to convert it into the single wheel machine, without extra charge. Thus practically giving the two machines for the price of one.

This best of all hand cultivators to every worker for the Cynosure free as follows:

Two-wheel for 15 new subscribers. ($22.50.) Single-wheel for 12 new subscribers. ($18.00.)

At Milwaukee, Wis., Tuesday, Benjamin Hotelling, Mrs. Fannie Newbouer, and Alfred Smith, a colored attendant, were arrested for violation of the anti-lottery laws. Hotelling had the agency for Wisconsin and northern Michigan for the Louisiana and Mexican lotteries. All letters and books in the office were seized and information secured which will lead to breaking up the numerous branch agencies.

A British steamer went ashore a mile below Chicamicomico life saving station on the North Carolina coast. Out of a crew of twenty-six nineteen were lost, including all the officers except the second mate.

At Lyons, Kan., four miners were precipitated down a shaft 500 feet deep by an accident to the machinery. A heavy oak beam fell upon them from the top of the shaft. They were crushed into a shapeless mass.

Snow fell in Nebraska to the depth of twenty inches on the level Wednesday. Railroad traffic was greatly impeded. Severe snowstorms were also reported from Kansas. Warm weather followed throughout the snow-covered district and the snow melted rapidly. Had freezing weather followed the storm the loss to stock would have been enormous.

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. Our long-time friend, Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, has had the honor of being in the first rank of many reforms. The measure for a Congressional inquiry into the liquor business in this country and its effects, was first introduced by him in the Senate away back in 1872. It has never yet become a law, but has been continually before Congress, by renewal of the bill, ever since.

Dr. James McCosh, who retired nearly three years ago from official connection with Princeton University, as one of its most successful presidents, celebrated his 80th birthday on Wednesday the first inst. Now, if this graud old man would give a few of his last days toward lifting the Presbyterian church, of which he is the Nestor, upon the high ground of separation from all secret lodges, they might, after all, prove to be his best days as well.

The episode between our Government and Italy last week is a curious study in diplomacy. The Italian Consul, Baron Fava, presented his recall last Tuesday, on the ground that nothing had been done to secure the punishment of the New Orleans mob. Amid the excitement Italians and Americans were equally and foolishly excited. One boasted that her ironclads would bombard our cities; the other that the big hulks could hardly get across the sea to us. The War Department was beset with volunteers, as foolish and wicked as they were eager. A conciliatory dispatch from Washington was followed by one still more conciliatory from Rome, and men who had been either pale or flushed began to laugh at their fears and rage. A nation that would get up a war over the New Orleans matter, all things considered, ought to be chastised by some power.

Albert Pike, the most conspicuous figure in the whole "Secret Empire," died at his home near the N. C. A. Washington headquarters last Thursday evening. Saturday his body was taken to the office of the Supreme Council of "Sovereign Grand Inspectors General," 33°. Exercises took place on Sabbath at the Church of the Ascension, and it is announced that the Kadosh services of the Scotch Rite will be held at the appropriate hour of midnight on Thursday of the present week. His last years have been spent in translating the "Rig Vedas" and the "Zend Avesta" for the benefit of his Masonic companions in sun worship. It is said that he has left seventeen volumes of manuscript containing proof that the ceremonies and symbols of Blue Lodge Masonry were derived from the early mysteries which had their source in Chaldea, but are now called Aryan.

J. N. NORRIS, M. D.

Ex-Senator Leland Stanford came to Bloomington, Ind., lately and on the Sabbath day sent for Dr. David S. Jordan of the State University, and made him a fine business offer. It was no less than the presidency of the institution Mr. Stanford is building in honor of his son and himself in California. This educational enterprise has only money behind it so far,—no brains and no morals. The founder seems to be looking up some of the first-named, but the last element seems not to be regarded as necessary, since the Sabbath is disregarded.

Concerning the Masonic temple corner-stone, we noted last week the disagreement of the city papers over its disposal, some declaring its destruction in their Sunday and Monday issues and others saying it was all sound. The building is surely proceeding vigorously, and the external part of the pier containing the inscription of the Masonic association remains. The back part was probably removed to make room for a steel girder. At least in announcing the death of N. T. Gassette on the Friday after the News says: "A week ago to-day the corner-stone of the great Masouic temple was found to be crumbling. Careless workmen destroyed it and the patient labor of skilled artisans was in a few moments uudone. To-day Norman Theodore Gassette, of the Masonic Temple Building association and originator and controller of the idea of the temple, is dead. The life that developed and became noble by constant study and effort is in an instant ended. In the knowledge of the death of Mr. Gassette, the intellectual corner-stone of the temple, the destruction of the material corner-stone a week ago seems almost an omen." It is also of remarkable significance that at Mr. Gassette's special request there was "no Masonic display at his funeral." Dr. P. S. Henson, an ex-Mason, conducted brief religious services at the house, and at the grave the lodge ritual was used. Since Mr. Gassette was looked upon as an enthusiastic Freemason, was the author of a funeral service, was of the thirty-third degree in the Scottish rite, had held various high offices, and was a patron of Masonic display to the bounds of excess, as appeared in 1880 when he planned the Knight Templar affair and was "Commandant of the Lines"—in view of these facts, his final request seems to show a revulsion of feeling toward these follies as he came into the valley of the shadow of death.

"OR RATHER KNOWN OF GOD."

BY PROF. A. B. CURTIS.

We hear a great deal said in these days about Agnosticism, and Agnosticism on its religious side maintains that God is unknowable, or, to be more explicit, that we can know only phenomena, and that all reality above or beyond this is to us unknowable. As to the sense in which the Absolute is unknowable there seems to be much confusion of thought. Is he unknowable in his nature, or unknowable only in fact?

Let me illustrate. Of the "beginning and eud of soul-life," Lotze says, "Let us not for a moment, then, give ourselves up to the illusory dream that we can ever succeed in couverting into certain knowledge what is intended merely to environ the sphere of human experience as a trustful dear anticipation!" (Lotze's Microcosmus, 1: 371.)

The beginning and the end of the natural life is in the nature of things unknowable. How does a soul originate? How does the soul take its departure? We do not know and we cannot know. It is outside the boundary line of our knowledge. There is nothing we can take hold of as it were and turn into thought.

But the word unknowable may be used in a quite different sense. It is a well-known astronomical fact that the moon always presents the same face to us. In view of which fact I may say the opposite surface of the moon is to us forever unknowable. No matter how strong our telescopes may become, no matter how extended and confirmed may become the information given us by a lunar spectrum, the opposite side of the moon is to us forever unknowable. It is not unknowable in its nature. If we could see it we could know it, but in the nature of the case that particular surface can never be presented to our mortal sense. This is the unknowable in fact. And you will easily perceive the difference between the two. And for the most part, I suppose, the modern Agnostic maintains that the Absolute is not only unknowable in fact, but that the very nature of the Absolute and Infinite is such as to be to us unknowable.

Whatever may be the fact in this matter it is not my present intention to enquire, but the rather to strive to gain some light and help on the much-vexed subject, by attempts to look at it from the other side as Paul has suggested. Not that we know God, but that he knows us, and that we feel that he knows us. That is the question I propose at this time to discuss.

I know not whether this text has ever been used before in this sense. I know not whether it contains any new or especially helpful truth. But this I do know, that of those propositions of Euclid that are also true conversely, many of them I found I could demonstrate much more easily if I demonstrated the conversely first.

We can feel that we are loved by certain of our acquaintances even before we are told of it. We can feel that a friend is looking admiringly at us even though our eyes are turned in other directions. Can we feel the "Thou, God, seest me?" Can we feel that God knows and loves us?

This method of solution would at first sight seem to be altogether wrong. We must know that God is, before we can know that he knows us; before we can have sufficient basis for shaping our lives as though there was a just God to whom all our acts are known. I think, however, that most agnostics will admit that the theist may be right. His only point is, that we cannot know that he is right. God is, at the best, the Unknowable. That there is some truth in this objection no one denies. For no one hath seen God at any time. In the strictest sense, neither science nor philosophy can prove the existence of God. It is faith that calls this Eternal Energy or First Cause, God.

But here, it would seem, is a text especially fitted for the present state of our science. The question is not whether we know God, but whether he knows us. In other words, is our life so in keeping with the world-ideal that it in no way hinders but the rather helps all the highest and noblest forces that are working in history? In other words, are we helping to realize the ideal for which the present cosmic universe exists? If so, the theist will surely admit that we are known of God.

In another place Paul has given an interpretation of these words. He says, "If any man loveth God the same is known of him." We are in danger of going to pieces upon this rock of the "knowableness" of God. The question is not whether we know him as we know our neighbor and our dog, but whether we love him—love him in his works and in his ideal character. The supreme question is not whether we know him, but whether he knows us, and whether our faith is strong enough to build a Christian character upon that knowledge which he has of us.

Tufts College, Mass.

SECTARIANISM IN ARMENIA.

BY REV. G. H. KRIKORIAN.

Dear Christian Cynosure:—In looking over your Jan. 15th number, a notice about an Armenian missionary appointment to Ourfa (you must mean from "Ouria") by a Baptist church of New York City caught my eye. As the name is same with mine, it aroused a question in my mind: Why did I not act as this Rev. Krikorian, rather than desiring to return to my country almost on my own responsibility? The answer to this question from experience and observation might be profitable to our friends, as well as to our Baptist brethren. Therefore, I beg to submit the following article to be published in your columns if you see fitting.

THE EFFECT OF SCHISM IN A MISSIONARY FIELD.

We believe schism in the Christian church to be a necessary evil. Christianity would prosper more powerfully and effectually to-day if not for this denominational spirit. It has no warrant from the meek Master, whose principle was, "He that is not against us is for us." That "union is strength" cannot be denied; and union is one of the fundamental principles of Christianity. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." How closely the Saviour desires to draw us to himself with these words. Such is the grand, fundamental idea of Christianity. It is a union with Christ, and union with one another. We are not prepared to condemn schism as entirely wicked. We do not say it is altogether devilish, but we say it is human, not Divine. Hence it is that the nearer we come to the Master, denominational lines disappear.

Whatever commendations or condemnations might be made of the spirit of schism in America, we desire to show its effect upon a mission field. If there be any virtue in this division of God's people upon small and unimportant points, such good effect is not seen in the mission field. If there are some evils noticed there at home, you will be sure to find more effects of it in the mission field.

We have defined schism to be a production of human weakness. Let us explain our meaning a little. The great tendency of human nature is to look at the appearances in religion. Man will fall into formalism, and more readily form images of the unseen, than to receive the abstract truth into his heart, and worship the Invisible by faith. Upon this principle the heathen makes his image, the Catholic and Oriental churches have formed their ceremonial religions, while the evangelical churches have their schisms. The principle is the same, i. e., man will seek visible things in place of the Invisible. But keep in mind, my friends, constantly, that the true faith is always distinguished from the false in this, that it is always the "evidence of things not seen."

It may not be as great an hindrance to true faith in a land where the minds of people being educated are able to distinguish between the truth and mere outward form; but here in a missionary field, where people can see no farther than mere appearances of religion, and truth is almost lost out of sight under the mass of ceremonies, you may easily imagine how deluding these different denominational colors might appear, and how much evil may result from it, by way of its covering up truth, giving occasion to formalism, and in encouraging the ignorant people to stick more to their own formalities and reject yours. For why, they reason, should a man exchange his traditional form to adopt your new and equally unreasonable formalities?

Let me illustrate the truth of these principles from my own experience with recent Baptist missionary work established at Yozghat. The young man appointed was a native of this city. My attitude to him and his work was most friendly, and as long as Christian fellowship continued all was good. But our brother soon felt the necessity of introducing his schismatic ideas, and my advice and precaution was not heeded. He must administer the ordinance of baptism by immersion, for which he was sent. No candidate for this ordeal could be found from outside of the Evangelical congregation. So he tried to steal away from our people; and as soon as he succeeded in persuading one of our members, he announced a public ordinance of baptism. An immense crowd went to witness our shame. Our brother, after delivering a long address upon the necessity of baptism by immersion, and severely attacking other denominations, immersed this brother, together with his own aged father and two of his sisters. It was a great success on his part; but in fact, it proved to be fatal both to his work and ours.

1. It broke his work down. The scene was distressing both upon the heathen and upon the people outside who left the meeting house not to return.

2. Its effect upon our work was equally injurious. We had sympathized with this mission for mutual good of the cause, but now it caused the hatred of the people to rest on us equally, saying, "Now we see this is what the Protestants are doing. They do not agree among themselves. Let them correct themselves before they preach to us the Gospel. Let them see into their own creeds."

3. The natural effect upon the Armenian and Greek church was that they were confrmed and more established in their old faith, saying, "Protestants attack our ceremonies and church ordinances, which our early fathers decreed, but they are divided also upon such unimportant points themselves." And, as you remember that they are unable to see beyond ordinances about religion, so they most naturally thought, why should they leave their old ordinances to follow these strangers who do not agree among themselves. "Keep to yourself your religion and we will keep ours," they would say. It is hard to show them the truth that lies under these colors of denominationalism. They see no farther than the colors, and thus become more established in their old superstition.

4. But they do not stop here. As another natural consequence of schismatic preaching, a severe persecution follows. This was a persecution of a peculiar type. It was not raised against preaching of truth directly (this is always healthful to the work), but this was the revival of the old faith in view of the absurdities of the Evangelical Christianity.

An Armenian bishop took the lead in these persecutions. Addresses in opposition to us continued for fifty days, and were characterized by revilings and anathemas to prejudice people from attending our services. Persons who attended our meetings were threatened and persecuted until they left us for fear of the people's rage, which was now aroused to its highest pitch. In opposition to the baptism by immersion they undertook to rebaptize and anoint the people they could find whose baptism was neglected, or was doubted, or was spoiled with Protestant connection. The candidates after baptism were carried through the streets of the city with singing and music and shoutings, all in a most excited manner. This was the shout of victory of the old faith which was now reviving.

These persecutions continued for six months, increasing in vehemence, which helped to establish their superstitions and traditions as the essentials of Christianity. It strengthened the prejudices of the people against us, so that we could hardly pass through the streets without hearing words of contempt even from women and children, calling us "Protestant heretics." This made two formidable enemies to grapple with, schism and persecution. I shall not give in detail the methods used to cure these troubles for the sake of brevity.

It is enough to say that the first evil was conquered by love, in the strength of God; while the latter with patience and forbearance is now vanished away. Our treatment of the schism was such that it strengthened our people; and finally our brother put down his weapons and agreed with me that nothing beyond preaching of simple Gospel is practicable in a mission field. Since, Providence has called him back to America. When leaving he recognized me as his best friend, and I know that he is willing I should make an extract from a letter of his to me, giving his present convictions upon this point: "Dear brother, now I confess with an honest feeling and thorough conviction that the introduction of different denominations in Turkey, is unbecoming and evil; for the different agencies, naturally, cannot be free from selfish interests and peculiar prejudices. Had I had my present feeling, conviction and experience when I was in Turkey, I would have co-operated with the noble army of our Congregational missionaries in Asia Minor, instead of trying to establish a separate organization."

We beg our American friends to give us only the Gospel, and keep schisms to themselves, for Christ our Redeemer's sake; Amen.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AND THE SABBATH.

[From a sermon by Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows, in the First Presbyterian Church, Chicago, March 29th.]

Now the Divine law of rest that has been in force since our first parents dwelt in Eden will not be abrogated in the year 1893. If there is any place on the globe, if there is any time in history when the Sabbath law should be most carefully observed, that place is Chicago and that time is the period of the World's Fair. The men who manage that exposition, the 50,000 persons who may be employed in connection with it, and the 50,000 or more visitors, weary and worn as sight-seers are, who will be in our city on every Sunday, will all need as never before in their lives to observe the law of the Sabbath rest.

MANY OF YOU ARE already tired of the Columbian Exposition, and many more are promising themselves a prolonged absence from the city during its continuance. My dear friends, some of you do not yet realize the magnitude and brilliant success which are likely to mark this great exhibition of the world's arts and industries. It seems to me unpatriotic for us to decry the approaching international display, and it seems to me unwise to shirk from certain responsibilities which are now pressing upon the citizenship of Chicago. There are moral possibilities belonging to the approaching exposition which strike not only the imagination but the consciences of all Christians, and I believe it is the duty of those whom I address to be active in preventing the illegal opening of the fair on the Christian Sabbath.

So strong and earnest are the convictions of many of our Christian laymen on this theme, that they have organized the Columbian Sunday Association, and in their behalf I have the honor to speak this morning. A society has been organized for the purpose of securing the proper observance of Sunday during the World's Fair period. These honored business men would prevent the moral and social calamity to our country resulting from the opening of the exposition on the Lord's day, and all the demoralization which will inevitably follow from it. They would distribute literature printed in all languages to show the advantage which has come to our land from the general observance of the American Sunday. They would arrange and carry on great meetings on the Christian Sabbath during the exposition, to be addressed on appropriate themes by the foremost men of the world, and they would assist in securing frequent holidays for all working people, thus giving them time to attend the exposition; and they would make more nearly universal the weekly Saturday half-holiday. They desire to make Sunday the greatest day of the exposition; not by the reckless and lawless throwing open of the gates of the fair, but by showing to the world on that day what an American Sunday is and what it means, a day of quiet, of cessation from toil; a day when the churches shall be thronged, when noble music shall lift the hearts of thousands in praise to God; a day of great public gatherings where the leading minds of our race may give utterance to the truths which shall lift the minds of the people into an appreciation of the diviner things of human life; a day which shall not contribute by its toil, its greed, its dissipation, its open saloon, its Sunday excursion, and its general lawlessness, to the public demoralization.

THE WORST EXHIBIT

which America can make to the world is a Satanic Sunday such as the open fair would inevitably give us. The best exhibit which we can make to the world is an American Sunday, which is distinguished as a day when toil general ceases, when, by State enactment, places of business and amusement are closed, which guards the right of rest for each by the law of rest for all. Thoughtful citizens and all genuine patriots must deprecate any further inroads on our American Sunday. It is already attacked by lawlessness, by the gambler, by the saloon-keeper, by thousands who have no intelligent understanding of its precious, priceless value to the people, and alas! by the selfish carelessness of many of our excellent citizens. I do not know how else Christian people, who have forsaken America and adopted European ideas of Sunday, can do a greater moral harm than by joining the growing procession of those who make the Lord's day a day of pleasure, of convenience, of travel, of business. The great question now before us ought to lead us all to examine ourselves, and to inquire whether we are contributing to the better influences or the dangerous tendencies now at work in our land. It becomes every patriotic and benevolent person to ask himself, "With which set of forces am I to take my stand?"

I believe it is the duty of this congregation to protest against the proposition that the National Government or the government of the fair shall trample on the law of the State, and shall go back on the precedents of all our other expositions, and shall disregard the expressed convictions of the great majority of the American citizens by throwing open the gates of the fair on the Christian Sabbath, thus forcing the fifty thousand employes and exhibitors to work on seven days of the week, and thus disastrously contributing to the destruction of the best safeguard of all our best interests, the Christian Sabbath.

THE MAFFIA AT HOME.

[From "Secret Societies in the two Sicilies" by E. S. Morgan in the English Fortnightly Review.]

If the Camorra has been weakened on the mainland, the sister society, the Maffia of Sicily, is still as powerful as ever. "Men of all classes and ranks belong to it," says the Blue Book on Sicily published in 1877, "and Government has always been beaten when it fought the Maffia." "Maffia," we read in the official report on the agricultural condition of Sicily published only three years ago, "though often apparently extinct, always breaks out again." "Perjury ordered by the Maffia is common in our courts." Professor Turiello quoting with approval a letter of Prince Galati, says, "Though murders are now seldom necessary the rule of the Maffia is not less absolute. The comparative fewness of murders is really a bad sign. It proves the complete subjection of the population to secret societies; even if the aristocratic Maffia has often sacrificed its instruments, Maffia in high places has never been even vigorously attacked." There is a widespread conviction, says the well-informed Signor Alongi, who, as member of the Sicilian police, is hardly likely to disparage the power of the executive, "that law is less to be feared than the Maffia. Many rich men are persuaded that either to belong to the Maffia or to keep on good terms with it is an absolute necessity for them." This evidence as to the power of the institution is so overwhelming that nothing further need be added on that score.

If now it is asked what is meant by Maffia, it will be found that few, even among Sicilians, are agreed as to the exact meaning of the term. Perhaps the most satisfactory definition is that given in the Blue Book of 1877:

"The Maffia is not precisely a secret society, but rather the development and blossom of arbitrary violence directed to criminal ends of every sort. It is the instinctive, brutal, sordid solidarity that unites against the State, the laws, and the constituted authorities, all who are determined to live and thrive not by honest work, but by violence, by fraud and by intimidation."

But even this definition does not say all; add that it is accepted as the inevitable even by honest men, that it imposes its code on the weak, and resists the Government even more by the inertia of passive resistance than by overt acts of violence, and, Proteus-like, evades the arm of the magistrate as it does the definition of the student. It would take a volume to specify all the modes in which, without violating the letter of the law, the Maffia can make things comfortable for its subordinates. One instance taken at hazard must suffice:

"The Sindaco of Palermo, taking the presence of cholera as a pretext, has nominated a whole batch of new officials, and that though many of the clerks who already draw salaries have quite given up going to their offices. A good thing, too, for the municipal buildings would be quite too small to accommodate them all."

If we look below the surface we shall find that the Maffia is to a great extent a survival from the Middle Ages, the outcome of the relations between feudal superior and retainer, relations on which all social and political life continued to be based in Sicily till the first quarter of the present century; in part an expression of that exaggerated individualism, which, if common throughout the kingdom, is nowhere so strongly marked as in Sicily. It is the Calabrian who on the mainland most closely resembles the Sicilian, and it is a Calabrian proverb that says, "Quanno niscianu m'avantu m'avantucu—When no one praises me I praise myself." "A French mob in revolution days," said Signor T. Mamiani, "shouts 'Who will guide us?' but in Italy the cry most heard is, 'Follow me!' for each individual is thoroughly convinced of his own ability to lead." "If," said a typical southerner to me, speaking in all seriousness of a reform he thought needful, "if the Ministry does not yield I will get myself elected deputy, summon the costituenti, and reform the Constitution." And he was convinced of his right and ability to do so. One result of this trait is that while there is in Sicily much loyalty to the king, there is no loyalty to the institutions. The ties of blood and partisanship are so strong as to leave no room for mere political alliances.

The upshot of all these causes is that in Sicily law is still looked on by the majority much as the English rule is in Ireland—as a common enemy, or at best a marplot in family disputes, whom every honorable man is bound to baffle to the utmost of his power.

From these premises in the moral syllogism is deduced the great principle of Omerta, on which Maffia is really based and which gives it its living power. What, then, is Omerta?

"In the course of years," says Signor Tommasi Cosedeli, "the national character of Sicilians in all its manifestations has become interpenetrated with the principles of a special code, called that of Omerta, which lays it down as the first duty of a man to do justice for himself with his own hands for any injury he may have suffered, and brands with infamy, holding up to the contempt and vengeance of the public any one who appeals to the law courts or assists the police in their investigations. A man perfectly honorable in other relations of life is convinced that he is doing a good deed in harboring an assassin, or in refusing to give evidence against him; for the code of Omerta says: 'Evidence is good so long as it does not injure your neighbor.'"

Under this code a willing witness is shunned and scorned as is an "informer" in Ireland. With his dying breath a murdered man will refuse to give any information to the police, and stoutly deny all knowledge of his assailant, preferring to chance the escape of his enemy, and leave a legacy of vengeance to his family or faction, rather than suffer his name to become a by-word of reproach. Brought face to face with this solidarity of victim and criminal in resenting its interference, the executive is almost powerless.

Next in importance to the anthropological as a factor in the prevalence of crime, come the physical features of the island. "Latifundia," said Pliny, "perdidere Italiam," and it is hardly less true that large estates are the seed-beds of crime in Sicily, and absentee landlords are at once the cause and the consequence of Maffia. Practically the whole of the interior plain of Sicily, and 65 per cent of the entire island, is devoted to the culture of wheat on estates varying in size from 3,000 to 15,000 acres. For though many small properties were created by the sale of church lands after 1860, these, except on the north and east coast, are rapidly disappearing. Small properties cannot stand up under the presure of taxation. One fact taken from the official report is sufficient to prove this. From 1873 to 1874 there were put up for sale by auction for non-payment of land tax, 13,713 properties with a debt on them of 7,488,357 francs. Of these 693, with a debt of 660,559 francs, were sold, and 13,056, with a debt of 6,826,697, were adjudicated to the State, no one having made a bid for them, as the arrears of unpaid taxes amounted to more than the value of the fee-simple. These large wildernesses of estates are almost invariably rented to a gabelloto, or head-tenant, who sublets them in small parcels at rack-rental, each borghese or under-tenant taking up from ten to twenty acres, on which he camps during the working season with his beasts, whose life and toil he shares, which he cultivates as he can, and pays for as he must, usually by a share, ranging from two-thirds to three-quarters, of the crop. Tenant-farmers with capital, and farm-buildings on the holdings, are here equally unknown, and the borghese is almost always in debt to the gabelloto, who advances him food and seed-corn at extravagant interest, and to whom he is virtually a serf. If the season is good he barely pays his way; if it is bad he sinks hopelessly into debt. Baron Mendola, a Sicilian landlord and a shrewd observer, gives it as his deliberate opinion that the average Sicilian peasant cannot possibly make both ends meet. "Honest labor," he says, "seldom suffices for the maintenance of the family. Theft is obligatory." Except at seed-time and harvest these estates are deserted. The agricultural population is all collected in the villages, and the wide plain, with all its crops, which no police can pretend to watch over, is at the mercy of evil-doers. It is the sense of insecurity thus engendered, the knowledge that his crops may at any moment be burned and his cattle stolen, that drives the gabelloto, even were he well disposed, into the arms of the Maffia, the only protector that can secure him from daily risk of ruin.

And now look for a moment at one of the villages of this great Sicilian plain where Maffia is most at home. For mile after mile, hour after hour, the traveller has been jolted on a rough, ill-kept road, through a vast treeless plain. Here and there he has passed a rough, shaggy, borghese, painfully urging his team of ox and ass, and scraping the soil of his allotment with rude wooden plough; here and there a herd of cattle browsing among the withered weeds and stubble of last year's fallow, or a string of mules laden with sacks of produce for the distant market, but save these, up to the foot of the distant hills no sign of human life. The pitiless sun has burnt everything to an even brown. On the top of a small hill stands the village. Half-a-dozen large stone houses—half prison, half palace—built on the model of the great mansions of an Italian town, occupied by the gabelloti of the surrounding estates and the few families that form the ruling caste, domineer over the hundred or two miserable hovels where the rest of the population find shelter. Few of these huts have more than one room, hardly any more than a single story. In one corner of the unpaved earthen floor, reeking with ammoniacal odors, lies a heap of straw or a few sheepskins on which the human occupants sleep—father and mother, sons and daughters, pell-mell beside the brutes that share the house. A single opening serves for door, window, chimney, and for discharging dirt into the common dust-bin, the street, where the population squats or lounges among the piles of vegetable and animal refuse. Hardly a man is to be seen, for most of the able-bodied work in the fields, five or six, or eight miles off, and return home scarcely one night in the week. Notice the ill-fed bodies and the brutish faces of the women and children, the heritage of generations of immorality, from which traces of beauty dimly peer, deformed by squalor and vice; "the idiot head (dolicocephalia occipitale) predominates. Adultery, incest, uxoricide, usually by poison, prostitution, are terribly frequent, and wrought shamelessly in the light of day as though by cretins."

It would take the pen of a Swift to describe the lives of these Yahoos, and even the imagination of a Swift would halt behind the bare directness of official reports. One is not surprised to hear that a common threat among these people is: "Ti aiu a mangiari lu cori di tia mi uni aiu a biviri lu sangu—I'll eat your heart and drink your blood;" that a mother will often punish her child by biting it till the blood flows. Suddenly they all scuttle from the street into their dwellings as, with a clatter of hoofs and loud shouting, a gabelloto spurs up to his house followed by a score of attendants, each with a musket at saddle bow.

The gabelloto lives in the house, and rents the estate that belonged once to a feudal noble. Like his predecessor he holds himself above the law. "He is convinced that professional men and officials exist simply to serve as instruments for satisfying his daily wants and grudges, and looks on them as mere freedmen. His field-hands he hardly recognizes as human beings. He detests the present Government, though he condescends to act as grand-elector in order to keep up his political importance and his authority in his village; but he cannot understand why the police should trouble themselves to protect the lower orders from the violence of one of his caste." The chief men of his retinue are influential members of the Maffia, who have won the respect of their neighbors by the reputation at any rate of a couple of homicides. Their ostensible duty is to preserve his herds from cattle-thieves, his cornfields and barns from accidental or incendiary fires; they have usually been recommended or forced on him by the Maffia (unless, indeed, as is often the case, he is himself a recognized member of it), which thus provides easily-earned wages and plentiful opportunities of peculation for its members, and the mere prestige of their name and position will guard the property under their care more effectually than the untiring watchfulness of an honest man; while the proprietors rest satisfied that the Society will punish far more promptly and surely than the police, any attempt by outsiders to plunder the property which it protects. But another not less important part of their duties is to support their patron in all quarrels with his neighbors of his own class. These quarrels, originating often in old-standing family feuds, fought out openly in former times with sword and pistol, have now developed into no less bitter political rivalry. Two parties can no more live peaceably side by side than could Guelphs and Ghibellines in the Florentine republic. One must crush the other utterly, so as to be able to monopolize all the spoils of local office, and by the influence of the deputy which it elects, deter the Prefetto from looking too curiously into any little irregularities that may be committed under his jurisdiction. The struggle for the municipal purse is more ignoble and more injurious to public morals than even the family disputes of former days, and of them the Maffia, with its terrible power, is practically the arbiter. Willingly or unwillingly, the wealthy gabelloto must need support it with his influence, providing its members with employment and wages or pushing them into municipal office according to their wishes and qualifications, and winking at the harboring of stolen cattle among his herds. The penalty of resistance is theft, arson, and finally murder.

Before the gabelloto can market his crops, which have thus been watched from seed-time to harvest by the Maffia, he, like the smaller farmer of the coast line, must pass through another form of Maffia not less powerful that honeycombs the large coast towns, for nowhere is Maffia more developed than where misery is less pressing, and it reigns supreme in the concha d'oro of Palermo, where the lemon-groves yield a net profit of over £50 per acre, and every peasant proprietor might live in comfort or luxury. Here it organizes powerful "rings" in the produce markets, dictating prices, "boycotting" dealers to whom it objects, and exacting commissions on all sales concluded. The penalty of disobedience to its orders is death, and in the rare cases in which it is needful so to uphold its authority, an alibi is arranged beforehand so effectually that conviction or even suspicion is seldom possible. An example will sufficiently explain how things are done: Soon after harvest a man, ostensibly a produce-broker, will introduce himself to a farmer and say with all show of respect, "Sir, a customer has instructed me to buy such and such goods. I thought of you, and have come to propose the sale. In fact to prevent you from losing the market, I have ventured to close and take the earnest money." "At what price do I sell?" the owner asks mildly. "At such a price, sir." "But my good man, that's below the current rates," as indeed it is. "Oh no, you are mistaken; and any way, you would not have me break my word to my client for a few pounds. However, if you refuse —" But the seller knows far too well what the consequences would be, and in nine cases out of ten submits to be fleeced rather than incur the resentment of the honest broker and his friends.

Though, as has been said, the Maffia is not itself an organized secret society, yet not the less the Maffiosi in a given locality do occasionally join themselves to a closer union, with oaths of secrecy, code of laws, hierarchy of offices, common purse, and fixed right of admission.

UNCLE SAM TO ITALY.

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Keep down that Southern ire of thine,
Land of the ancient Roman,
And with thy choler rouse not up,
The spirit of my yeomen.
To-day in love of honest peace
My sixty millions labor;
Bring not the hands that hold the plough,
To grasp the gun and sabre.

My hospitable door stands wide,
For honesty to enter,
And all the varied tribes of men
Within my borders centre;
But who come here with midnight oaths
And murder's foul stiletto,
Shall hang upon my Northern oaks
Or on South-land palmetto.

I say not that the act was right
Or justified by reason;
My Southern child has moody ways
And justice out of season;
Much of thine own fierce Southern ire
Oft from her dark eye flashes,
And like a tigress on her prey
Are her indignant dashes.

But this I say, no murder court
Can here find jurisdiction,
Nor Irish, nor Italian clans
Serve notice of eviction;
The Saxon race is patient long,
But when to fury driven
Its judgments on the guilty fall;
As lightning falls from heaven.

FROM THE NEW YORK CHURCHES.

BY DR. E. P. THWING.

DR. CROSBY—THE PASSION PLAY.

The death of Dr. Howard Crosby yesterday cast a shadow of grief on many hearts. He was a sturdy soul, impetuous, assertive, courageous and independent, a vigorous polemic and an unflinching defendent of what he believed to be right. Though courteous and gentle in private life, there was no sign of muliebrity about him. At one time, when showing what he regarded as opposed to reason and Scripture and demoralizing to religion, namely the system of total abstinence, he exclaimed, "I have not sold my birthright. I add this for the benefit of those who think a clergyman is either a woman or a child." His attitude as to license and other matters alienated some good people, but every one gave him credit for genuine sincerity in the utterance of his views. His labors as Chancellor of New York University, professor at Rutgers, and author as well as pastor, will not be soon forgotten.

He was announced to preside to-day at the conference of Methodist, Reformed and Presbyterian Associations which met at the Collegiate Church, Fifth Av. and Twenty-ninth St. Drs. Van Dyke and Griffin's theme was "Christianity a Life, not a Creed;" Drs. Terry and McChesney, "Wealth a Stewardship, not a Possession;" Drs. C. L. Thompson and Martyn, "The Church our Force, not our Field;" the impromptu speeches following to be limited to three minutes. The meeting must have taken rather the form of a memorial service, for the fact of the death of him whom they had chosen to preside was an engrossing and a saddening one. The funeral service is to be held to-morrow, conducted by Drs. Hall and Taylor. The Eagle says this evening in, reference to Dr. Crosby, that he was the most conspicuous clergyman of this neighborhood. Other men, like Storrs and Talmage, are wider known in the pulpit, but Dr. Crosby was more engaged in political and reformatory matters. Many of us differed widely from him, but in him we saw "nothing of trimming, of eqivocation, of an inclination to suppress dawning conviction as impolitic of utterance. Nothing molds public opinion so quickly and firmly, whether in a small circle or a large one, as such an expression of personality, added to strong intelligence, learning and accomplishments. Dr. Crosby brought this influence to bear in all the outside activities in which he concerned himself in public affairs, in charitable and religious societies, in whatever organized work brought him into contact with masses of people. He exerted it within the professional lines of the church. He was a minister, able, studious, learned in theology and in human nature. Of course these powers were used with telling effect in promoting and teaching the old-fashioned religion to which he adhered. But stronger than any one of them, or than all of them, was the steadfast witness himself, the man back of everything. Such a personality makes safe a body of truth against the superficial smartness of all the smatterers of science and the noisiest chatter of the new rationalism."

We have had of late repeated lantern lectures on the Passion Play. There were musical as well as pictorial adjuncts. I saw the show two nights in succession, and the more repellant did the idea become of making the agony of Gethsemane and the anguish of the cross a theatrical display. The two lecturers were Sunday-school superintendents and extolled the artistic beauty of the acting. One of them said he had seen the great play actors of Europe and America, and Meyer was the best. This remark addressed to hundreds of Sunday-school pupils must have awakened curious reflections as to theatre-going, in its relations to Sabbath-school instruction. To make the awful mysteries of Divine grief the staple of theatrical criticism borders too closely on the blasphemous. Whatever the ignorant Bavarian wood-carvers may say or feel about it, the truly intelligent and devout Christian here must hesitate to countenance such a degradation of what is to be spiritually discerned, not after a carnal manner.

Having been absent nearly a year and traveled over 30,000 miles, going through the three great empires of heathenism, Japan, China and India, I have seen enough of this gross materialism in worship and its debasing effects. God is a spirit, and the kingdom of God comes not by observation (Greek, "something to be gazed at.)" Just this fondness for spectacular, cryptic, mystic things marks idolatry everywhere. As spirituality declines these elements grow. The mercenary influence of the Passion Play, already dreaded, and the secularizing of Sunday by thousands of visitors, professedly religious, are other evils of a different character which are fostered. The attitude of the church of Christ ought to be one of unqualified opposition.

Dr. Talmage's people announce grand concerts in their new Tabernacle next week, but there is much to be done before the organ is completed, and even the pews have not been put in. This edifice will be a most extensive and expensive one, and will have a huge mortgage to match.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., April 1, 1891.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church has just been presented with a handsome residence and commodious grounds in this city by Mr. Ephraim Nash and his wife, Jane Nash, which is to be known as "The Lucy Webb Hayes Memorial Deaconesses Home and Training School for Missionaries." This Home is to be the headquarters of the Deaconesses, a society that is making very rapid progress in the church, and as a training school to prepare young women for missionary work, and it will be opened just as soon as a few necessary changes in the arrangement of the house can be made. The property is valued at about $15,000, but is mortgaged for $5,000.

The series of meetings held here by the Anglican monk, Ignatius, closed Sunday evening. They were unsuccessful from a pecuniary point of view, as the money received was not sufficient to pay the expenses, and the attendants were very few until the admission fee was abolished. The monk appears to be very much in earnest, but our people failed to understand what benefit Christianity at large would receive by the establishment of a monastery in Wales or elsewhere, and for that reason they did not become interested enough to hear what he had to say.

Secretary Blaine, who has been confined to his home for two weeks, is again on duty at the State department, and the various negotiations for reciprocity treaties which were more or less interrupted by his absence from his office have been resumed.

What absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic will do to build up a town with a bad reputation has been most practically shown by the decided rise in the price of real estate in the section of Washington and its suburbs embraced in the mile limit from the Soldiers' Home property, since the enactment of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor within one mile of the grounds of the Soldiers' Home. For years a section of the city and suburbs that from its location should have been very desirable for residence purposes has been practically abandoned to low grog-shops and the vilest class of the city's population. Now under prohibition all this is to be changed and made a respectable and desirable place to live; and if I mistake not, those who advocate prohibition for the entire national capital will not be slow to take advantage of the object lesson in temperance furnished by this plain transformation, to show future Congresses how desirable and beneficial such a law would be.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond, the revivalist, inaugurated a week of daily children's meetings Monday at one church and a week of daily Bible reading prayer and praise meetings at another. These two daily meetings are in addition to the regular evening revival series he has been conducting for several weeks past, and which seem to continually grow in interest. He possesses a wonderful power over children, who never seem to tire of hearing him talk about Jesus. He exhibits to them a crown of thorns that he brought from Jerusalem and presents every child that attends a picture card on which is printed stories written by himself. *

"TIDINGS FROM THE EAST."

Willimantic, March 28, 1891.

The truth goes marching on to victory. The devoted workers in Boston have important allies in their Christian sisters in Providence, R. I. They are coming to the front. Some who saw only shadowy specters in the secret lodge, have recently had a clear vision of "what they do in the dark." I spent an hour with brethren and sisters in convention at Bristol on Thursday, exploring the Masonic cavern, and to some it was a revelation.

Sister Walker of Providence followed in a practical discourse on the duty and privilege of walking with God. She begun by saying, "My father was an advanced and zealous Mason. I have taken the degrees given to females. I have listened twice to Bro. Stoddard's lectures and received much light. I feel that the Lord wants me to make this confession and renunciation. When in health my father requested Masonic burial, but on his death-bed he said, 'I want only the church service at my funeral.' I have been in evangelistic work for years, and I have never known a minister devoted to the lodge who was helpful in revival work. Give me the pastor's lodge standing and I will give you the spiritual gauge of his church before he has been there very long," etc.

These remarks evoked hearty amens from the audience; and as sister W. is connected with State and National W. C. T. U. evangelistic work, she will doubtless give her testimony in many places.

Others from Providence said we have remained silent too long, but henceforth we shall be outspoken. One who remained to protract the meetings over Sabbath, said: "I have an uncle who is a minister and a Mason. I am going to see him and if he don't renounce his Masonry I shall never hear him preach again."

A man who had been "entered, passed and raised" received help, and will, I trust, be out and out before long. He, as was an Odd-fellow present, was willing to confirm the exposition, for which we praise the Lord, and pray that they may be fully emancipated.

Mrs. Stoddard has assisted me in preparing a chart, larger and more comprehensive than anything I have seen. I find it of service in many ways. Our company was on the boat between Bristol and Providence, where I found the chart useful. I said, "Brother M., I have something I want to show you." Hanging up the chart in the cabin I began to unravel its mysteries. It was not new to him, but an interested company listened, and some for the first time got a glimpse of the "three Ruffians" at their bloody work, and the "rough and rugged road between Babylon and Jerusalem." Some looked sullen and listened in silence, while a single man attempted a defence. As usual, he assailed Christianity and denounced the church. He declared that there was abundant evidence to prove that the historic person called Jesus Christ was a myth; that no such person ever lived; that he was simply the sun personified; that the twelve apostles were the twelve signs of the zodiac, etc.

I said, "My friend, you are a bright Mason, and have learned your lesson perfectly. That is just what I have been telling these people: Masonry rejects Christ and the Bible and makes its true disciples atheists, and you have been kind enough to confirm it." Others took him in hand and I went on with my work.

A lady passing stopped to inquire, "What have you there?"

I replied, "A chart showing fifty degrees in Masonry," and continued to explain.

"Are you a Mason?" she asked.

"No, madam, I am opposed to it."

"Praise the Lord!" was the hearty response, "I'm glad one man has the courage to fight that enemy of all righteousness. We are having a gracious revival in our city and I wish you could speak there to-night. Just as fast as the Masons get converted they leave their lodges. I want you to see some of our W. C. T. U. women on board. We are going to Providence to plan for temperance work." I did so, and soon two groups of Christians were merged in one, talking of the things of the kingdom, and making the old cabin ring with an occasional, "Roll the old chariot along," "We are out on the ocean sailing," and other inspiring songs.

In that brief hour were formed friendships purer and more abiding than ever came from grip, or token, or oath of Mason or Odd-fellow. I learned from the W. C. T. U. president that she had received copies of the National Home Guard; that she had been interested and helped in her work by it; that she was very hopeful of securing her husband's withdrawal from the lodge, etc. I distributed what literature I had and we parted on the wharf to meet again at the judgment seat of Christ.

MR. MOODY SPEAKS AGAIN AND AGAIN WITH THE COURAGE OF CONVICTION.

Boston, Mass., April. 1.—Crowds still wait on Mr. Moody's ministry with unabated interest and profit. He seems not to shun to declare the whole counsel of God, not having the ensnaring fear of man before his eyes. He has repeatedly spoken against secret societies, and last Sabbath morning he was more explicit than before. I was not present, but my informant was delighted and enthused by his words. He drew a contrast between the church and the lodge, and called attention to what each has done and is doing. With his accustomed accuracy and keen insight into practical questions he included the minor and the major lodges in their influence "under sin," and

THE MAFFIA NOT THE GREATEST SINNER.

New Orleans, La., March 28, 1891.

Dear Cynosure:—Your readers have read much of the outrage committed upon the Dago or Italian prisoners in the parish prison on Saturday, March 14, and no doubt some have been led to believe that the action of the New Orleans Regulators was justifiable. I have read in several Northern papers "editorials" commending the actions of these Regulators. Whatever may have led to the acquittal of the Italians, or however deplorable the verdict may have been, we cannot understand how any God-fearing or law-abiding citizen can endorse the actions of a mob of lawless men, who band themselves together, and without mercy or judgment tear from a prison eleven human beings, untried as well as the tried, and violently murder them. While we believe Chief of Police Hennessy's assassins ought to have been found and punished, as all law-breakers should be, yet we can but condemn the actions of the enraged Regulators. This kind of regulating is too popular in Louisiana; and though, fortunately, this time the Negro was not the sufferer as he always has been heretofore, still we believe that if our government will allow these blood-thirsty assassins to escape punishment, after such an open and unmasked defiance of the law, it will establish a precedent in New Orleans that will be followed by disastrous results. Such crimes, committed in the largest city of the South, and one of the five greatest cities in America, deserve universal condemnation. Let us suppose the eleven Italians were gulity, did that justify such a merciless onslaught of human beings? Is it possible that our New Orleans citizens doubted everybody as jurors (notwithstanding the jury that acquitted the Dagos were all white men), would it not have been more humane, more godly and more American, for the New Orleans citizens to have held a mass meeting and condemned the verdict of the jurors and then demanded a new trial?

While the very thought of the existence of a secret Maffia or Clan-na-Gael ought to bring terror to every American heart, yet can we expect to reap more than we sow? In this land of the free, where Masonry and other oath-bound secret orders abound, does it not seem equally just for the Maffia to have their place, too? Every American heart ought to petition to God through Jesus Christ to overthrow the secret empire. May God bless your work. Francis J. Davidson.

THE SABBATH.

No. 104 Milton Ave., Chicago.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—In this week's issue of the Cynosure (March 26) I have read with great interest an article on "The Christian Sabbath: On what day of the week is it?" and if you will kindly permit me, I would like to offer a few words of criticism. I would seek to do this, however, not in a spirit of controversy (because I am tired of that) but in an honest endeavor to know and abide by the truth, and in the language of the opening sentence of your article I would add, "Let the Word of God decide."

The first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, is honestly believed by the great majority of Christians to be the Sabbath day, from the erroneous assumption that our blessed Lord arose from the dead upon that day. But even if this were a fact (which it is not) that would be no warrant whatever for the change of the day of the Sabbath. The Sabbath is neither the Jewish Sabbath, nor the Christian Sabbath, as people often ignorantly refer to it, but it is God's Sabbath, authoritatively promulgated from the fire and smoke of Sinai; and God has never changed the day of his Sabbath any more than he has either of the other Commandments of the Decalogue. If such a change were made during apostolic times it surely would have been clearly so stated in the New Testament, but there is no intimation whatever, not even in the most remote degree, that such a change ever was made. But where is the Scripture to show that Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week? There is no such Scripture; but on the contrary it is expressly stated that he rose from the dead prior to the first day of the week or in the latter part of the Sabbath.

The opening part of your article invites attention to Matt. 28: 1–8, and now let us carefully read that Scripture and see what it really does teach. In the Revised Version it says, "Now late on the Sabbath day, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre." And in Darby's translation, which is reckoned to be one of the most critical translations extant, the reading is, "But late on Sabbath, as it was the dusk of the next day after the Sabbath, came Mary of Magdala and the other Mary to look at the tomb." Now then we have in this passage the very exact time given to us by the Holy Spirit when the two Marys, the first visitors to the tomb, appeared there. And when does the Evangelist say they came? The Authorized Version has it that it was "in the end of the Sabbath," and the two versions above given say that it was "late on the Sabbath." Then the time is located beyond any question or cavil when the two first visitors came to the sepulchre, and that time is stated with the accuracy of Divine inspiration to be "late on the Sabbath." But what is the precise time meant by "late on the Sabbath?" When did the Sabbath begin and when did it end? Or in other words, at what precise time would it be late on the Sabbath.

Almost every Bible reader knows that the Sabbath began about sun-down on Friday evening and ended about sun-down on Saturday evening. "From even unto even," says the Spirit of God, "shall ye celebrate my Sabbath," Lev. 23: 32. There can be no question whatever, then, but that the two Marys came to the sepulchre late on the Sabbath, or late on Saturday evening, and almost immediately prior to the time when the first day of the week was to begin. But when the two Marys arrived at the sepulchre late on Saturday, what did they find? Why, they most unquestionably found that Jesus had already risen—had already risen prior to their coming and during the latter hours of Saturday or the Sabbath. Now there can be no doubt or dispute whatever about this point; and how any person who even simply pretends to read, can make Sunday morning out of Saturday evening, has been to me a matter of astonishment for a long time. When the two Marys came to the sepulchre late on Saturday evening they found the stone rolled away from the door of the sepulchre and an angel sitting upon it. Now that Divine messenger knew what he was doing, what he did, and what he was talking about much better than any theologian of the present day does. And what did he say to those two women who came on Saturday evening to see the tomb? Did he say, "Come here and see where Jesus is still lying; but be not afraid for he is going to rise to-morrow morning." Was that his message? Was it simply his mission to earth to announce to the two Marys that Jesus would rise from the dead on the morrow—the first day of the week? No, blessed be God, that was neither his mission nor message, for even he was there for a far nobler purpose, and that was to proclaim the wonderful fact that Jesus had already risen, as he said to the women, "Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus which hath been crucified. He is not here, for he is risen even as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay," Matt. 28: 5. And let me again repeat that this wonderful announcement was made to the two women at the sepulchre, not in the opening hours of Sunday morning, but in the closing hours of Saturday evening; so that there can be no question as to the fact that Jesus rose from the dead, not on Sunday morning but about sun-down on Saturday evening.

But some one will doubtless ignorantly remark, "But does it not say 'as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week?'" Yes, it certainly does say that; and St. Luke uses precisely the same Greek expression when in Luke 23: 54 he says, "And that day was the preparation day and the Sabbath drew on." The expression "drew on" of Luke 23 is precisely the same as that of "began to dawn" of Matt. 28, so that the common phraseology of Matt. 28: 1 would assuredly be, "In the end of the Sabbath as it began to draw on towards the first day of the week." And Mr. John Darby, himself a strong stickler for the Lord's day as he called it, translates this passage so as to read, "But late on Sabbath (Saturday) as it was the dusk of the next day after the Sabbath." The Sabbath ended at dusk on Saturday evening and the first day of the week began at the same dusk, and it was precisely at that time that the two Marys came to the sepulchre, and at that time the Lord had already risen.

And now I shall rest my case here. I shall not refer to the rest of the article, for there is no necessity. No Bible student can read Matt. 28: 1–5 and not see at once that Jesus had risen before the women came on Saturday evening; and hence there is no warrant whatever for Sunday keeping except as an institution of Romanism and as a relic of pagan practice.

I have never said anything before on this subject through the Cynosure, but now if you will give these few hurried lines a place you will greatly oblige your sincere friend,

E. Ronayne.

THE CYNOSURE IN THE SOUTH.

We have made little effort this year to increase this important fund for supplying the pastors of colored churches with the Cynosure. But we have received so many letters of late from these brethren, showing their eager desire to read upon this subject, and to instruct and warn their people against the evils of secret societies, that we give a portion of them to our readers, hoping that they will stimulate larger gifts to this part of our work:

Your kind visit to my humble home was greeted with extreme gladness. Yes, I do wish to read you, and talk of you as I did at Texarkana, Ark., two years ago. My mouth is often opened against the demon, secret society, in all his forms; and I know whereof I speak. Would to God that every minister of the Gospel would not only read thee, but defend the cause you so nobly agitate.—J. R. Bennett, Hot Springs, Ark.

Your letter to hand to-day in regard to secret lodges. Yes, sir; not only will I preach against them, I do, and have been for four years. Please send me the paper. I want to read it and will have my school do so.—J. G. Harris, Mainsboro, Va.

Would like to have you continue my paper. Will do all I can for the cause you advocate, since I believe it to be true and right. Hoping success will be yours.—Levi H. Williams, Morgan City, La.

You may send the Cynosure to me if you wish. I am not prepared to express myself with reference to the merits or demerits of secret societies. I have not looked into the matter carefully. I am inclined to think that their growth and ill effects among the colored people are magnified. I shall carefully consider the subject, and if convinced they are working injury to the spiritual life of my people, shall thunder against them with all my power.—J. S. Jackson, Montgomery, Ala.

I will comply with your request about the Christian Cynosure. I am glad to have it come.—G. W. King, Shelby, N. C.

I fully endorse the sentiments expressed in the paper, and shall do all that lies in my power to advance the cause. I shall be very thankful for the paper, which I regard as the means of much profitable information. With many thanks for past issues.—E. Garden, Charleston, S. C.

A few days since I received a copy of the Christian Cynosure. I thank you for it. I want the paper and will do all I can against the organizations which it treats of. I am opposed to such.—J. G. Murray, Mooresville, N. C.

I desire very much to read your paper. I will some time during this summer, God being my helper, preach a sermon or two against secret lodges. I will also plant it in the minds of my students. If I had been a believer in secret lodges I would have been a member long ago, but I do not believe in lighting a candle and putting it under a bushel. Let your light shine, says the Scripture.—Geo. R. Carter, Jonesville, Va.

I will promise that I will do everything I can to break down all secret societies, for they work much evil among the people; and may God bless our efforts. Please continue to send the paper, and thanks for its visits.—B. L. Glenn, Riceborough, Ga.

I enjoy the visits of the paper very much. I shall be glad to do or say anything I can among my people against secret societies. I left the lodge myself several years ago, and since that time, in a silent way, my influence has been used against the lodge.—H. B. N. Brown, Alexandria, La.

I desire to read the Cynosure, and will do all in my power against secret societies, as I have always done. I know that they are a miserable curse to my people.—S. F. Went, Statesville, N. C.

I wish to read your paper. The object for which it has been established is good. I hope you will continue to send it to me. I will read it and hand it to others to read. I am a colored minister and teacher.—Geo. S. Leeper, Gastonia, N. C.

I received your paper, and was glad to have it in my home. I will do all in my power to destroy the devil's kingdom in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Send the paper on. God help it and the friend that sends it to us poor ministers.—J. Mitchell, Jackson, La.

I most gladly accept your paper, and find great pleasure in reading it, having reformed from all secret orders since I have read it, and do find much truth in it. I will continue reading and teaching what I read. Much interest has been taken in your paper by all of my family and school.—(Rev.) M. Lee, Slidell, La.

I have just received your letter containing some tracts on secret societies. I have been reading the Christian Cynosure for some time. I am delighted with it, and can truthfully say that I am heartily in sympathy with it in its effort to eradicate from among us one of the worst evils that could possibly befall a people. I am and always have been opposed to secret societies. I am sorry to say that secret societies are being multiplied in Danville, Va. In short, they are destroying the spiritual growth of our churches. I would to God that you could send some one who has the information and the moral courage to warn the people of this great danger. There are good and true Christians here, and all they want is information on the subject.—E. F. Eggleston, Danville, Va.
